THE GREAT HEREAFTER.

BY OTWAY CURRY.

'Tis sweet to think, when struggling
The goal of life to win,
That just beyond the shores of Hope
The better years begin.

When through the nameless ages
I cast my longing eyes,
Before me, like a homeless sea,
The Great Hereafter lies.

Along its blooming bosom
Perpetual summer smiles,
And gathers like a golden robe
Around the emerald isles.

There, in the blue, long distance,
By balmy breezes fanned,
I seem to see the flowering groves
Of the old Eenlah land;

And far beyond the islands,
That gem the waves serene,
The image of the cloudless shore
Of holy heaven is seen.

Unto the Great Hereafter—
A fearless thing and dark—
I freely vow and gladly give
Of life the wand'ring bark.

And to the far-off haven,
When shad wy seas are passed,
By angel hands its quivering sails
Shall all be furled at last.

Rambles.

BY REV. J. W. MALONE.

A few days after the adjournment of the North Atlanta District Conference, about which I wrote you, I had the pleasure of a visit to the Piedmont Chautauqua, which is only a few miles from this place, and a half an hour's run from Atlanta. This is the day of Chautauquas, and this section, full of men of push and enterprise, is not to be left behind. Inaugurated only a few months ago, the success of the enterprise here is something marvelous. But these stirring Atlantians and wide-awake Georgians, with Henry Grady in the lead, and the Constitution to back them, can do almost anything, and do it quickly. The grounds, a few weeks ago in native forests and old fields, are now simply beautiful, and the buildings are all completed, or nearly so, and occupied. Visitors are pouring in from all directions. The services of the very best ministers and teachers in the United States have been secured, and the Piedmont Chautauqua is now in full operation. When but a youth, less than a half-score years ago, I used to go to Salt Springs Camp Meeting. People came in large numbers in buggies and carriages from Atlanta and all the surrounding country, and a sufficient quantity of good free-stone water was found to supply all needs; but from a number of springs neither man nor beast would drink. From the taste of these waters the place was called Salt Springs. These springs have now turned out to be possessed of the finest mineral properties. Hotels, business houses and handsome residences have sprung up like magic, and the plain, poor farmers who owned the springs and the land around are now rich. Capitalists from Atlanta have invested a quarter of a million dollars in a handsome hotel and grounds. Convenient to this and the springs the Chautauqua is located. Besides these advantages the climate in North Georgia is the most salubrious and delightful of any in all the South. The Piedmont Chautauqua can but succeed.

The city of Berlin, Germany, with eleven hundred thousand inhabitants, has fewer churches than Atlanta, a place of not more than seventy-five thousand people. Brooklyn, N. Y., enjoys the distinction of being called the "City of Churches." This term might well be applied to Atlanta. No less than sixty churches "point their spires heavenward" from this proud little city nestled in here among "the red hills of Georgia." Nearly one-third of these are Methodists, with a church property valued at $250,000. The value of the property belonging to other communions I failed to get, but the Baptists and Presbyterians are both rich and prosperous. We preachers out in Mississippi think a charge with three or four hundred members a very heavy one. My own numbers 180, and it seems to me that it is about all I can do to look after them; but Drs. Morrison and Lee, pastors of the First and Second Methodist Churches in Atlanta, have no less than fourteen hundred members in each of their charges. But the work in these churches is largely done by laymen. Every available force is organized and put to work. The pastors of these large churches have learned from necessity to do what Bishop Galloway told the preachers of the Winona district last year: "Never to do anything that they could get anybody else to do." I have yet to meet more active and zealous men than those of First Church. There is a committee appointed to look after every conceivable interest. And these laymen not only do the work of their own church, but they have under their management mission work, which they have established in four different parts of the city. Each of these missions in a few years will be an independent and self-supporting congregation.

VILLA RICA, Georgia.

An Earnest Cry.

BY REV. J. M. WYATT.

Christian education is now receiving considerable attention by pen and mouth. There is no one feature in our church for which we should be more active, more liberal and more harmonious. Our preachers and laymen of Mississippi agree that we should do a vast deal more than we are doing in building up schools and educating our children. I am truly concerned about this matter. It does appear to me that the best plan is for our two Conferences in this State to judiciously locate and build up a first-class high school or college in the State. It is evident, with the history of education before us, and the facts existing in other parts, that there is no way at all to advance this momentous subject as to project, erect and patronize a good college in our midst for boys and young men. If our brethren who object to this course of meeting our moral obligation of advancing Christian education, had heard Bishop Galloway at the Winona District Conference, both privately and publicly, with judicious zeal, earnestly advocating the building of a college in our "own dear" State, they would urge objections no longer. We blushed with shame as he so magnetically forced upon us the obvious truth, that according to our ability and facilities, and the incentives encompassing us, that we Methodists of Mississippi are behind any other like-sized territory in our connection. I shall say, Amen! to anything that will help forward Centenary. But it has ample room in Louisiana and Southwest Mississippi. Our people are not sending to it; there is no indication that they will. I love the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., where I spent a time pleasantly and profitably. Emory College, McTyeire Institute and Vanderbilt University are doing excellent work; but, oh! how few boys and young men we are putting in these splendid halls of learning. It is clear to my mind that the quickest and safest way to build up district high schools is to lead off in a good, flourishing college. This would also largely increase the interest of female education among us. A wealthy, prosperous, intelligent, godly man in a community will not impoverish his neighbors; will not cause them, with their pursuits and enterprises, to wither and die. They will imitate their wise elder brother and sister. Some of our laymen are urging that we build a college in our growing commonwealth. One of the wisest men in the Church, South, says of us—the Methodist people of Mississippi—that it is a sin and a shame that we are doing so little for Christian education. May the Lord bless us all, and grant us great success in this very important work!

WINONA, Miss., July 20, 1888.

Aberdeen District Conference.

The nineteenth session of the Aberdeen District Conference, North Mississippi Conference, was held in Pontotoc, July 27-29, 1888. Every preacher in the district was present, together with a good average attendance of laymen. The Rev. Amos Kendall, the presiding elder, presided over the Conference, and discharged the duties of his office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all. He looked carefully into every interest pertaining to the church throughout the bounds of the district. Every member of the Conference, both clerical and lay, seemed to conspire together to make the occasion one of profit, and they succeeded. Questions put by the president and different members brought out many important facts, and resulted in profitable discussion. We had no wrangling, and no one was bored. The reports of the various committees were appropriate, and occasioned discussion. Especially was this so of the report on temperance on Saturday night, which was given wholly to the discussion of this subject in the presence of a large audience. The reports of the preachers indicated that the district was in a fine condition in every particular. The Sunday-school work was never more prosperous, and is still improving. Our own literature is used unanimously. There are but few union Sunday-schools in the district. There has been improvement in the circulation of church papers. The financial outlook is encouraging. The salary of preachers and presiding elder well up, and the collections ordered by the Annual Conference, it is believed, will be paid in full in most instances. The spiritual condition of the church in the district is good; congregations large in every charge. The district is on the upward tendency. A Ministerial Educational Aid Society was organized, and quite a nice little sum of money collected. The officers are: Rev. Amos Kendall, president; Capt. T. B. Sykes, secretary, and M. C. Shell, treasurer.

The Rev. G. W. Bachman, Dr. W. B. Murrah and Rev. T. J. Newell were present, looking after the interests represented by them, and added much to the occasion. The preaching was good. We had sermons by Revs. G. W. Bachman, Eugene Johnson, E. L. Spraggins, George S. Inge, G. H. Hodge, G. W. Gordon, W. B. Murrah and T. J. Newell.

The Sunday-school Conference for the district was held the day preceding the District Conference, and was a day of profit. Capt. T. B. Sykes presided, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Eugene Johnson, and was full of thought and religion. The Conference was never better entertained. The best arrangements for horses ever seen by this writer. The hospitality of the people was lavish, and the good pastor spared no pains in order to make all pleasant. The Conference will gladly return to Pontotoc at any time. The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: T. B. Sykes, J. M. Haley, R. C. Clark, and M. C. Shell.

The next session to be at Houston.

Among many other good resolutions passed by the Conference, the following was unanimously agreed upon:

Whereas, The time fixed for holding the North Mississippi Conference is so early that it will materially interfere with us in bringing up our finances; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Aberdeen District Conference, now in session, respectfully request Bishop J. C. Keener to change the time of holding said Conference from November 14 to December 12, 1888.

HESLEP R. TUCKER,
Secretary.

BUENA VISTA, Miss., Aug. 1, 1888.

Meridian District Conference.

The District Conference for Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, was held at Lauderdale, Miss., July 26, 27. No Bishop being present, Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, presiding elder, presided. The writer was elected secretary, and D. W. Heidelberg assistant. There were present twelve pastors, twelve delegates, and one local preacher, but no recording steward. Five charges had no laymen in attendance. The Conference, however, in numbers compared favorably with those of former years. Prominence was given to devotional exercises, and we had many seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The preaching was well received by the people, and was owned and blessed of God.

The outlook on the district is encouraging. The preachers present seemed to be in fine health. The presiding elder, whose health a few weeks back appeared to be failing, was apparently as strong and efficient as ever. Financially and spiritually, as a whole, the work is in good condition. A drouth in one place is counterbalanced by refreshing showers in another. Prohibition is receiving a large share of attention, and though the whiskyites have become very much alarmed lest the preachers soil their ministerial robes, and the churches be destroyed, they continue to cry aloud and spare not. The pending conflict in Lauderdale county necessitated the absence of our prohibition champion, Dr. Black. He is the whisky men's dreaded foe, and has done a work in East Mississippi that will have a telling effect for good in future generations.

Rev. P. A. Johnston, presiding elder of Brandon district and agent of Centenary College, also Rev. H. R. Caldwell, preacher in charge of Lake circuit, paid us a visit. Bro. Johnston made a strong speech in favor of endowing Centenary College, and raised five hundred dollars in endowment notes for that purpose.

Rev. R. M. Saunders, of the Virginia Conference, recently elected president of East Mississippi Female College, was present, and by his genial spirit, wise counsels and Christian character won us all to an increased interest in the success of that institution. While we shall sadly miss the familiar face of Bro. A. D. McVoy, we feel that he has a worthy successor.

The following were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference, viz: S. B. Watts, T. P. Bell, S. S. Cope, and W. W. Moore. Alternates: A. M. Moore and D. W. Heidelberg.

Vossburg was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

Thus closed a delightful and profitable reunion of the preachers and laymen of the Meridian district, made so, largely, by the unbounded hospitality of the people of Lauderdale, and the judicious arrangements of their beloved pastor, Rev. H. P. Lewis.

L. CARLEY, Sec.

Homer District Conference.

Homer District Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in the Methodist Church at Minden, July 25-29, inclusive, Rev. Robert Randle, P. E., in the chair. Every pastor in the district was present except Bro. Hocutt, of the Haynesville charge. He was kept away by sickness, and Rev. J. M. Davies, L. D., reported for him. Of the local deacons, local preachers and lay delegates, forty were present. Rev. G. A. Mandeville, of Farmersville, preached the opening sermon. Every interest of the church was well looked after by special committees appointed by the chair. The reports of the pastors and the various special committees showed improvement all along the line, the least improvement being in the cause of church extension. This interest evidently needs talking up in this district. The members of the Conference were prompt in attendance upon the business sessions, the spirit of brotherly love prevailing in all things. Sister J. A. Parker, of Ruston, secretary of the woman's and juvenile missions in the district, was present, earnestly engaged in her great work. Sister Parker is evidently the right women in the right place, and we look and pray for a great blessing upon her, and a grand, forward move in her work. The singing, praying and preaching was, in the main, good, the Spirit of the Master being manifestly present in all the services. I would speak especially of the love-feast and other services of the day on Sunday. Love feast at nine A. M., conducted by Rev. Robert Parvin. It was indeed a feast of love, so many partaking of the elements, and giving such strong and convincing proof of love for Jesus and the brethren. "It was good to be there." At 11 A. M., Rev. T. B. White, D. D., preached a Holy Ghost sermon from the text: "I have a message from God unto thee." (Judges iii, 20.) This service was followed by communion, in which service a great many engaged. Bro. Parvin conducted the children's meeting at four P. M., which service was amusing and, we hope, beneficial to the little folks. Rev. J. A. Parker, filled with the Spirit, preached at 8 P. M. from Matthew v, 1-16, inclusive. During the Conference four joined the church—three by profession of faith, and one by certificate.

A Chance Word.

Who can estimate the value of a chance word, in the sense in which there is such a thing as a chance? Upon the silence occasioned by the sudden stopping of a street-car there fell these words:

"So long as you can contribute to the pleasure, happiness or comfort of any human being, you are of importance in the world, and no longer."

Whatever may have been the object of these words, the thought reached the hearts of a dozen or more passengers, and it was interesting to note the changed expression on some listless faces. In utter unconsciousness of any effect of her words, the lady from whose lips they fell passed out into the street. Perhaps in the great day it may be her happiness to know that the Lord then used her tongue for a blessing to some heart which had as yet failed to comprehend the meaning of its life-struggle; for the truth she emphasized was a truth which all of us need to realize. Not our personal enjoyment, not yet our seeming success in life, but our part in God's plan for others, is the measure of our importance in the world.—Sunday-School Times.

The bread of life is given us, but we must take and eat it if it do us good; the fountain is opened for us, but we must go to it if we are cleansed.

Current Coins.

(Southern Churchman.)

Wonderful our nineteenth century civilization! We can go to England in a few days, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific without so much as getting out of our carriage. But neither these nor electric lights make man holy; they make him more comfortable, that is all. For as long as we are satisfied with only the outward forms of Christianity we are not one whit better than our heathen ancestors, who had not so much as a match, let alone a steamship. The heart of us nineteenth century folk is as much averse to piety as that of people who lived before Christ. Required to love God with all our heart and our neighbor as ourselves; always to prefer God's will to ours and sacrifice our delights to Christ if need be—men and women now no more like to do these than men and women of Cæsar's day.

(Raleigh Christian Advocate.)

Away on the vast plains of the West the prairie grass is sometimes set on fire. And when the wind is high, the conflagration spreads with awful rapidity. Within an hour the prairie becomes a vast plain of towering flame and sun-darkening smoke. No speed of flight can save the traveler from the fiery cyclone. There is for him only one possible refuge—that is, to set the grass afire around him and burn out a circle between him and the approaching wave of flame. This being done, he finds a refuge of safety in the burnt space around him. The rolling waves of fire coming to the burnt district, having nothing to feed on, dies out. He is safe because he stands where fire has done its consuming work.

In like manner the penitent sinner is safe in Jesus, because he stands where the fire of justice has done its worst. Jesus suffered in our place.

(Dr. James Hamilton.)

The temple itself is full of vacant worship. It resounds with rash vows and babbling voices. It is the house of God; but man has made it a nest of triflers, a fair of vanity, a den of thieves. Some come to sit as reckless and irreverent as if they were stepping into a neighbor's house. Some come to it, and feel as if they had laid the Most High under obligation, because they bring a sheaf of corn, a pair of pigeons, whilst they never listen to God's Word, nor strive after that obedience which is better than sacrifice. Some come and rattle over empty forms of devotion as if they would be heard because of their much speaking. And some in a fit of fervor utter vows which they forget to pay, and when reminded of their promise by the "angel" of the church, they protest that there must be some mistake; they repudiate the vow, and say it was an error.

The King's messenger, therefore, must heed the whole message of his Lord—the message of the written page and the message of the field and the wood. Mr. Lanier says that the novelist must be at once a scientist and a poet. It is not too much to say that the preacher ought to be at once scientist, poet, philosopher and teacher. Like Solomon, he should be an acute observer of the phenomena about him. Like Paul, he should be able to analyze the motives and activities of the human mind. Like David, he should have a soul in sympathy with both the world of nature and the world of men. Like the Lord Jesus, he should put all worlds under contribution for lessons of spiritual wisdom.

The times in which we live give emphasis to our reflections. The cultivated intellect of our day is largely concerned with the study of natural science. The world is out of doors with telescope and microscope, hammer and crucible. Let us take our Bibles and go, too.

(Watchman.)

Divine wisdom declares, "He that winneth souls is wise." In order to win, there must be something winning. There was much to be pondered in the remark of a little girl that she did not want to go to heaven if her unsocial and fretful grandfather, who was a preacher, would be there, because he would be forever scolding about the noise which the children might make. Heaven is in a measure judged by what is seen of the spirit and temper of those who profess to be going there. This fact imposes additional obligations upon all who would influence others in a heavenward direction, to be heavenly minded and heavenly acted. It is greatly to be regretted that some of the worst prejudices against the Christian religion are to be derived from the offensiveness of those who are regarded as the representatives of that religion, but who do not give due heed to the injunction of the apostle when he says: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

EXEMPLE.

BY JOHN KEBLE.

We scatter the seed with careless hand,
And dream we ne'er shall see them more:
But for a thousand years
Their fruit appears,
In weeds that mar the land,
Or in rank'ling sloth.

The deeds we do, the words we say,
Into the still air they seem to fleet,
We count them ever past;
But they shall last,
In the dread judgment they
And we shall meet.

I charge thee by the years gone by,
For the love's sake of the risen dead,
Keep thou the one true way,
In work and play,
Lest in that world thou cry
Of woe thou hear.

(Vincent and Holway's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

Sunday-School Lesson.—August 19.

THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

Leviticus xxiii, 33-44.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous.—Psa cxviii, 15.

TIME.—B. C. 1490 or B. C. 1210.

PLACE.—The plain of Er Rahah, at the foot of Sinai.

33, 34. The fifteenth day of this seventh month—The fifteenth of Tisri (October), five days after the Day of Atonement, the last appropriately preparing for the thanksgiving. The Hebrew months being lunar, the full moon would fall on the fifteenth. What the seventh day or Sabbath was, in reference to the week, the seventh month seems to have been in reference to the year. It closed not only the sacred cycle, but also the agricultural or working year. It also marked the change of seasons, the approach of rain and of the winter equinox, and determined alike the commencement and the close of a sabbatical year. Shall be the feast of tabernacles—One of the three great festivals at which every male Israelite was to present himself before Jehovah at the sanctuary. It was in its nature a joyous occasion, the most joyous of all the feasts, the one widely named, par excellence, "the feast." This last of the festivals was pre-eminently one of joyful festivity and of loud and high praises to the Lord, their great benefactor. The Jews have a saying, that "whoever has not seen the rejoicing of the last great day of the Feast of Tabernacles has never seen a day of joy in his life." For seven days—From the fifteenth to the twenty-first of Tisri. The feast proper lasted only seven days. Unto the Lord—The festival was strictly religious. Religion and festive rejoicing are not antagonistic.

35. The first day ... a holy convocation—The most probable conclusion is, that the days of holy convocation were occasions for sabbatical rest for the whole people, and that they owed their name to gatherings for religious edification, which, in later times, were probably held in every town and village in the Holy Land. These meetings might have been like those held in the synagogues, which were established after the captivity. There were in the course of the year, besides the weekly Sabbath, seven days of holy convocation—the first and last days of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, the first day of the Feast of Tabernacles, and the day following the feast, the Day of Pentecost, the Day of Atonement, and the Feast of Trumpets. Ye shall do no servile work—Literally, no work of labor, no work that belongs to one's worldly calling, such as labor in agriculture or handicraft. A license was permitted for the preparation of food, which is fully expressed in Exodus xii, 16. This license was not granted on the weekly Sabbath or on the Day of Atonement. On them it was not lawful to do work of any sort, not even to kindle a fire.

36. Seven days ... offer an offering made by fire—The burnt-offerings of the Feast of Tabernacles were by far more numerous than those of any other festival. There were offered on each day two rams, fourteen lambs, and a kid for a sin-offering. But what was most peculiar was the arrangement of the sacrifices of bullocks, in all amounting to seventy. Thirteen were offered on the first day, twelve on the second, eleven on the third, and so on, reducing the number by one each day till the seventh, when seven bullocks only were offered. On the eighth—Not strictly a part of the feast, but added, either as the solemn close of the whole cycle of yearly feasts" (Keil), or as the special thanksgiving day for the completed harvest. The offering on this day consisted of one bullock, one ram and seven lambs. A holy convocation—On the afternoon of the seventh day of the feast the people began to remove from the "booths." For at the octave, on the twenty-second of Tisri, they lived no longer in booths. But it was observed as "a holy convocation;" and the festive sacrifices, prescribed in Numbers xxix, 36-38, were offered, although no more by all the twenty-four courses of priests, and finally the "Hallel" sung at the drink-offering. A solemn assembly—Hebrew, a day of conclusion, because it was the end of the feast (John vii, 37); or of restraint, because they were restrained from servile work, and obliged to attendance upon God's worship; or of detention, because they were yet detained before the Lord, and kept together for his service, and not suffered to return to their tents till this was over. No servile work—This day had evidently all the characteristics of a Sabbath day; and yet, coming in as it does after the close of the last feast of the sacred year of Israel, it gives a hint of the Sabbath of the coming era, which shall no longer be the seventh, with a backward reference to the memories of the past, but the first day of the week, with a forward reference to the glories of an age whose sun arose, never more to set, on the morrow after the Sabbath which followed the last Passover of the old Covenant.

37. These are the feasts of the Lord—The "set feasts" or appointed times of annual observance were five: the Passover, the Day of Pentecost, the Feast of Trumpets, the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Tabernacles. Their observance took place in the parts of the year corresponding to our March, May and September. Divine wisdom was manifested in fixing them at those periods: in winter, when the days were short and the roads broken up, a long journey was impracticable; while in summer the harvest and vintage gave busy employment in the fields.

38. Beside the Sabbaths—God will not have any Sabbath sacrifice diminished because of the addition of others proper to any feast. And it is here to be noted that, though other festival days are sometimes called Sabbaths, as here (verse 39), yet these are here called "the Sabbaths of the Lord," in way of contradistinction to other days of rest, to show that this was more eminently such than other feast days, which also sufficiently appears from the Fourth Commandment. Beside your gifts—All the dedicatory offerings, which were presented to the Lord without being intended to be burned upon the altar; such, for example, as the dedicatory gifts of the tribe-princes (Numbers vii), the firstlings and tithes, and other so-called heave-offerings. Vows ... free-will offerings—Not only the votive and free-will slain or peace-offerings, but burnt-offerings also, and meat offerings, which were offered in consequence of a vow, or from spontaneous impulse.

39. Also ... fifteenth day—Nothing has been said in the previous verses of the dwelling in booths, as the object there was only to treat of it as an appointed time with its days of holy convocation. Here, however, this is introduced by itself, as a necessary direction, yet so as not to disturb the singleness of view in which the whole cycle of feasts has been presented. There is no occasion, therefore, to suppose that this is a distinct document subsequently added. As this precept has reference simply to the dwelling in booths, there is no repetition of the command for the holy convocations, or for the sacrifices. When ye have gathered in the fruit of the land—That is, the produce, including the grain, the olives, the vintage, and the fruits of all kinds. ... The original idea of the festival plainly appears to be expressed in the name applied to it in Exodus—"the Feast of the Ingathering"—the celebration of harvest-home, when the fruits of the earth were gathered in. It fell on a time of year when the hearts of the people would naturally be full of thankfulness, gladness, and expectancy. All the crops had been long stored, and now all fruits were also gathered, the vintage past, and the land only awaited the softening and refreshment of the "latter rain" to prepare it for a new crop. It was appropriate that, when the commencement of the harvest had been consecrated by offering the first ripe sheaf of barley, and the full ingathering of the corn by the two wave-loaves, there should now be a harvest feast of thankfulness and of gladness unto the Lord.

40, 41. Take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees—Though all the Hebrew festivals were occasions of joy, this was the most joyous of all, as marking the full deliverance from Egypt, the full possession of the land, the full fruition of harvest. The booths and the boughs which the people bore in their hands must have presented a brilliant spectacle by day, and the lights and singing at night testified to the happiness of the nation. Spiritually, this feast represented the full fruition of heaven, where we shall call to mind the wilderness life of the earth, where we shall celebrate the full ingathering of Christ's harvest, where we shall make a perfect dedication of all that we are and have, and where we shall rejoice with joy unspeakable. Palm trees ... boughs of thick trees ... willows of the brook—The rabbis ruled that the fruit of the "goodly trees" meant the ethrog, or citron, and the boughs of thick trees the myrtle, provided it had "not more berries than leaves." The citron must be without blemish or deficiency of any kind, the palm branches at least three hand-breadths high, and each branch fresh, entire, unpolluted, and not taken from any idolatrous grove. Every worshiper carried the citron in his left hand, and in his right hand the lulav, or palm, with myrtle and willow branch on either side of it, tied together. Seven days ... seventh month—Seven was a sacred number, and accordingly the sacred times are arranged in cycles of seven. There is first a cycle of seven days, ending with the Sabbath; then a cycle of seven weeks, closing with the Feast of Weeks; a cycle of seven months, culminating in the Month of Feasts; a cycle of seven years, closing with the Sabbatical Year; and a cycle of seven sevens of years, or seven weeks of years, followed by the Jubilee.

42. Shall dwell in booths seven days—These were to be the regular dwellings of all Israel during the week; and, except in heavy rain, they were to eat, sleep, pray, study—in short, entirely to live in them. The only exceptions were in favor of those absent on some pious duty, the sick and their attendants, women, slaves, and infants who were still depending on their mothers. All that are Israelites born—The omission of the foreigners in this command is remarkable. Perhaps the intention was that on this joyous occasion they were to be hospitably entertained as guests.

43, 44. That your generations may know, etc.—The nation was never to forget its nomadic life during the eventful years in which they passed out from under the rule of Egypt till, as conquerors of Canaan, they settled down in the goodly land. Their past trials and pilgrimage and the deliverances wrought by God were to be kept in perpetual remembrance. I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths—No evidence is adduced to show that the Israelites in the wilderness at any time lived otherwise than in tents, and, indeed, during a large part of their wanderings the construction of booths would have been impossible from the scarcity of trees. The reference to the booths (succoth) seems to be rather to the first encampments of the Exodus (compare Exodus xii, 37; xiii, 20), when they must have been as yet very imperfectly supplied with tents. I am the Lord your God—It was not so much the trials of the wilderness that the feast brought to view as the covenant care of God for his people amid these trials—the time when their "shoes" were "iron and brass," and when their strength was made equal to their day. That journeying in the wilderness had not been a season of affliction only. It had rather been one of triumph over affliction when the people were "persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." "God himself was in the midst of them. His tabernacle was in their camp. The pillar of cloud went before them by day, and the pillar of fire by night. The free air of the desert blew round them. Liberty, not bondage, was their portion. Their old enemies had been destroyed in the Red Sea; they had beheld them sink as "lead in the mighty waters." There was no time in all their history when the Almighty showed more clearly that his favor compassed them as a shield.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

God's gracious dealings with us, both as a nation and as individuals, should be held in grateful remembrance.

The joy which springs from a grateful heart is one in which the poorest may share—one which no man can take from us.

Offerings should accompany our thanksgiving. We should "honor the Lord with our substance, and with the first fruits of all our increase." (Proverbs iii, 9.)

"Servile work" belongs to this world only: it should be jealously excluded from those holy times which are given to us as a foretaste of heaven.

What happy occasions our Sundays would be if kept as true feast days unto the Lord—if we called the Sabbath, "a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable," and should "honor him, not doing our own ways, nor finding our own pleasure, nor speaking our own words," but delighting ourselves in thoughts of him, and communion with him.

From Our Mission Rooms.

BY SECRETARY I. G. JOHN.

Our correspondence from Brazil is full of encouragement. The revival spirit reported in the church at Piracicaba is extending over the whole mission. Rev. J. W. Tarboux, presiding elder of the Rio de Janeiro district, reports all departments of the work advancing. We give some extracts: "On our way to the District Conference we visited a fazueda (farm), and preached at night, celebrated the Lord's Supper, baptized three children, published the bans of four couples, and received seven candidates for church membership—a good night's work for this country." "As ye go, preach." Our missionaries are running on the apostolic line. They preach in the household, and baptize the converts by families.

Speaking of the Conference work, Bro. Tarboux says: "We were all encouraged and animated after a careful inquiry into the condition of the various fields occupied by us. Things are getting organized and settled on a firmer basis throughout the Conference. What is needed now is a supply of men, fresh and strong, to push the work at all points. We long for the coming of the Bishop with the relief party. We will have a jubilee when they do get here." The "relief party" will not be as large as our brethren desired, but it was all the Board could send and meet the calls coming from every field. When can we send all the re-enforcements needed? When each preacher shall make it a matter of conscience to raise every dollar of the assessments. The amount assessed will meet the most pressing demands of the work. To man the work as it should be done the collections should reach $500,000. Why not? Is one-half a million of dollars too heavy a draft on the liberality of one million Southern Methodists?

Again, Bro. Tarboux writes: "One of the most cheering features is the development of our native force. There are now three young preachers on trial in the Conference, and three more will apply for admission on trial this year. These young men are growing in piety, intelligence and fitness for the itinerant work. The two District Conferences this year were especially interesting because of the opportunity they gave us of getting the workers together, and discussing with them the various features of church work, and instructing them as to the best methods." The work is rooting itself in the native soil, and will yield a harvest of laborers, who in turn will gather in a harvest of souls.

Bro. J. W. Wolling, who shared the labors and triumphs of the revival in Piracicaba, says: "The ladies of the college did noble work, and a number of the girls came forward to make profession. These twenty make forty-five persons applying for membership in the Piracicaba Church this year. But in the Rio district we have a charge where over seventy have applied this year." The flame is spreading. Will the church at home pray that it may extend to every province in Brazil?

"There is now before the Imperial Assembly a bill to grant perfect religious liberty. If it is passed, the way will be greatly widened for us to go up and possess the land for the Lord." This item of news in Bro. Wolling's letter is of special importance at this time. Would it not be well if every Christian would pray that all barriers to the gospel in that land be broken down?

Eight Annual Report, Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society.

With praise and thanksgiving, with wonder and love, we record the progress of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference for the year just closed. The work has grown spiritually and numerically. Its vitality is stronger. It is knit into the hearts of preachers and people as never before. Number of adult auxiliaries, 30; juvenile and young people's societies, 12; total auxiliaries, 42; adult members, 821; juvenile, 454; total membership, 1,275; subscribers to Woman's Missionary Advocate, 163; life members, 6; scholarships, 1; increase over last year, auxiliaries, 17; members, 555.

The Woman's Missionary Advocate has completed a most successful year. Twelve thousand copies are now issued, and its financial condition is most satisfactory. When we consider how potent a means this paper is for enlightening and enlarging our views of the mission work—furnishing information and awakening personal interest in the several fields, enlisting workers and inspiring zeal—we wonder that every member does not constitute herself an agent. It is a necessity to our workers, and should be in every Methodist family in the Conference.

There is no force entrusted to our hands carrying so wide dissemination of good in any cause as that of the press. This fact was recognized, and the necessity met, in the wisdom of the Woman's Board of Missions by the publication of leaflets, which are distributed liberally and systematically, each bearing on its light wings the seed of truth and the germ of blessing. Of these, 5,200 have been furnished the auxiliaries during the year.

Mite-boxes are found to further the finances remarkably, serving also as a means of educating our juveniles in the grace of giving. Four hundred have been supplied to the societies for the last quarter.

Upon examination you will find that there are 16,315 members of the Methodist Church, South, in the Louisiana Conference. Of this number two-third are women, giving us 10,870 women alone. Of these, only 821 have responded to the call of God in these last days, as given in the Woman's Missionary Society. As another has said: "Ten thousand eight hundred and seventy women have been redeemed in the Louisiana Conference. Of these, only 821 have answered the call of the Lord and of the church to give the gospel to the women in heathen lands." Do we not recall the gentle, reproachful words of the Healer: "Were there not ten cleansed, and where are the nine?" I urge this question upon every woman in the Conference: My sister, are you one of the thankless nine? "The Lord turned, and looked upon Peter;" this was all—no word of reproach, no withdrawal of his long-suffering love. Do any of us now feel that sorrowful look piercing our hearts; knowing we have thus denied him, estimated so lightly our allegiance, and our privilege in sending abroad the blessings we still thanklessly take from his loving hands?

Our watchword for the past year—as sounded forth first from the heights of Omnipotence, hurled like a lance of light through the thick darkness of Egypt, and resounding still from the ramparts of our Zion—has been: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward"—the battle-cry which saved the chosen people from destruction, that insidious decadence which comes from tarrying by the flesh-pots of self-indulgence and sloth, being spoken again in tones of all-embracing love by our Lord, when he said, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations." These have formed the device on our banners, as chosen by our leaders for the year just closed. It behooves us to ask ourselves, Have we, as those in trust, kept these words in our hearts and wrought them into our deeds? We have all heard the story of the British soldier who was asked, "If Queen Victoria were to issue a proclamation and commit it to the hands of her army and navy, saying, 'Go ye into all the world and proclaim it to every creature,' how long do you think it would take to do it?" The brave fellow, accustomed to obey promptly and without question, replied: "Well, I think we could manage it in about eighteen months." It is humiliating to remember that the soldiers of Christ have held this commission nearly 1,900 years, and not one-half of the race has heard of the cleansing blood. This question of membership is a vital one. The indifference of the women to this tremendous responsibility which has been thrust upon them is cause for serious inquiry and anxiety. The increased demand upon us, the wide open doors of China and Japan and Brazil, not only invite, but demand our entrance. "Woe is unto us" if we enter not.

The large answers to prayer, visible in the results of the year just closed, fill us with joy and wonder. We had set apart seasons of prayer for the upraising of new missionaries. While we were yet speaking, the answer came—seven young women, "our best," offered themselves, and are already gone to the regions beyond. Shall we let these self-abnegating and devoted ones suffer or fail? The response must come in a mighty stirring of our hearts, and a united moving of our hands to strengthen and uplift them.

The call of the church in China is still, "More missionaries." Our women there are overtaxed. Brave Lochie Rankin sits alone in Kading to-day, the only white woman in that large and heathen city, facing a thousand dangers, while she steadily and successfully carries on her solitary work. She needs an assistant. Nearly every letter brings a pleading cry from one or another of the missionaries—"Send help: there is such a harvest for the gathering."

It needs not that we stand on the mountain peaks of faith to see the light of fulfilled prophecy breaking over the East. Five years ago there were five girls' schools in Yokohama and Tokio. To-day there are more than thirty, and all well patronized. One hundred thousand Shanars, a devil-worshiping tribe in India, have accepted Christianity. There has been an increase of nearly one million native communicants to all the Christian churches in heathen lands during the past year. "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him." It remains for each to decide for herself, Shall I enter into the joy of this harvest, or despairingly cry, "I knew thee that thou wert a hard man, and so I went and buried my talent in the earth"?

Is there no heart in the Louisiana Conference which will respond to these calls, "Here am I; send me?" Women of the church, you to whom they come authoritatively and personally, is not your love so warm, so eager toward him who gave himself for you, that you can do this? I know I am not asking an easy thing. I am asking that you count all things but loss, if need be, for the excellency of this crown. Is there no mother who will devote her darling? Is there no daughter who will give herself to this work?

May God so honor the Louisiana Conference as to call from out our borders some to be the bearers of this glorious gospel to their sisters who sit in the thrall of impenetrable ignorance and gloom!

From the Work.

NEWTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The third Quarterly Conference for this circuit came off at Decatur, July 14. Our presiding elder, Rev. P. A. Johnston, was present with much zeal for the Master's cause. He gave us a stirring speech on the subject of education, and in behalf of Centenary College. His efforts to awaken the people all over his district on the subject of education, and unent their patronizing our own institutions of learning, are not fruitless. Suffice to say, he is doing a good work on this (Brandon) district. Our church work on this circuit continues to advance, despite ambient disadvantages. The finances will very likely come up in full, if not in excess. Very few copies of the ADVOCATE are taken, and it is a difficult task to prevail upon our people to subscribe for it. We agitate the subject at each Church Conference and in private families; but, instead of success, we are met with the cry of straitness in money matters generally. After all, Mr. Editor, there are some who can and ought to take the ADVOCATE, that do not take it, and, therefore, we shall inclose their names to the publisher, to send each one a sample copy, hoping thereby to induce them to subscribe at once. The crop prospects are most flattering, though we are having a superabundance of rain just now. Pray for us.

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

CENTERVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This is a hilly, pine-woods country. There is no scarcity of beautiful streams, which afford abundance of water, of the best quality, for man and beast. While crossing and recrossing these beautiful streams, I think about the fountain of life that is flowing freely for those who love him.

This circuit is Centerville circuit. When the writer first arrived on the work he had a very discouraging account given him of the work. They almost universally declared that the circuit was dead. This, of course, had a tendency to discourage the young preacher. From the accounts that he had given him, and from external appearances, it seemed like it was useless to attempt to redeem the circuit. For all this, the Lord put it into the hearts of some to encourage the young man. There was an old backslidden Methodist that encouraged him a great deal. He says: "My son, whatever you do, don't quit your work, for it will injure you spiritually. Go ahead, my son, and the Lord will bless you, and you will come out all right." The young preacher resolved that he would go ahead and trust in the Lord. I am glad to report that the work is building up. Since Conference we have had several conversions, and about fifteen or sixteen accessions to the church. We are expecting the Lord to do greater things than these before this year closes. We are holding a meeting now. Pray for us, that we may have a glorious revival.

WILSON MOORE, P. C.

SHILOH CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my second meeting on Shiloh circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, both of which resulted gloriously. The first was held at Salem, which resulted in a glorious revival in the church, and seven accessions. The second was held at Clear Creek, where they have just built a nice new church-house, and we had a regular Pentecost; the church wonderfully revived, and nine accessions, making in the two meetings sixteen accessions, and that number added to eighteen received before, making thirty-four to date, with five more protracted meetings to hold, and my camp meeting; so we are hoping and praying for grand results. Pray for us. I think that Shiloh circuit is moving up, and I am rejoicing at the degree of success that has crowned my labors.

I was assisted by Bros. Clark, Foreman, Robinson and Kendall, local preachers, and had one sermon from Bro. R. A. Sibley, of the Marvin circuit, in the above meeting. They all did efficient work, for which I am under many obligations.

A. D. MILLER.

LOVE'S LAKE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me space in your valuable paper to say a word for this part of the moral vineyard? The people of this country are wide awake and God-fearing and God-loving people. We have a fine Sunday-school at this place, and our teachers are very devoted and kind. On July 4 the good people gave our Sunday-school a nice barbecue. We have a good prayer meeting going on at our church every Wednesday night, and the good people of this community take a great interest in it. Our pastor is Bro. Williams. He is doing a good work, and we all like him, and we pray that God's Holy Spirit may ever be with him, and enable him to go on with his good work.

Endowments for Education.

BY BISHOP HENRY W. WARREN.

A QUAINT TALKER.

While the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church was sitting in New York, in 1814, a venerable and quaint-looking old man, with his broad-brimmed, round-crowned hat in his hand, walked calmly up the aisle toward the president's seat, bowing as he came up, and said, "Mr. President, I want to talk." Nobody knew him, and the president asked, "Are you a member of this body, sir?" "No, sir," was the reply, "but I want to talk." The president reminded him that none but members had a right to speak, when an aged minister, who had just come in, recognized him, and said, "I move that the Rev. Elias Van Benschooten have leave to talk." It was carried, and then the old patriarch went up to the president's table, drew from his pocket a large roll of bank-bills, and counted them—$800. Then he took another package of obligations, amounting to $13,840, and counted this out, and in a few well-chosen words donated them to the astonished synod, and asked a committee of reference to arrange the conditions. Subsequently by will he added other sums, the whole being allowed to accumulate until it reached $20,000. Such was the history of this endowment, which was, so far as is known, the first one made in our country, and certainly the first made in the Reformed Church, for theological education. Not a dollar of it has been lost. The interest has educated more than one hundred and twenty-five young men for the ministry, some of whom have been among the most eminent and useful in the service of the church at home and in foreign lands. "And by it he, being dead, yet speaketh," by many voices, in many lands, through many ages. He built wisely.

INTO WHAT SHALL WE BUILD OUR LIVES?

Into pure personal character, of course, for that endures, is ours forever. "Now abideth faith, hope, charity." And he who goes through this life and out into the boundless possibilities of the next acquiring an enlarging faith, brightening hope and blissful love, is everlastingly rich.

WHAT ARE OUR IDEALS?

We have those that we love—national, denominational, Christian; men by the millions have laid down their lives for them; they are dearer to us than life. How can we make them spread and survive?

When victorious Titus had ravaged Jerusalem, and pricked with spear-points all the inhabitants of the beautiful city into exile and slavery, he left behind only a million corpses and salt-sown ruins. He thought it was an end of the hated nation. But before he left the shores of Joppa a rabbi obtained permission to gather a few boys out of the desolation and teach them the law. Law and theology were synonymous then, and now. Ah, victorious Titus, you made a concession fatal to Roman supremacy! Ah, down-trodden rabbi, you gained a point vital to your race's continuance! That school was the cause of the recovery of the amazing vitality and persistence of his people. It built law, national feeling, consciousness of being a peculiar people, into mind. That abides. Whatever ideal we have for personal excellence, family, liberty, nation and race must be built into mind. Isaac Rich, of Boston, having no children, put the outcome of his life into the Boston University. Now the children of his mind number nearly 1,000 every year, all being carefully trained in the best knowledge, patriotism and religion.

THE PROCERTY IS KEPT FOREVER.

It works out one's own plans, perpetuates his ideas, builds his theories into character, and by God's system of book-keeping is related to the contriver always. The product of that mind-factory by spiritual commerce passes, not to other continents, but to other worlds. The manager of wide commerce here stands on celestial shores and "sees his sunny ship blown softly home," not laden with spices, ivory, jute and various woods, but with character, nobleness and Christliness. What priceless products will be turned out in a thousand years! He who remembers the giving of a cup of cold water will not forget the founder of a new colony and the builder of another empire of virtuous minds.

SUCH PROPERTY IS CUMULATIVE.

Property is apt to be dissipated after the death of the gatherer. Relatives who receive by the thousand are not apt to be as careful as he who toilfully earned by the dollar. But a good school has an attractive power. Parents see the good done to their children, and want to help others. One son I knew had his tuition given him by a free scholarship, when neither he nor his father could pay it. Soon after the father was able to buy in the same college a scholarship that gave free tuition to one pupil perpetually. Already eight young men have received its benefit. Eight for one, and more to follow; always more to follow! Two millions of dollars flowed to a single college in New Jersey during the presidency of a single man.

A PERSONAL JOY.

Men who make these endowments are glad of it. A man put $25,000 into a theological school, and liked it so well that within five years he put in $200,000 more, and felt like a king and creator all the time. It is a more precious work to him than a steam yacht or stud of fast horses, into which some men put so much money. Life grows larger, and reaches into the distant centuries and eternities.

A single woman, winning her bread at the point of her needle, could not found a college; so she made a school of her little room, went to the orphan asylum, and adopted a little boy. She gave him an education, and saw him occupy the foremost pulpit of the land from the Atlantic to the Pacific. How gloriously her own life summed itself, blossomed and bore fruit meanwhile!

TRAINED MEN ARE NEEDED.

We never can have too many strong men; we always have too few. God never takes a weary workman home for coronation but we anxiously ask, Who can take his place? Eight hundred new churches a year, new colleges, enlarging business at home, and the world's conversion at home and the world's conversion abroad call for more men. We already have more colleges and more money in them than any other denomination; but our demands are so many that we have not half enough.

WHAT CAN I DO?

Perhaps no great things, certainly not all one wishes; but we can choose some really great plan, and work to it as the years go by. Perhaps the remaining years are not very many, and God says, "Do quickly." I have to-day talked with the confidential adviser of a man who planned to put ten millions into public benefactions. He died before it was done, and his heirs do not care to do it. Heirs are often made listless by expectation and harmed by inheritance.

Be just to children and all dependent on you rather than on themselves, and then be generous to others of God's children. In all things consult God, and hear him say, here and hereafter, "Well done!"—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

To the Bishops, Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church, South.

Dear Fathers and Brethren:

It becomes my duty to lay before you the plans of the Board of Education for the Colored M. E. Church in America, and to let you know the demand for means to carry forward the work with which the church has charged them.

The church is to be congratulated upon the fact that the debt on Paine Institute is paid off, and thereby it comes in possession of property valued at $15,000; besides we secure the Rev. Moses U. Payne endowment fund of $25,000. Here is a token of divine favor and an earnest of ultimate success. But this is not the goal of our labors or the haven at which we aim. It is but a means thereto. It is the first station on this great thoroughfare of Christian enterprise. Here we stop only long enough to take in wood and water, and then the car is off, bearing its precious cargo onward to the great depot of final delivery—eternity.

The Board has greatly desired to broaden its field of operation, so as to make other portions of the Colored Church the beneficiaries of its labors; but until the debt on Paine Institute was paid off it could do nothing beyond. Now the way seems open. Accordingly, at the request of the Board of Trustees of the Lane Institute, located at Jackson, Tenn., and by a unanimous resolution of the College of Bishops of the Colored Church, indorsing the same, the General Board has agreed to ask our Bishops to appoint a minister of our church to take charge of that institution, and also to have charge of the theological department. This necessarily involves a pledge for his support. We can no more appoint one of our brethren to such a post of duty as this without caring for his support than we can appoint a man to Africa without providing for him. To sum up, then, according to the estimate of the Board, to sustain our work as it now stands, and keep a commissioner in the field, it will require $5,000. This amount, with a small margin, we have apportioned among the Conferences (except the Foreign and Domestic Mission Conferences) upon the basis of the assessment for foreign missions. We do not claim the right to assess the church, and yet every intelligent, right-thinking person will see that the Board must make an estimate of the cost of its work, and adopt some systematic plan for its collection. I append these apportionments to this paper for information. I propose to address a communication to each Conference, with a request that they accept these amounts and provide for their collection. Besides this amount, we must seek by personal appeals to secure funds to provide additional buildings to meet the necessities of our work. The Paine Institute must have a chapel, and additional boarding facilities for at least one hundred boarding pupils. The Lane Institute must have a boarding department provided altogether. These two institutions—one in the East and the other in the West—must meet the demands of the Colored Church as training-schools for the present. Will not the whole church help us in this delicate, but all-important work? If we could realize on our unpaid subscriptions, they would go a long way toward erecting the buildings so much needed at the Paine.

We are just now in a peculiarly embarrassed condition, or, at least, we are likely to be, if the church does not come to our help. To pay off the debt we have allowed salaries to go unpaid; and now the indications are that our brethren may forget that we and our families must live. Brethren, please don't forget us. We are your servants in this work, and must look to you for a living. Remit all moneys to either C. G. Goodrich, Augusta, Ga., or to me at Covington, Ga.

Your brother in Christ,

W. C. DUNLAP,
Commissioner of Education.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Briefs.

Last Sunday the editor had the privilege of dedicating our new church in Donaldsonville, La. Bro. Wimberly, our pastor there, has built wisely and well upon the foundation laid by his predecessor. The new church is one of the prettiest we have seen, and the cheapest. It is well furnished with walnut chairs. The aisles and pulpit are handsomely carpeted. The congregation has grown largely during the year, there being now a membership of over forty—stanch men and elect ladies. At the close of the service the house was dedicated, free of debt, to the worship of God.

Dr. W. B. Platt, of England, contributes to the Popular Science Monthly, for August, a very interesting and instructive paper, on the "Injurious Influences of City Life." These influences, he believes, "lead, sooner or later, to degeneration of the individual and his offspring by producing progressive feebleness, and to ultimate extinction of such families as are long subjected to their force." Among these influences he names three, which he thinks specially harmful: 1. Disuse of the upper extremities for any considerable muscular exertion. Arm exercise is considered as having a most important bearing on the general health. 2. The incessant noise of a large city. Noise is an irritant to the nerve centers, and produces an opacity of the crystalline lens of the eye. 3. Jarring of the brain and spinal cord by continual treading upon stone and brick pavements. In walking, the jar of the fall of the whole weight of the body comes entirely upon the heel. These influences working together with other causes produce nervous exhaustion. He makes the statement that there are few families now living in London who, with their predecessors, have resided there continually for three generations!

According to the Independent, the gains of Christianity in the United States for the year just past are 6,434 churches, 4,505 ministers and 774,861 members. The largest gains have been in the Baptist denomination; the Methodists come next, and then the Lutherans, the Presbyterians and the Episcopalians. The membership increased in the Baptist Churches 244,478; in the Methodist, 166,871; in the Lutheran, 56,770; in the Presbyterian, 54,249, and in the Episcopal, 20,254. The number of Baptist ministers increased 3,100; Methodist, 820; Lutheran, 225; Presbyterian, 156; Episcopal, 66. The whole number of communicants last year was 19,015,462. The number this year is 19,790,323. That don't seem to us to be much advance. Given May, 1887, 89,952 ministers, with 132,451 church edifices and 19,915,462 church members with which to prosecute church work, and the result May, 1888, in a gain of 6,434 church edifices and 4,505 ministers and 774,861 members seems to us to be very small. The church is evidently not handling her forces to the best advantage. Nineteen millions of people, with God's infinite resources in reach, ought surely to be the means of transferring more than seven hundred thousand people from the world to the church.

Hopes—Delusive and Real.

The hopes of this world, how deceptive, how delusive they are! They picture the future in radiant hues, but the shadows of disappointment creep over the bright scene, and the hopes are lost in the darkness of despair. The invalid looks out through his chamber at the calm hour of eve, and beholds the sun sinking to rest in his couch of purple and gold, and listens to Nature's vespers in praise of providential care as she reposes trustingly in the arms of Almighty Goodness; and he hopes to see the morning when the same Nature shall awake with a smile from her delightful slumber and send up a anthem in praise of God's love! But, alas! the morning sun rises upon a house in which there is a felt stillness, the curtains droop mournfully to shut out his glad beams, the inmates move about with muffled tread, the finger is on the boisterous lip, the haze of sorrow dims loving eyes, the agony of bereavement chokes the utterance, for the invalid lies upon his bed, covered with the shroud of death—his earthly hopes all gone out in that darkness! Who can picture the bright hopes of a fond mother's heart when, after years of care and prayer and sleepless nights and anxious days, she looks through eyes of love upon a noble boy, whose young life is running over with promises of usefulness and honor? Who can conceive the crushing anguish of that mother's soul when, with eyes blinded by tears and heart staggering under the heavy blow of bereavement, she listens to the mournful words uttered over that manly form, "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust"? How cruelly deceptive are the hopes of this life! Based upon the desire of the mind; when the desire is unaccomplished, hopes have faded to nothingness.

The hopes of religion are true. They change, but with every change the prospect broadens and brightens. They assume new attitudes and present new positions, but every such change enlarges the view and gives the soul more ravishing sights of the beauty and bliss beyond the bourne of time. The hopes of religion are the loving messengers Heaven sends out to accompany the weary pilgrim and cheer him on his journey to the fatherland. They light up his pathway, encourage his fainting heart, freshen his faltering courage, and exhilarate his drooping spirits. The Christian is a "prisoner of hope." And what a prison it is! Paul and Silas in the Roman dungeon, with their feet fast in the stocks, were made to rejoice in hope of the vision of God. The Christian's hope is anchored to the Rock of Ages, and holds him securely through all the surgings of life's tempestuous ocean. And when life has ended, the hope has grown to full fruition in the paradise of God. The reason for the reality and steadfastness of the Christian's hope is found in the simple fact that it is based upon the Word of the Lord—"and the Word of the Lord endureth forever." Paul begins his epistle to Titus with a reference to the steadfastness of his hope—"In hope of eternal life, which God, that can not lie, promised before the world began." In the letter to the Colossians he refers to it as "the hope which is laid up for you in heaven." Sustained by such teachings, the Christian joyfully sings—

"In hope of that immortal crown
I now the cross sustain;
And gladly wander up and down,
And smile at toil and pain."

A very interesting farewell service was held in Brookhaven, Miss., third instant, on the occasion of the departure of Miss Mary McClellan for her work in China. Miss McClellan goes out with Dr. Allen, and the good wishes and prayers of the editor and readers of the ADVOCATE go with her.

Rev. Horace D. Kimball.

With great distress we chronicle the death of the gifted and useful pastor of Moreau Street Church, in this city, whose name stands at the head of this column. He passed away on Wednesday, the first instant, after an illness of eleven days—an illness superinduced by excessive labors and cares, together with a never-lifting sorrow for the loss of a mother, who recently preceded him to heaven.

He was of a very sympathetic, emotional temperament, and responded promptly to the sorrows and burdens of others, whether domestic or spiritual. This was largely the explanation of his tireless zeal and popularity as a pastor. He knew the circumstances of every member and household of his congregation, and entered into the cares and fears of his people as if they were his own. In his pulpit offices he was laborious. That he was able to minister acceptably four years consecutively to a city congregation, without previous experience and without more capital than he created from week to week, is sufficient proof of his careful pulpit preparation.

He was in constant demand in his own and contiguous Conferences for protracted and camp meeting occasions. That he should so frequently respond to these calls was deplored by his own people as possibly an overestimate of his physical strength. He never seemed conscious of his limited endurance, or his right to judge of the propriety or justice of these outside exactions. In the out-door services in this city he was ever ready upon call, and was ever listened to with pleasure and profit. Specially was he indefatigable in the mission work of his own charge, and has left, as a monument of his industry and organizing power, one of the most successful mission schools in this city. He had such an ambition as every good man ought to have—an ambition to succeed for the Master's glory, for the welfare of his fellows. He was singularly free from selfishness.

Combined with great emotional susceptibility, which dominated all his speech and conduct, there was a personal purity, self-forgetfulness, magnanimity, earnestness and concentration of purpose that made him magnetic. You felt on listening to him that he was both good and strong, and that it was both right and wise to yield to his persuasions.

He was but twenty-seven years of age, and had been a traveling preacher four years with only one appointment; and yet his life was full of rich results.

The completion of his college course in midst of great difficulties excited a just parental pride, and taught the boys of North Louisiana a lesson of toil and noble purpose, both largely and profitably read. His Conference associates will emulate his ingenuous and earnest career. His congregation remember with tearful gratitude, and will doubtless profit by, his example of devotion and self-sacrifice. A large number of faithful Christians in other places, converted under his ministry, raise an Ebenezer where they heard him preach. A mission chapel, inaugurated by his labors, will doubtless be completed and monumentalize his pastorate in this city.

He organized a home circle where a loving wife and children will treasure the memory of his loving and pure life, and will devote themselves to the purposes he cherished. He leaves his wife and two children a legacy to the Louisiana Conference. They will find comfort in the memory of his self-denying life, and his translation to a sphere where he is as free as a bird and with as little care.

New Colleges, or Support for the Old Ones?

BY REV. T. J. NEWELL.

It is to every lover of the South a cause of profound gratitude and great rejoicing that her natural resources, so long hid and neglected, are being found and developed. And thrice happy indeed is every true son and daughter of this Southland as he sees her institutions of learning, so long hindered by the blight of war, warming into new life under the genial rays of the sun of a new prosperity. Not only are those colleges founded in ante-bellum times beginning to have a better pulse, but new ones are begotten by the life and spirit of this time. This life, Doctor, has touched Mississippi, and some are beginning to ask what part are Mississippi Methodists going to take in this great movement born of necessity. The Methodists have no high school nor college in our State for the education of boys. What shall they do? Shall they send their boys out of the State and have them educated at Methodist schools already equipped, or shall they have such schools and colleges as can do the work within our own State? A few facts will aid us in coming to some conclusion:

(1) Methodism is a unit that can not be partitioned by State, or even Conference lines; and that which seems to be a growth or improvement can only rightly be adjudged when the whole is considered. Even temporary progress at one point may prove to be permanent death at another, and thus the whole body be weakened.

(2) That distance has largely been overcome—men and mail no longer travel by the slow and tedious stage route, but steam and electricity have almost annihilated space, and brought our furtherest schools and colleges and put them at our doors. Men have been known to go 500 miles to camp meeting, and to return home unhurt. How near should a school be that it may secure patronage?

(3) Schools and colleges to be built and being built will be no more easily sustained and made successful than those already built and equipped. Fine buildings, splendid equipage and great endowments are seeming necessities, but one and all of them are useless and become a reproach if our sons are not put within their reach. The Vanderbilt, with its colossal buildings and liberal endowment; Emory and Henry, with its inimitable location, excellent buildings, extensive libraries, beautiful lawns; and Centenary, with all its boasted beauty and long line of illustrious alumni, may yet stand as the molded monuments of a mistaken policy. Our boys must be found, inspired, encouraged and directed to these institutions; and this work is largely to be done by the preachers, whether the institution be in Louisiana, Virginia or Mississippi.

(4) Is it true that our sons are not provided for? Are all of our male colleges full? Have these school-men all they can manage? Are they unfitted for the places they hold? Do they charge too much for their work? President Hunnicutt, let us hear from you. Answer these questions. Do not be afraid of detail; tell the whole truth. We Mississippians propose to do something. And here the new president of Emory and Henry, Dr. R. W. Jones, late of Columbus, Miss., might speak, and also Dr. A. S. Andrews, and also Dr. Garland. Are our sons provided for?

Mississippi Methodists must act. Let them act wisely. We can do one of two things: Establish a college in Mississippi and educate our sons at home, or we can send them out of the State to Methodist colleges already established and anxious to have them. The former we can do. I have letters assuring me that it can be done. One layman says, "I will give $10,000." Another says, "There is an hundred thousand dollars in Mississippi ready to be laid on the altar of Christian education for the Methodist sons of Mississippi." A minister says, "I will vouch for the raising of $5,000." The latter we must do. There are more than 70,000 Methodists in Mississippi, and one boy from every 500 would give us 140 boys. They can not wait until a college is built in our own State. They must be educated. They should be in the halls of Methodist colleges this fall. Let the sons of Centenary see to it that Dr. Hunnicutt be made glad by their kindly aid, and let the sons of Emory and Henry and the daughters of Industrial Institute and College see to it that Dr. Jones be made to feel that he is not forgotten. I would exhort for Dr. Garland and Dr. Andrews, but I must close.

Shall Our Education Be Christian?

BY PRESIDENT HUNNICUTT.

The times in which we live demand that the church shall not only ask this question afresh, but answer it with emphasis and with action. Education is of many kinds, and thoughtful people hold different views as to what kind is best. The man who regards only this world thinks education should merely lead out, develop and strengthen our natural powers, while he who views this world as only preparatory for another believes that capacities are to be enlarged and powers to be strengthened only that they may be filled with vital truths and guided by a wisdom higher than human. This distinction is fundamental. The object of education should determine its character. To rear an intellectual animal is one thing; to train a man to be a worthy co-worker with God is another thing. But even for this world the development theory fails. Think of developing a man into a physician, or a lawyer, or a soldier. The mind must be supplied with facts from without to answer the ends of this life, and the earthen vessel must be filled with heavenly truths that the man may adjust himself to the claims of the world to come. Hence arises the necessity for the religious element in education. There must be incorporated with the methods and matter of all proper education those moral forces which shall work against the primal curse and help to exorcise the devil that strives to get the better of us all. Any education which ignores the fallen condition of our race and the divinely prescribed remedy for universal depravity can never be the education for Christians—certainly not for Methodists. We must have Christian education or none. The State educates for this world; the church, for this world and that which is to come.

The church can never afford to abdicate or transfer to another her maternal office as an educator. She is bound by every consideration of duty and interest to educate her children. To this policy reason and religion alike impel us; to the discharge of this duty our Discipline and our consciousness alike constrain us. The church can never afford to entrust her children willingly to the foster-care of the State, that by its very constitution is forbidden to favor any form of religion, and, of course, can not teach any. State institutions are gagged and hampered in the matter of teaching religion. They are not constituted for that purpose.

The matter of cheapness is made a prime consideration with many in selecting a school. Herein many, too, are deluded. For in those institutions where tuition is free the sum of the necessary expenses is often found to be greater than in those where full tuition is charged. Besides, most things cost about what they are worth, and the cheapest are not apt to be the best. But, admitting cheapness, shall the parent risk or sacrifice the moral and spiritual welfare of the child for the sake of saving a few dollars? To have a young person at the most susceptible and formative period of life spend a year or more in the moral atmosphere of a high-toned Christian school is worth more than the entire charges of any of our colleges. The personal influence of teachers is simply incalculably great. No man can estimate how much of good in the present generation is due to such men as Olin and Bascom and Pierce; not for their work in the pulpit, where they were peerless orators, but for their presence and power in the school-room, where they were masterful teachers of mind and heart. At Emory College I learned Latin and Greek and mathematics and other things in abundance, but nothing that impressed me so much as when Bishop Pierce, then president, told in the presence of all how utterly little and unspeakably mean a young man ought to feel who had been guilty of an ungentlemanly or a wicked act. Scores who heard him in those days had virtue strengthened in them, no doubt, forever.

If our church schools shall fail to make the Bible prominent as a text-book, and to maintain the power of personal piety among their students, then must they forfeit their claim to the name of Christian. But, thank God, our church is awakening to the great importance of this subject, and with one accord our Conferences say we must have Christian education. Surely Mississippi and Louisiana will not break the unanimity of the vote.

Notes.

John Wesley once wrote to Adam Clarke this laconic epistle: "Do not please the devil by preaching too loud or too long, but please God by denying yourself herein."

This characteristic sentence from Mayor Hewitt, of New York City, will do for governors, judges, legislators and all other public officers to "muse upon" during this summer weather:

The first mission of an American citizen is never to do a mean thing, and the meanest thing an American citizen can do is, when he takes a public office and knows what his duty is, not to do it because he is afraid it will hurt his personal popularity.

A young brother asked us a question, the other day, that proved a poser! His question was, "Why don't some of the wise men of the church formulate a plan by which everybody in the church shall be reached and induced to contribute to the cause of missions?" We could not answer at that time. Since pondering the question we have come to the conclusion that the man wise enough to originate such a measure has not yet appeared. Here is a field for discovery which, if successfully worked, will yield immortal fame.

The attempt of the Boston Common Council to oust Swinton's Outlines of History from the public schools because of its teachings in regard to the sale of indulgences by the Catholics, has aroused Boston from center to circumference. Tremont Temple and Faneuil Hall have had no such meetings since the days of abolitionism. The storm grows apace every day. This unwarrantable interference on the part of the priests is considered as but another blow at the public school system, and the old Puritan blood of Boston is boiling as in a caldron.

During the Presbyterian Centennial missionary meeting, in Philadelphia, a lady spoke to another lady in the seat in front of her, saying: "If you will go, I will pay half your expenses." They were strangers to each other. Now the lady spoken to is inquiring in the papers for the lady who spoke. That word was of the Lord, and she has concluded to be a missionary, and now inquires for the one who proposed to pay half her expenses. How strangely things are brought about by the providence of God! "His ways are not as our ways."

Personals.

Dr. Haygood has favored us with the "Report of the Proceedings of the Trustees of the John F. Slater Fund for the Education of the Freedmen—1888." The report shows that forty-five schools for colored people have been aided by $15,000 being distributed among them. Under the judicious management of Dr. Haygood this fund is doing a vast good, jus where it needs to be done. Copies of the report will be sent postpaid on request. Address Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., Decatur, Ga.

Dr. C. G. Andrews and family passed through our city, a few days ago, en route to Seashore for a few weeks' vacation. The salt breezes of that delightful place will, we trust, refresh the weary pastor, and bring the roses to the cheeks of wife and children.

This is what Dr. Cameron said in our paper, last week, about the work of Christian education at the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala.: "Over two hundred young men matriculated there the past session, and only twelve returned to their homes out of the church." That is what all our colleges will do, if properly supported by the prayers of the church. Do you ever pray for the teachers and pupils in our schools?

The District Conferences came in upon us heavily this week, and many important articles have been held back to give the church the news from these Conferences. These Conferences are becoming a very popular and efficient arm of our service.

Prof. R. W. Jones, who has so successfully conducted the Mississippi Industrial School for several years, is now president of Emory and Henry College, Virginia. We congratulate Emory and Henry.

Bro. Mellen has won our gratitude by sending us a copy of his discourse, delivered at the last session of the Brookhaven District Conference, on "Obligations and Objections." It is a missionary sermon complete in structure and bristling with facts and pervaded with holy earnestness. It is published at the request of the District Conference and commended by Bishop Keener. By all means get it. It can be had from Bro. Mellen at Jesson, Miss.

On our table we find a new candidate for public favor. It is the first number of The Southwestern Lumber World. It is devoted exclusively to the interests of the lumber trade in the Southwest. It is a monthly, published at 71 Camp street, by The Lumber World Company, of which H. F. Lewis is president and A. L. Gilmore, secretary. The price is $1 per annum.

The catalogue of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., shows that this institution is in a good condition, with the future brightening in every direction. The curriculum for the regular and scientific course is complete and thorough. We rejoice to see the Bible occupying a conspicuous place in the course of study, being a text-book for every class.

The cause of prohibition has received a defeat in Lauderdale county, Miss. The Baptist Record attributes the defeat to several things working together. We are heartily sorry that the ebb has come at this time; but all history proves that no good cause ever marched to complete triumph without meeting some reverses on the way. We think the general cause is far in advance of what it was one year ago, and so we take heart from that fact. Local defeats can be borne when we know that the long line of battle has advanced.

Rev. Samuel J. Hawkins, presiding elder of the Sulphur Springs district, North Texas Conference, died at Sulphur Springs, Texas, August 1. Bro. Hawkins was once a member of the Louisiana Conference. He was a man faithful and true. "The church buries her workmen, but God carries on his work."

The Alexandria District Conference, by resolution, has requested Rev. John Pipes to prepare and have published a history of Methodism in Louisiana, west of the Mississippi River. Did the Conference furnish your brother with the necessary funds for such a work?

Besides Bro. Kimball, who was called away in the prime of young manhood and from the threshold of a useful ministry, the church in our city is called to say "good-bye" to two eminent saints, who went home last week—Sister McKnight, of Louisiana Avenue, and Sister Phillips, of Felicity Street. Two ripe sheaves have been gathered into the garner of God.

A note from Bro. Penn brings the good news that the citizens of Jackson, La., have contributed $1,000 more for the endowment of Centenary College. This makes $2,400 from them. The citizens of Jackson appreciate the college. Send in your names with amounts right along, friends. The college is going up.

From the Butte City Daily Miner we learn that Bishop Galloway opened the eleventh session of the Montana Conference, July 25. Rev. E. J. Stanley was elected secretary. The above-mentioned paper says of our young Bishop:

Bishop Galloway is a typical Southerner. He is of uncommonly fine physique—a model in physical conformation and expression. He possesses great dignity, without ostentation. He is humble, without affectation. He is a man of strong convictions and marked individuality; and would sooner surrender his life than his principles. He would have made a distinguished jurist, a grand political leader, or a military chieftain worthy of knightly spurs, had not God wanted him for the work of the ministry.

We call your attention to what Bro Malone in his article, on another page, says about the laymen in the Atlanta churches doing the church work. Ponder it, ye laymen of Mississippi and Louisiana.

Bro. Cassels, of Gloster, Miss., writes that preachers attending Sam Jones Camp Meeting will be cared for as usual. Meeting begins Friday, August 17.

Items of Interest.

The Supreme Court of Nebraska has decided that a woman may sue and recover money her husband has squandered for liquor.

American enterprise is felt at Hernosand, Sweden, which has just been provided with the most northern electric light station in the world. The lamps there are lighted at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon and put out at 12:15 o'clock at night.

There are seven mission ships cruising in the North Sea, ministering not only to the spiritual wants, but to the bodily necessities of the fishermen. Medical assistance is often sought on board the mission vessels, and, as one of the speakers at the meeting said: "It is understood throughout the fleets that, whatever a man's motive in going on board a mission ship, no man is allowed to leave without hearing of Christ."

Spurgeon has eighty colporteurs among his workers, and their sales last year amounted to $45,800. Should not every church have its colporteurs?

Twenty-five years ago there were no Sunday-school scholars in Germany; now they count 300,000 scholars.

The late William W. Corcoran, the millionaire philanthropist, gave away in sums of over $5,000, nearly $6,000,000. In small sums he gave away $1,500,000.

The record of the inventions by women for which patents have been granted by the United States up to May 1, 1888, shows the number has reached 2,116.

It is estimated that pin factories in New England turn out 10,800,000,000 pins yearly, and that other factories in the States bring the number up to 18,000,000,000. This is equal to one pin a day for every inhabitant of the United States.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided that Sunday marriages are null and void.

In Monroe county, Illinois, there are more saloon keepers than Sunday-school scholars.

For the quarter ending June 1, the Methodist Tract Society of New York distributed 135,832 pages of tracts in that city. Good work, and everybody can engage in it.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

PRESERVES.

All the summer weather,
Saying naught of "nerves,"
Tells a little house-wife
Making choice preserves.
How she does her cooking
Surely no one knows,
Tho' they watch her daily
While she comes and goes.

More than hail her goodies
Go to pay her rent,
Yet in every season
She is well content;
And from noon till even
And from morn till noon
Ever at her labor
Hums a pleasant tune.

Rose and lily syrup,
Richest clover jam,
Fill her tiny fruit-jars,
Full as she can cram.
Now you've guessed my riddle,
And you'll all agree
That the name we call her
Always ends with Bee.

MR. EDITOR:—My Christian name is Marvin. I am a namesake of the noble Bishop Marvin. I am called "Bishop." I am twelve years old. My grandfather, Rev. J. B. Higginbotham, has been at rest for nine years. I expect you knew him. I have three sisters and two brothers. Two of my sisters are married. My oldest brother, Serge, is a telegraph operator; also, one of my brothers-in-law, Mr. Newsom. Of course, I am proud of them. I have not decided what profession I will choose if God spares my life until I am a man. I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. "Old Gilead" is my church. I am also a member of the Sabbath-school at that church. Mr. W. C. Hatcher is our superintendent. The Sunday-school had a picnic at Gilead Church, July 7. We had a pleasant time, plenty to eat and cold water to drink. The recitations and essays were very good. I think Miss Ada McMurray's was the best. It was a recitation, "A Dream of Heaven." You can imagine it was pretty. Our preacher is Rev. N. J. Roberts. I think he is the preacher. I saw a letter in one of the ADVOCATES from Cousin Lulu Godfrey. It was splendid. Her mother and my father are sister and brother. Mr. Carter, I have seen you and I heard you preach, in 1886, at the open-air meeting, on Sandy Creek. You must come again and preach to us. We all like you. Pa is a subscriber to the ADVOCATE, and we love the dear paper. It was grandpa's paper. Last night, July 22, while I was asleep, the light of the lovely moon was darkened by a total eclipse. My sisters, Linda and Effie, were the only ones at my home who saw it. They said it was a sight to them. I wish they had awakened poor me, so I could have seen it, too. I have no pets but myself. I have a brother and sister in heaven. Papa is a farmer. We reside on the plantation that dear grandpa owned. It is a dear old home. Dear Mr. Carter, please publish this letter. Many thanks for your kindness if you do; if you do not, I shall be a disappointed lad. I will say good-by. I wish you every success. May God bless you, and may a bright crown be your reward!

Your little friend,
MARVIN HIGGINBOTHAM.
EAST FELICIANA, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking I would write a letter to the ADVOCATE for a long time, but I was afraid it might find its way to the waste-basket. I am a little girl nine years old. I have three brothers living and one sister in heaven. Two of my brothers have been here at my grandpa's very sick for a long time, but we think both are improving now. I live at Pelahatchie in Rankin county, but my brother Josie and I have been here going to school. Our teacher's name is Mrs. Mary Blalack. We love her very much. We have a new church at Pelahatchie, and have a nice Sunday-school. Excuse all mistakes, as this is my first attempt.

"I'll Stir the Batter."

A dear, beautiful little boy in Pennsylvania signed the temperance pledge at one of the temperance meetings held for children. A short time afterwards his mother was busy in the kitchen, preparing cakes and pies. "Davy," she said, "go up to the closet and bring down the whisky jug. I want some for these mince pies."

Dave, as was his habit, instantly obeyed. But as he went dancing up stairs, the thought came to him, "Can you, a temperance boy, carry a whisky jug?"

He stopped right there and decided the question. Then hurrying back to the kitchen, he said:

"O, mamma! I can not carry a whisky jug. I've signed the pledge; but I'll stir the batter while you go."

Without a word the mother gave into his little hands the spoon with which she was stirring the batter, and went herself to bring the jug. She felt a strange choking sensation in her throat, but she walked up those stairs with a firm tread, and seized the jug. When she came down, the dear little fellow was beating at the dough with all his might. His eyes followed her as she went to the sink and began to empty out the contents of the jug.

"What—are you doing, mamma?"

"I'm emptying out the whisky. We'll not have any more in our mince pies."

"O mamma! do you mean it?"

"Yes; I mean to use lemons instead."

"Goodey, goodey! we're going to have temperance pies."

And Davy fairly danced up and down the kitchen, as the whisky gurgled out of the jug into the sink.

BRAVE AND KIND.—There is a saying that "the bravest are the tenderest," and this saying seems to apply to dogs as well as men. Last spring, in Paris, there was reported in the papers a trial in which it was proved that a Newfoundland dog had saved the life of his mistress, Madame Brunot. She had been threatened by a burglar who had entered her house in the night.

The dog flew at the burglar's throat like an enraged lion; the man succeeded in disengaging himself, and started down a stairway, but Patand—that is the dog's name—followed him, seized him by the coat, and held him until help had been summoned, when the burglar was placed under arrest.

"As soon as the affair was over," said Madame Brunot in telling the story, "Patand went quietly and lay down under the table as if nothing had happened—which I don't think, somehow, was much to his credit."

This brave dog's portrait appeared in the illustrated papers; it showed a good and kindly face. And now another story is told of the same Newfoundland, which illustrates the other side of his character.

Madame Brunot possesses a cat, scarcely yet grown, for which Patand has an extremely warm affection. One day last year the cat suddenly disappeared. Patand showed great concern and even grief. Three days passed by, and he was still inconsolable. The fourth day Patand also disappeared, and his mistress was beginning to worry about his absence, when, toward evening, he returned with little Minet, the cat, in his mouth. Where or how he had found her, no one knows.—Youth's Companion.

THE USE OF SORROW.

"If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender.
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold, and miss indeed
Its sweetest consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish was granted,
Patience would die and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanted.

Thirst in Young Infants.

It is a mistake to suppose that because milk is a liquid food it is at the same time a drink which is capable of satisfying the thirst of infants. Although milk appeases hunger, it makes thirst more intense after it has remained some time in the stomach and digestion of it has begun. It is thirst which causes healthy, breast-nourished infants to cry for long periods of time in many instances. There are many cases of indigestion due to weakness or insufficiency of the child's gastric juice which would be greatly benefited, or even cured, if the child were allowed an occasional drink of water.

The above was left on our desk with this note:

BRO. CARTER: Please print this and relieve my burdened heart. C.

The heart that goes out in compassion for the infants' in their sufferings is a heart akin to the great heart of Jesus Christ.

Make Home Happy.

We should use every effort in our power to make home the most attractive of all places, so that when the business cares of the day are over the husband, son, or brother, instead of seeking the needed recreation elsewhere, may find it just where it should be, within the limits of a peaceful, serene, happy home.

Every wife, mother, sister, or daughter should strive to the utmost of her ability to offer some rational diversion to the jaded, worn-out toiler who has suffered during the long weary day from the push and hurry and worry of some vocation that has again with the next sun to be taken up with its monotonous round of toil and duty, whether the chafed spirit and aching limbs are willing or not, for necessity issues cruel edicts that must be obeyed.

Let every woman remember that a pleasant evening spent at home is a perfect charm against the temptations offered abroad and to the practice of looking to forbidden resorts for enjoyment and happiness. Few men are proof against the snares that are offered elsewhere, in the form of innocent, agreeable recreation, and happy are those restless spirits that can find around the old home fireside some diversion that will prove a safeguard against the fashionable follies and pastimes that so often lead to lives of profligacy and an utter abandonment of all virtuous tastes and pursuits.

A little forethought, a small sacrifice of time and feeling, will enable any wife and mother to devise some innocent scheme to detain the would-be rover at home, and after it becomes a habit for him to remain at home, and expect the enjoyment planned for him by loving hearts and hands, it will be no difficult matter to be content when an interesting story is to be read aloud or a new song to be sung or played on some instrument by some member of the household. A pleasant spirit of rivalry should exist among the ladies of the family, each striving to excel in making the evening most enjoyable; and in time the father, husband and brother will partake of the spirit, and each one will soon learn to show his attachment to home by preferring it to any other spot, and will look forward to the evening hours with the most joyful anticipations of pleasure and happiness.—Baltimorean.

Dear Sir: I wish to say a word in behalf of your wonderful Chill and Fever Pills. Some months ago a friend, who knew that my wife had been afflicted for months, sent me a package of your pills. I gave them to her and they cured her at once. A neighbor, Mr. Perry, had suffered with chills for more than a year, and had taken Quinine until his hearing was greatly injured. Seeing the cure wrought in my wife's case, he procured a bottle of pills and was speedily restored to perfect health. I feel that this is due to you. Very truly,

Alexandria District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference for the Alexandria District convened in Evergreen, La., on Thursday last, with our beloved presiding elder, Rev. B. F. Alexander, in the chair, and the writer was elected secretary. The attendance throughout was good; but there were several preachers absent through unavoidable causes and, Mr. Editor, we all expected you until Sunday morning, and many were disappointed that you could not come.

The reports of the various pastors show a move upward—souls converted, backsliders reclaimed and the reviving influence of God's Holy Spirit working everywhere. Collections to date are fair, and all are hopeful of a good financial showing at this Conference.

The Rev. A. D. McVoy arrived on Saturday, and talked to Montgomery and Mansfield "good." He also preached, on Sunday morning, a sermon at once powerful and practical. Rev. B. F. Tate preached at the Baptist church, kindly lent for the purpose.

Now, as to the main purpose for which this Conference was held, viz: spiritual improvement in Christians, and conversions. The visible conversions were small in number—only one; but who knows how many that one will be the means of saving? It was a happy event, and the individual is one of the boys of our presiding elder; namely, Robert. He was gloriously happy. But the influence of the sermons preached, the prayers, the songs and let me not forget to mention the glorious love-feast we had on Sunday morning), and, above all, the presence of God's Holy Spirit and its reviving influence will long be felt and remembered, and the fruit will be known at that day when we shall know even as we are known.

The people of this place exerted themselves in their hospitality and courtesy to preachers and delegates, all denominations uniting in welcoming them, and furnishing conveyances and other conveniences. Taking into account the Baptist Convention early in the month, and the number who were then entertained and those who have been here during the past week, I was much surprised in a ride of seven miles not to see a single chicken. All the chances of the preacher charge for a chicken pie between next year are decidedly slim. Evergreen has now resumed its usual quiet appearance. The next Conference goes to Jackie.

WALTER DUNSTAN, Sec.

The Delhi District Conference.

This body convened at Oak Ridge, on Thursday, July 26, at one A. M.

In the absence of a Bishop (a common thing for this district), Rev. J. D. Harper, P. E., occupied the chair, and, of course, well filled it. All the itinerant preachers of the district, except three, were present. Some of these brethren have been deeply afflicted, but all have stood to their posts and labored efficiently. The attendance of laymen was small, but the "faithful few" were there. We had only two committees—one on Public Worship, and the other on Quarterly Conference Journals. All the interests of the church were looked after, and the reports of the preachers showed progress in all lines of church work. Spiritual improvement is indicated by large attendance upon the services held, the increase in members and efficiency of the Sunday-schools, increased circulation of the ADVOCATE; but the good reports on finances were not a majority.

Material improvement is indicated in the building and repairing of churches and parsonages. We adopted a resolution looking to the increase of the circulation of the ADVOCATE, and the pastors are all alive to its interests; so if you fail to get all the subscribers you ought to have, it is not because the preachers are asleep. Missions, church extension, education and temperance were all discussed; and it is believed that the church in this district is advancing in respect to all these great movements.

President McVoy was present the first day, and represented Mansfield Female College, and made a good impression. President Fitzhugh was present during the remainder of the session looking after the interests of Whitworth College, and assisted us in our work by some timely suggestions.

T. H. Dalton, Dr. A. S. Helmick; S. Whited and I. B. Bowman were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and L. G. Johnston and J. B. Riley, alternates.

We are to have a District Sunday-school Conference at Monroe, at such time next year as the presiding elder may designate. The next session of the District Conference is to be held at Bastrop, and the editor of the ADVOCATE must consider himself specially invited.

A. M. BROWN, Sec.

Report on Temperance.

The following report was adopted by the Meridian District Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Lauderdale, Miss., July 26, 1888:

Your committee beg leave to report as follows:

There is such a degree of enlightenment existing to-day upon the subject of temperance, that we deem a recital of oft-repeated facts and arguments unnecessary. We, therefore, merely offer for adoption the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we look with profound gratitude upon the progress the temperance cause has made in the last few years, and that to-day it is attracting the attention of the best thinkers of every class of society. Not only is the humble citizen of obscure talents and limited influence awakened by its demands, but men of the highest position and most conspicuous ability—statesmen, jurists, physicians, business men of every vocation—are giving their best thoughts to the all-absorbing question.

Resolved, That in view of the fact that intemperance has become an evil habit of such magnitude as to demand the interference of the State, we rejoice that provision has been made for the suppression of the whisky traffic by the strong arm of civil law. While the local option law, as now in force, may not be so perfect as to be beyond improvement, we believe it to be the duty of every person to use it as the best means at hand for the extinction of the great evil of intemperance.

Resolved, That we believe it to be the duty of every Christian, and especially every minister of the gospel, to promote, publicly and privately, the prohibition of the liquor traffic, as provided for by our State laws. While we do not believe in the ministry taking sides, offensively, in merely political questions, we do not understand the prohibition of crime, insanity, idiocy and pauperism, the inevitable results of the whisky traffic, to be a question of political expediency only, but one of morality, the magnitude of which no one can ignore. And while we, as ministers of the gospel and laymen in the church of God, subject ourselves unjustly to odious epithets and to the charge of being political meddlers, we do not deem it our prerogative to abate our efforts, in the least, to secure the establishment and enforcement of prohibition law throughout the bounds of the district we represent.

Resolved, That we solicit the continued co-operation of the ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and others, whose hearts have been stirred by the evil of intemperance, that prohibition may be so entrenched in the minds of the people as to leave no doubt of its future success.

L. CARLEY,
D. C. LANGFORD,
P. W. PUGH,
Committee.

"The gods give no great good without labor," is an old proverb, and a true one; the hardest labor is not always that which is best paid, however. To those in search of light, pleasant and profitable employment, we say write to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va.

A Danger to Be Considered.

The Richmond Advocate, in a long leader, on "Our Ministry in Cities," concludes with these wise words of warning:

"Is there not some danger of the prevalence in many of our churches of a false standard of excellence for pastors? A gift for speaking, combining a good voice, a pleasant manner, a ready and confident utterance, with quick play of the emotional nature, when accompanied by an aptitude for pastoral work performed pleasantly (whether with spiritual effectiveness is not too closely inquired)—things that result in considerable popularity with the masses and soon give a man the reputation of drawing; these are now frequently regarded as the qualifications necessary for a large church in a city. Real depth of piety, thoroughness and accuracy of biblical and religious knowledge, roundness and purity of culture in mind and manners, discretion, judgment, knowledge of human nature, attained by experience—these are too often esteemed of little value, should some drawback exist of personal manner in delivery or some degree of native reserve by reason of which a man does not at first appear at his best.

"We have known men of the highest order of intellect and culture, though not of the best speaking talent, men of the deepest and truest type of nobility of character, though for that very reason incapable of flippant self-confidence, looked upon by many people as inferior to very ordinary, yea, grievously defective, men who could speak well and were unconscious of the shallowness of all they spoke.

"If we expect to elevate our town congregations, to build them up in grace and real usefulness, to develop their best qualities and make them strong, steady, liberal, intelligent Christians, and not ignorant and conceited bigots or weak and vain zealots for the narrow band they belong to, we must try to give them men of combined native force and gracious culture. Still more, if we expect to exert upon the whole urban community, through our pulpit and church services, a durable and powerful influence, we must repress the pushing to the front of a shallow flippancy without depth of mind or accuracy of information.

"Bishops and their advisers must search for men of genuine ability and habits of real thinking, whose 'lips retain knowledge' and not empty froth of words, men of ripe and lofty spiritual character, and prefer results less noisy and showy, but more abiding and progressive. This may transfer a number of men from the country and remand others, hastily stationed, to their former sphere of labor—in the pleasant agricultural regions. It may drive off the floating trash of some churches, but it will benefit and please our best and most reliable hearers."

That tired feeling is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which creates an appetite, rouses the liver, cures headache, and gives renewed strength and vigor to the whole body. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself. Sold by all druggists.

Ministerial Attentions.

We gladly place before our readers the following earnest words from the Methodist Times, of London:

"At this moment a majority of the people of England go to no place of worship. While we are fiddling and quarrelling about the tune, Rome is burning. The fundamental sin of modern Christianity is its anti-Christian selfishness. Too many church members imagine that the chief duty of Christian ministers is to dance attendance upon them, instead of going forth to seek and to save the lost. The perpetual demand—for pastoral services of all sorts is a subtle and deadly form of selfishness.

"Instead of whining for ministerial attention, let them become ministers themselves, first to their own household, and secondly to their neighbors. The modern tendency to exalt the pastor above the evangelist is the greatest of all practical heresies. In the church founded by the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, the pastor occupied the lowest place. Apostles, prophets, and evangelists ranked above him. In those glorious days Christians were unselfish, and instead of supposing that the church existed to strengthen and comfort them, they went forth to strengthen and comfort the perishing. The church was founded not to protect sickly hot-house Christians from a breath of fresh air; but to evangelize the human race. It is an army to conquer the world and the devil, not an ambulance corps to carry about lazy Christians who ought to walk on their own feet. Every individual Christian ought to be a missionary. We are in great danger of spoiling Christians by doing too much for them. Our pastoral nurses feed them when they ought to be feeding themselves. We wheel them about in ecclesiastical perambulators when they ought to be strengthening their limbs by vigorous exercise. A great many Christians are fearfully overfed with services and sermons. They are perpetually devouring the finest of the wheat, and never doing Christian work. Of course they suffer from chronic spiritual dyspepsia. How could it be otherwise? Jesus Christ did not spend his time in listening to sermons and enjoying the means of grace. He went about doing good. He secured his own highest happiness by ceaselessly promoting the happiness of others. It is a terrible delusion to imagine that the world can ever be evangelized by ministers or by lay agents. Every Christian man and every Christian woman must take an active part in the work. On the Day of Pentecost they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and they all began to publish the wonderful works of God."

Though Christ's riches were immense and unsearchable like himself, though heaven was his throne, and the earth his footstool, he became poor and was destitute of a place to lay his head, that we might be rich in faith here and heirs of the kingdom hereafter.—Fletcher

ELLZEY—Mrs. AMANDA N. ELLZEY, daughter of James and Mary Booker, and wife of R. A. Ellzey, was born in East Feliciana parish, La. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when young and remained a consistent member till she fell asleep in Jesus, which came to pass, July 23, 1888, aged fifty-four years, eight months and twenty-four days. Thus another one of God's children has gone to join the already innumerable host of heaven, among whom are her three sons, Lucien Rankin, Clarence and Archie, and her little daughter, May Asia. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, six sons and two daughters. She was one who amid all the storms and tempests on the sea of life never made shipwreck of her faith, and of a good conscience toward God, but, kept hoisted to the breezes of divine grace, as the sail of her bark, the blood-stained banner of the cross, till she was sweetly glided by the waves into the haven of heavenly rest. Those of us who have seen the hearty faith with which she flew to the mercy-seat in times of danger and trial, find it very easy to disengage her, in our thought, from the cold embrace of death. We behold her released from the dust that cumbered, changed into a celestial—her innocent blue eyes opened upon the "sweet fields of Eden," her tender heart expanding in the upper air, her happy nature pervaded by that ineffable Presence which heightens happiness beyond expression. Shall we not rather joyfully accept for her this blessed transition? Though we can not but sorrow that she no longer walks with us here, let us, in the spirit of devout submission, try to say, "Thy will be done!"

R. A. ELLZEY.

PARKER—Mrs. SALLIE PARKER, daughter of James and Mary Wilson, died in Jackson, Miss., June 9, 1888, aged about forty-five years. She was a faithful child and made a worthy woman. In early life she professed religion and became a member of the Methodist Church. For many years she was a faithful teacher in the Sunday-school, where her amiable spirit and gentle manners won the love of her pupils. In 1873 she was married to Mr. Joseph P. Parker, who, with two interesting children, is bereft by her death. She was a beautiful woman, and the light and joy of the parental household, only the mother and one daughter of which are now left. Death has made many visits to the family. The oldest son was killed in the battle of Baker's Creek; the father died in 1866; the next year Miss Josie was taken away in the bloom of youth; Miss Mary and two brothers, Andrew and Luther, fell victims to the yellow fever epidemic of 1878. Mrs. Parker was an affectionate and dutiful wife and mother. Though she had suffered for more than a year with a disease of the heart, her departure at last was sudden and unexpected by her friends. Yet she was ready, regretting only that she must leave her loved ones on earth. Her resignation was beautiful and her confidence in God unwavering to the last.

"A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

"God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given,
And though the body moulders here
The soul is safe in heaven."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mr. James G. Blaine left Liverpool for New York on August 1.

Yellow fever in Florida appears to be dying out.

Over 300 Italians, disgusted at not being able to obtain employment in New York City, sailed for home on August 1.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Convention opened in Boston, on the first instant.

Mr. Robertson's bill subdividing the Eastern Judicial District of Louisiana, and establishing United States Courts at Baton Rouge, La., passed the Senate on August 1, and went to the President for his signature.

An explosion of an oil stove in a New York tenement-house, on August 3, fired and destroyed the building, in which one hundred and fifty people were caged. Thirteen were burned to death and many fatally injured.

Mr. Wilkinson's bill, establishing additional aids to navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi, was called up by Senator Gibson on August 3, and passed the Senate.

On the third instant a band of unfriendly Indians fired into the tents of the soldiers and the store at the subagency between Fort Thomas and San Carlos, Arizona.

A hurricane struck New Market, Iowa, on August 4. The damage is quite heavy, but no loss of life has been reported.

Gen. P. H. Sheridan, commander-in-chief of the United States Army, after a lingering illness, died at Nonquitt, Mass., on the 5th.

The Farmers' State Alliance, which met in Opelousas, La., after a session of four days, adjourned August 5.

Senator Sawyer offered an amendment in the Senate, on the second, to the general deficiency appropriation bill, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the United States and Congo National Emigration Steamship Company $100 for every adult person of color who shall desire to go to Africa on the ships of their lines.

Belva Lockwood, the champion of woman suffragists and presidential candidate, gave a lecture to a meagre audience of less than fifty persons, in New York, August 5.

Colonel Herbert, the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, will shortly make a speech on the general subject of the decay and restoration of the American navy. This country had a good navy in 1866, according to Admiral Porter. In ten years after the war the Republicans spent $234,000,000, and the navy had become worthless. The Democrats are spending $20,000,000 per annum, as compared with $23,500,000 spent by the Republicans, and nevertheless are rapidly restoring the navy.

The drivers on the street car lines in Brooklyn are on a strike.

Hon. Thomas Seay was re-elected governor of Alabama, on August 6. The Democrats carried the State by 100,000 majority.

FOREIGN.

Emperor William arrived at Friedrichsruhe on August 1. Prince Bismarck awaited his arrival at his mansion. Crowds of people cheered the Emperor.

The names of five priests, who urged the tenants on the Van Delenhr estate to resist the evictors, have been forwarded to the Pope by the clerical authority.

France protests against the Italian occupation of Massowah.

Silesia is being devastated by terrible floods, the worst known in thirty years. Along the rivers Beber and Yarken the damage is especially great.

A terrible explosion occurred in a fireworks factory at Wandsworth, a section of London, on August 3. Several women, who were at work in the building were killed.

The Riforma, of Rome, referring to the emigration question, dwells upon the importance of America's co-operating with Italy instead of listening to the suggestions of those whose object in raising the question is above all to crush the Italian element.

Mirir Pasha, the special Turkish envoy to Berlin to present the Sultan's congratulations to the Emperor William on his accession to the throne, took to the Emperor an autograph letter from the Sultan and a gold casket set with brilliants and containing a smoking set.

A formal note was sent by Prince Bismarck through the English embassy asking that the Queen receive the Emperor William, who, the note stated, intended to visit England. If the plans of Prince Bismarck are executed in time, the Emperor William will arrive in London in November, during the winter session of Parliament.

Bishop Harris, of the Episcopal diocese of Eastern Michigan, was stricken down with paralysis in London, on August 5.

Princess Victoria of Teck has presented to Queen Victoria the jubilee tribute of the children of the kingdom, amounting to £6,000. The money will be given to a children's hospital.

Our readers have doubtless often noticed that Hood's Sarsaparilla is well spoken of in the newspapers. The press is quick to recognize merit, and does not hesitate to give praise where it is due. The following is from the Baptist Weekly, a leading religious paper:

"Advertising may bring an article prominently before the public, but no advertising can long help it if it has not real merit. Hood's Sarsaparilla is well advertised; but the best proof of its value is that so many persons use is on the recommendations of friends who have proved its peculiar virtues."

Mr. Lane, member of Parliament for Cork, writes to the press that when he was in prison he was unable to eat the prison food, although he was starving.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is the most reliable article in use for restoring gray hair to its original color and promoting the growth of the hair.

A Bishop on His Travels.

MR. EDITOR: Agreeable to omise, I write you somewhat my observations in the Yelstone National Park. An atpt at accurate or adequate cription of the wonders in t "Wonderland" I will not ay.

The Yellowstone National Park ixty-five miles long and fifty- miles wide—about 3,575 are miles—and lies mostly in Territory of Wyoming, inding narrow strips of Idaho Montana. It was withdrawn m settlement and set apart a national park by Congress 1872. The patriotic wisdom t conceived and secured the sage of such a measure is rthy of all honor. It is a at educational institution, free all the world, where the wons of nature may be studied enjoyed without let or fee. d tourists come annually by usands—some for scientific dy, others for recreation, and go away to exhaust the vocabry of adjectives in a vain atpt to express inexpressible ight.

o reach the Park you leave main line of the Northern cific at Livingston, Mon., and e a branch railway to Cinne-, about fifty miles, where ges are in waiting to conr tourists to Mammoth Hot rings, a distance of eight miles r a strikingly picturesque ntain road. From Livingn, which is cosily situated at foot of the Snow Mountains, m whose lofty heads the white nets are never removed, the road follows the Yellowstone er through a narrow gateway he Rocky range known as the wer Cañon. Abrupt, rugged ks rise three thousand feet either side, and listen in silent ndeur to the musical rush of sparkling Yellowstone along narrow, pebbly channel. The re route from Livingston to nebar is a succession of sub views, valley and mountain mit vying with each other in llenging admiring attention. Few landscapes could be more beautiful than Paradise Valley, with its cottages and cattle ranches, and not many mountain scenes more sublime than Emigrant's Peak, over ten thousand feet in height, his awful form robed in clouds, while the play of sunbeams made his snowy crown glisten with glory.

Just before reaching Cinnebar the conductor called attention to a peculiar formation known as the "Devil's Slide." Up the bare mountain sides, which rise 2,000 feet above the valley, two smooth, vertical walls stand out 200 feet high and fifty feet broad. They seem to have been run by mathematical lines and built by the careful, skillful masonry of man. From between these walls, one of dull grey stone and the other a bright red, the softer materials had been washed away, looking, indeed, as though it might have been done by the toboggan sport of some prehistoric monsters.

At Mammoth Hot Springs, eight miles from Cinnebar, and a few miles within the Park limits, there is a spacious, well-kept hotel. This is our point of departure for the tour of wonderland, and contains itself many very remarkable formations. We arrive at the hotel about noon, and have until the next morning at eight o'clock for observation and rest.

Soon after luncheon I started out for sights and insights. Before ascending the lofty white terraces built by the calcareous deposits of those boiling springs, attention is arrested by two prominent figures. One is a solitary, cone-shaped shaft nearly fifty feet high and twenty feet in diameter at the base. This is called "Liberty Cap," and is said to be the remains of an extinct geyser. Not many yards away, jutting out from the bluff, is a similar formation, aptly distinguished as the "Giant's Thumb." In the long ago they were active geysers, and the wonder of Indian and engle. Today, the fires within exhausted, they are sombre monuments of departed glory. The opening of other craters of ebullition have built the great "Minerva Terraces," with spouting springs and steaming pools and boiling basins of every shape and color. Near the center of eruption the water is about 200 degrees F., and, as it pours out into the beautifully tinted and scalloped basins, sends up ceaseless clouds of steam. An estimate has been made of the rate of deposit from one of these springs, and found to be about one inch in sixty days. At this ratio it has not required many years to build "Terrace Mountain." The color of the deposits vary, and are formed according to every law known to the mineralogist.

The Gardner river flows near some of these springs, and this recalls a "fish story" told by the driver of our stage. He verified the story by relating a chapter of his own experience, that it was possible for an angler to catch a trout from the waters of the river and, without moving from his tracks, throw it into a hot spring, and have it well cooked, ready to eat in a few moments. I have no reason to doubt the driver.

To refer in detail to the various points of interest at Mammoth Hot Springs would require a series of letters. The "Narrow-Guage Terraces," a long, sharp ridge with a hundred little springs gurgling and spouting; "Cupid's Cave," a beautiful grotto made by the snowy-white stalactite and stalagmite formations flowing from a basined-shaped spring just above called "Cleopatra's Bowl;" the "White Elephant," the "Chameleon Spring," and other points too numerous for mention, entertain an entire afternoon.

The very cool nights contrasted strangely with the steaming cauldrons plainly visible from the hotel verandah. We had a white frost every morning, and double blankets were in demand every night; but the days were warm and the mosquitoes ravenous.

At eight o'clock, next morning, several fine Concord coaches, each drawn by four strong horses, were driven around to begin the grand tour of the Park. Good hotel accommodations are provided at the several stations, and the whole trip is made in four days. The pleasure of the tour is heightened by agreeable, intelligent stage-coach companions. It is well, if possible, to form a party before leaving Mammoth Hot Springs. The companionship of four or five days in a stage, as a revelation of character and test of mental fibre, is worth the neighborhood of as many years on adjoining lots in the same town. Various motives prompt the visits of tourists. Some come for scientific study, some to see the beautiful and admire the wonderful, some for recreation, and others because it is fashionable. The sentimental young lady comes and gets "awfully tired" of the stage ride; thinks the mosquitoes "dreadful," the dust "perfectly execrable," the days are "horribly long," and the evenings "disgustingly dull." When asked what she thinks of some rugged, hoary peak crowned with the snows of centuries, or some great geyser rumbling like subterranean thunder, making the ground beneath your feet quiver, and sending vast volumes of hot water hundreds of feet in the air, glistening in the sun like moving mountains of pearl, she replies, "It's very nice." I saw her.

The Park roads are very good, having been constructed by government engineers, albeit here and there a tourist from the lowlands could not suppress nervousness at the steep descents and dizzy ascents. I soon learned to reply implicitly upon the skillful driver, with his foot on the brake.

Leaving Mammoth Hot Springs in the early morning, we reach Norris Geyser Basin for dinner, a distance of nearly twenty miles. Starting at an elevation of 6,200 feet, within the first three miles we ascend eleven hundred more, and pass through the "Golden Gate." A tall, immense boulder stands off from the mountain about fifteen feet, near the summit, and forms this golden gateway. Passing through it, we are greeted by the "Rustic Falls," formed by one of the tributaries of Gardner river leaping over a ledge of rock about sixty feet, and then, by mere gradual descent, winding through the deep cañon below. The next attraction, a few miles beyond, was the "Obsidian Cliffs," a mountain of volcanic glass, glistening like jet, and opaque. Having read of the difficulty in constructing a road around that mountain, the rock blasted by heating and suddenly cooling with water, and being assured that it was the only half-mile of glass road in the world, I was rather disappointed with the view. Outside of "Wonderland" it would be wonderful.

At Norris we encountered the first "five-hole area," and saw the first real geyser. The entire basin and neighboring hill-sides are filled with rumbling springs and tossing waters. And they are of every color. One is perfectly black, another is pure sulphur, with odor too strong to stand near it very long, and others of varying hue to stainless white. Walking near them, the whole earth seems hollow, and the shell separating you from the sulphurous cauldron as thin as October ice. One of the geysers, called the "Constant," sends a column of clear water up fifteen or twenty feet every half minute. Another, called the "Minute Man," spurts a bolder stream thirty feet in the air every sixty seconds. The "Steamboat Vent" throws out no water, but keeps up a ceaseless roar exactly like the escape of steam through the mud-valves of a Mississippi packet, and darkens the heavens with clouds of smoke. Scientific gentlemen who have given these phenomena special study predict that this "Steamboat Vent" will some day be the greatest geyser in the world. Another, called the "Growler," is aptly named, roaring within a deep cave, threatening to leap from his lair and tear in pieces his victim. But of all these marvels of nature you have not space to hear.

Pursuing our journey in the afternoon, we pass many beautiful springs, notably the "Beryl," drive through Elk Park, and follow the windings of the river through Gibbon Cañon. What magnificent vistas! Four miles from the entrance of the cañon are the Falls of Gibbon. I climbed down the mountain-side for some distance, and had a charming view of the cataract. The volume of water is not large, but falls 160 feet, and, with the evening sun playing full upon it, looked like a bridal veil entwined with ribbons of rainbow.

About six o'clock we reached the hotel at Lower Geyser Basin, and there spent the night. Some points of interest near by I visited after supper, in company with a very intelligent New York gentleman, who had made a thorough and leisurely tour through the whole Park. We saw two "Paint Pots"—mud geysers—and several springs scarcely equaled for delicate coloring. Tracks of elk and antelope were found, but the wild natives of those mountains themselves we failed to see. One of the drivers, however, saw quite a number of elk the evening before come down from the hills to browse in the beautiful valley and very near the hotel. The law for the protection of game in the Park is now rigidly and very properly enforced. Within a few more years buffalo, elk, antelope, deer, etc., will be numerous. At present there is a herd of buffalo numbering about an hundred.

But this letter has grown so long I must reserve for another some account of the great geysers, the Yellowstone Falls, and the Grand Cañon.

Fraternally,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

HELENA, MON., July 23, 1888.

Rev. James Ansel Newsom.

BY REV. I. W. COOPER.

"There is no death; what seems so is transition.
This life of mortal breath
Is but the suburb of the life elysian.
Whose portal we call death."

On the morning of July 29, 1888, at the parsonage in Madison Station, Miss., just as the bells rang for the Sabbath-schools, Rev. James Ansel Newsom, after an illness of thirty days, sweetly fell on sleep.

"But he lay like a warrior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him."

His departure took place in vigorous manhood. The dates of his life read: Born in St. Helena parish, La., December 28, 1865; converted at the age of eleven; licensed to preach at seventeen; admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference at nineteen. In 1884 he was appointed to assist on the Benton circuit; in 1885 he served the North Wilkinson circuit; in 1886 and 1887, Silver Creek; in 1888 he was appointed to the Madison circuit. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Keener in Jackson, Miss., last December, and was admitted into full connection in the Mississippi Conference. He departed this life at the age of twenty-two years, seven months and one day.

He died young, they say. But we do not measure life as God measures it. Life is not measured by its days and years, but by one's conception of God's character, by usefulness in life, by fidelity to duty, and by the enjoyment of the atonement of Christ. Years to such a life are relative, and the life in the enjoyment of the Divine Spirit becomes, by its influence and principles, immortal as to this world. Then our young brother's life was a consummate success, because in his character the principles of Christ were unfolded and illustrated, and the power of the Holy Spirit had placed his life in communion with the eternal operations of God's kingdom. His was a noble young manhood; noble by nature and purified by grace. Decision was a prominent element in his character. He was the embodiment of independence; yet he was devoid of dogmatism.

He was popular as a minister; but his popularity was not the result of a compromise with sin or laxity in his views concerning the evil tendencies of this age; but it was the result of his generous and catholic spirit, social nature, earnestness, and his Christian life, which was ever potent for good. Sincerity was prominent in his life; and he had very little patience with insincerity in others. While he was in sympathy with all Christians, he loved the church of his choice. Methodism to him meant redemption by the blood of Christ, and the enjoyment of the Holy Ghost. He realized his conception of Methodism.

As a singer, he often charmed his hearers, and often in coming years will memory call up his songs, while we lovingly think of him singing with the redeemed in the summer-land of glory. He loved the itinerancy, and no one ever heard him speak of the so-called sacrifices of the pastorate. For him to preach was a grand privilege, and the thought that God had honored him in calling him to be a chosen vessel was an inspiration. He entered into the sorrows of others. His heart knew how to sympathize. Now we are sorrowful that he has left. But—

"Sorrows humanize our race,
Tears are the showers that fertilize this world.
And memory of things precious keepeth warm
The heart that once did hold them."

Bro. Newsom was a good preacher, and he improved all the time. His preaching was effectual. There was a peculiar charm of directness in his sermons. Like Nathan, his words said: "Thou art the man." In the study of his sermons, the Bible was his companion. Two years ago he married Miss Josie North, with whom he lived happily, and he found in her a great blessing. Our brother died at his post of duty. His shield was burnished. The sword was in his hand. Surrounded by loved ones and appreciative friends, our young pastor preached his last sermon, which is the greatest of all sermons. He taught us how life is made beauteous and triumphant, and how death to the Christian is as calm as summer evenings are, and that the redeemed soul passes out from the shadows of this world into the brightness of the eternal.

To his father, whose preacher-boy was the pride of his life; to his mother, whom "Jim" loved with filial devotion; to his brothers and sisters, who could not bid him farewell; to his friends of Madison circuit, who loved and tenderly cared for him; to his heart-broken wife and infant daughter, we offer our profound sympathy.

How home-like heaven is becoming! Our earthly treasures are becoming our heavenly treasures. The loved one's death quickens our steps to the golden city. Good night, dear Jim, until the breaking of the eternal morn, when we shall greet thee.

"Beyond these chilly winds and gloomy skies.
Beyond death's cloudy portal,
There is a land where beauty never dies,
Where love becomes immortal."

Blasphemy--or, Taking God's Name in Vain.

MR. EDITOR: Not long since one of your correspondents wrote to you, and you published his letter, in which he said "they had a real Holy Ghost meeting." Another said, in another letter, that a brother "preached a real Holy Ghost sermon." And in the St. Louis Advocate I see where a brother speaks of some who lack "Holy Ghost power." One year ago one of your correspondents said the "meeting was a Holy Ghost season," etc.

Now, can that awful name be thus dragged into the service of the rhetorician as an ornamental and descriptive adjective? If it is admissible, it nevertheless has for my ear the ring of blasphemy. How does it sound to you? Yours, INQUIRER.

(We are glad that "Inquirer" has called attention to this subject. We can not be too careful in the use of the "holy name."—ED.)

(Southern Christian Advocate.

Ministers of the gospel should study other things besides theology if they would be broad and liberal. The persevering study of some one branch of science would do much to train and harness the reasoning powers. The study of a dead language will give one words; the study of the mathematics will give him powers of analysis; all legitimate study will rub off rust and call out powers that might otherwise lie dormant. The successful solution of a trigonometrical problem may pave the way for a powerful sermon.

(Rev. D. Gregg.

The future minister will be, in the first place, a man called by God. His call will be known by the fact that he will not be able to choose any other calling. In the second place, he must be a man who appreciates the work of the ministry of the past, yet one living in his own time. He will recognize the spirit of the age, and allow it to help him in his work. He will use art and science in adorning and adding lustre and interest to truth. Thirdly, he will be a preacher of the book. The most monstrous sham of all shams is a Christless, crossless sermon. Lastly, the future minister will be a man of burning faith and a pure character.

(The Advance.)

What a misfortune it is when a famous public character, whose praise has been sung on thousands of lips, and to whom even the voice of adulation has grown sweet as water to the thirsty, gradually overpowered by the subtle temptation, after awhile gets into a habit of stooping in the mid-career of usefulness to talk about himself, as if he, instead of the cause he was serving, had become to be the object of endless interest to all the world! With so many stumbling-blocks, at best, it seems too bad when one stumbles over himself. There is only one Life known to history which it would be of interest to the world to know "all about him;" and in that case the silences of his inspired biographers are as remarkable as their utterances. "Something sealed the lips of the evangelist, and he spake it not."

(Southern Christian Advocate.)

A preacher who steals sermons is not honest. If a man steals money he is a thief, that's all; but if he steals a sermon, he is both a thief and a liar. He not only takes what is not his, but he intentionally deceives his audience. The Holy Ghost will not help a man in such work. According to Lafferty, a pulpit plagiarist should wear long moustaches twirled at each corner of his mouth as quotation marks. We have a right to use the labors of others freely, but we should digest what we hear and read, assimilating the substance. It thus enters into the warp and woof of our thinking and becomes our own. Much memory and much thought may go together. We are not likely to read too much if we have strong powers of originality with which to digest and use. But much intellectual food with feeble digestive powers will produce dyspepsia. Digested food becomes bone, sinew, muscle and fat. Undigested food does not nourish the eater and is destroyed for useful purposes. Talmage, Beecher and Spurgeon used by pulpit retailers are only spoiled, not utilized.

(Christian Intelligencer.)

Novels and religious works occupy the foremost places in the publications of the year. The reading public is largely composed of lovers of fiction or lovers of the truth. In summer-time the tendency is to give precedence to the higher style of literature. But for Christian people, what better preparation for active service in the Lord than the reading of some strong biography or a rousing work on Christian life. Especially is this true of those engaged in business pursuits. The world of trade is not helpful to serious reading. Many a volume that would develop and stimulate Christian growth is pushed aside for want of time during business hours, and want of inclination or mental strength after business. But vacation is the golden opportunity. Select your reading to cover the losses amid the cares of business life, with a view to greater usefulness in the service of the Lord. If anyone should read the novel during vacation, it is the minister rather than the membership of the church. A strong novel is as much of a mental tonic to a minister as camp life or sea air is a physical one. Rest is found in a change of view. To the man whose vocation brings him face to face with religious subjects, whose line of thought has the sober cast, the realm of fiction affords the means of mental vacation. If we were allowed to select the volumes for the vacation trunk, the novels would predominate in the minister's, and the religious literature in the member's.

LETTERS.

Such a little thing—a letter.
Yet so much it may contain:
Written thoughts and mute expressions,
Full of pleasure, fraught with pain.

When our hearts are sad at parting,
Comes a gleam of comfort bright
In the mutual promise given:
"We will not forget to write."

Plans and doings of the absent,
Scraps of news we like to hear,
All remind us, e'en though distant,
Kind remembrance keeps us near.

Yet sometimes a slug'e letter
Turns the sunshine into shade;
A bill, our efforts, clouds our prospects,
Blights our hopes, and makes them fade.

Messengers of joy or sorrow,
Life or death, success, despair,
Bearers of affection's wishes,
Greeting, kind, or loving prayer:

Prayer or greeting, were we present,
Would be felt, but half unsaid;
We can write, because our letters—
Not our faces—will be read.

Who has not some treasured letters,
Fragments they're of others' lives—
Relics, some, of friends departed,
Friends whose memory still survives?

Touched by neither time nor distance,
Will their words unspoken last;
Voiceless whispers of the present,
Silent echoes of the past!

Sunday-School Lesson.—August 26.

THE PILLAR OF CLOUD AND OF FIRE.

Numbers ix, 15-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me.—Psa. xliii. 3.

TIME.—B. C. 1490 or B. C. 1299.

PLACE.—The plain of Er Rahah, at the foot of Sinai.

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS.—Author, Moses, (xxxvi. 13); Place of Writing, the Plains of Moab; Time covered by it, nearly thirty-nine years; Name, suggested by the two numberings of the people, recorded in chapters 1 to 3, and 26; Purpose, to record the census of the tribes, the appointment and consecration of the Levites to the service of the tabernacle, the inauguration of certain rites and offerings, the sojourn in the wilderness, the march to Moab, and to illustrate the providential care and discipline of God, as an example for future ages.

15. On the day that the tabernacle was reared up—The full account is given in Exodus xl. Edersheim thus alludes to it: "All was now quite in readiness—means, ordinances and appointed channels of blessing—and all was in waiting. One thing only was needed; but upon that the meeting and the efficacy of everything else depended. But God was faithful to his promise. As in believing expectancy Israel looked up, "the cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle." Outside, visible to all, rested "upon the tent" that cloud and pillar in which Jehovah had hitherto guided them and would continue so to do. But within that tabernacle itself there was yet another and unapproachable Presence. For "the glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle." And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle."—Cloud covered the tabernacle—The account of the cloud covering the tabernacle is repeated in this place, inasmuch as the history which follows relates to the removal of the tabernacle under the guidance of the same cloud which covered it at its erection. The tent of the testimony—That is, that part of the tabernacle in which was the testimony, or the ark of the testimony, for there the cloudy pillar stood. At even ... the appearance of fire, until the morning—That they might better discern it, and direct themselves and their journeys or stations by it. The dark side of the cloud afforded a grateful shade by day, and the bright side served to supply light by night.

16. So it was always—The covering of the dwelling with the cloud which shone by night as a fiery look, was constant, and not merely a phenomenon which appeared when the tabernacle was first erected, and then vanished away again. While it had hitherto appeared sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, it was now found on the tabernacle only; so that from the moment that the sanctuary was erected, and the glory of the Lord had filled the sacred edifice, the Israelites had to look to the place which God had chosen to put his name there, in order that they might enjoy the benefit of a heavenly Guide. In like manner the church had divine revelation for its guide from the first—long before the Word of God existed in a written form; but ever since the setting up of that sacred canon, it rests on that as its tabernacle, and there only is it to be found. It accompanies us wherever we are to go, just as the cloud led the way of the Israelites.

17. When the cloud was taken up—That is, rose to a higher elevation, so as to be conspicuous at the remotest extremities of the camp. That was a signal for removal; and, accordingly, it was properly called (verse 18) "the commandment of the Lord." It was necessary that the hosts of Israel should be always in a watchful state, and ready to obey at once the intimations given to them of the divine will, thus affording a striking type and pattern to the Christian Church, and teaching it both collectively and individually to seek and to follow the guidance of its divine Head, whose promise is, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The children of Israel journeyed—The direction either for marching or for resting was given by the cloud in which the divine Presence was. But for actual signal to move, two silver trumpets were to be used by the sons of Aaron. A prolonged alarm indicated the commencement of the march. At the first alarm the eastern, at the second, the southern part of the camp was to move forward; then came the tabernacle and its custodians, the western, and finally the northern part of the camp. Naphtali closing the rear. On the other hand, when an assembly of the people was summoned, the signal was only one blast of the trumpets in short, sharp tones. In general, and for all times, the blast of these silver trumpets, whether in war, on festive, or on joyous occasions, had this spiritual meaning: "Ye shall be remembered before Jehovah your God." Where the cloud abode, there ... pitched their tents—The settling down of the cloud upon the tabernacle we can only understand in the following manner, as the tabernacle was all taken to pieces during the march, namely, that the cloud visibly descended from the height at which it ordinarily soared above the ark of the covenant, as it was carried in front of the army, for a signal that the tabernacle was to be set up there; and when this had been done, it settled down upon it.

18. As long as the cloud abode ... rested in their tents—Altogether the camp is supposed to have occupied about three square miles. The standards of the different encampments are nowhere described in Scripture; but Jewish tradition has given to the four leaders the four cherubic symbols—to Judah the lion, to Reuben the man, to Ephraim the ox, and to Dan the eagle: while the ground on which these symbols were embroidered was of the same color as the precious stone in the breast-plate of the high-priest, on which the name of the tribe to which it belonged was engraved.

19. Kept the charge of the Lord—A desert life has its attractions, and constant movements create a passionate love of change. Many instances show that the Israelites had strongly imbibed this nomad habit, and were desirous of hastening to Canaan. But still the pleas of the cloud indicated the command of God; and whatsoever irksomeness they might have felt in remaining long stationary in camp, "when the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle many days, they kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not." Happy for them had they always exhibited this spirit of obedience, and happy for all if, through the wilderness of this world, we implicitly follow the leadings of God's providence and the directions of God's Word.

20. So it was, when the cloud was a few days—As the preceding verse had contemplated a time when the cloud tarried many days, so there were also occasions on which it tarried but few days.

21. The cloud ... from even unto the morning, etc.—It is obvious from this verse that there must have been sentinels constantly watching by night as well as by day, whose office it was to give notice when the cloud was removed. The encampment and its movements were peculiar to the desert. Many usages mentioned in connection with it must have perished at once on their entrance into settled life. But relics of such a state are long to be traced both in their language and in their monuments. The very words, "camp" and "tents," remained long after they had ceased to be literally applicable. "Without the camp" was the expression applied even to the very latest events of Jerusalem. In like manner the national war-cries go back to this early state. The shout, "Rise up, O Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered; let them also that hate thee flee before thee," was incorporated into the psalms of the monarchy; but its first force came from the time when, morning by morning, it was repeated as the ark was slowly and solemnly raised on the shoulders of the Levites, and went forth against the enemies of God in the desert. "Arise, O Lord, into thy resting-place! Thou and the ark of thy strength." "Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth! Before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh, stir up thy strength and come and help us." Grand and touching as is this address, taken in its application to the latest decline of the Jewish kingdom, it is still more so when we see in it the reflected image of the order of the ancient march, when the ark of God went forth, the pillar of fire shining high above it, surrounded by the armed Levites, its rear guarded by the warlor tribes of Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh, the brother and sons of Joseph, doubtless intrusted with the embalmed remains of their mighty ancestor.

22. Whether ... two days ... month ... year, that the cloud tarried—The words of Moses, when the ark set forward and when it rested, are in full keeping with what we have shown to be the idea of the book, as that not of a journey through a wilderness, but of a warlike expedition, an army advancing to battle and to victory. When it set forward, he said, "Rise, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee." When it rested he said, "Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel." Warfare comes first; rest follows. Now is the day of the church militant; but the day of the church triumphant shall come, when the Lord shall return to the "ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands" of the true "Israel of God."

23. They kept the charge of the Lord—They obeyed God herein against their own inclinations; which, because it was remarkable in so obstinate a people, is so largely and particularly mentioned here, as an instance of their obedience, and as an aggravation of the many following instances of their apostasy and disobedience.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

If we submit ourselves to God's guidance, he will not reveal to us beforehand the chart of our lives. He will simply lead us step by step, day by day.

If we trust him implicitly and obey him from the heart, all irksome, impatient feelings will cease, and life will be filled with a rich content.

To "rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him" "brings us to our journey's end swifter than our feet." God's Word is "a lamp to our feet, a light to our path."

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

We are intensely impressed, by day and by night, that the heated term is upon us. Health generally prevails, but in some localities there is much sickness. Fruit and melons are abundant, and the prospect for a full corn and cotton crop is very cheering. Surely the people should be grateful and "honor the Lord with their substance and with the first fruits of all their increase."

Protracted and camp meetings are now the order of the day. Good reports come from those already held, and hopes are entertained for those to be held that they may result in great increase of membership and spiritual power to the church. "O, Lord, send now prosperity!"

The preachers are mostly in place, and at work with much zeal and hope. Two of the presiding elders, Bros. Mitchell and Barcroft, have been compelled on account of failing health to take a few weeks' respite from their work. We trust that travel and rest will so restore them that they shall soon be enabled to resume their "loved employ."

The Corinth District Conference was held at Corinth, July 6-8, and the Aberdeen at Pontotoc, July 27-29. They were both well attended by preachers and laymen, and by many visitors, especially of the women who are helpers in the gospel. A Sunday-school Conference was held on each occasion on the day preceding the District Conference. The discussions and interchange of views on Sunday-school interests were inspiring to those present, and will doubtless result in much and lasting good to this department of church work.

The colporteur and Sunday-school agent was on hand at both of these meetings, having his say and doing his work according to ability and opportunity. He was cordially received and kindly treated by all, and was enabled to dispose of $70 worth of good literature at Corinth, and $23 worth at Pontotoc.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. A. J. Foster, the writer spent one week in Tocopola circuit, visited three churches, preached eight sermons, held two children's meetings, and sold about $50 worth of books and church papers. He left the pastor in charge of an interesting meeting that doubtless resulted in good.

Two days were spent in Inka with Bro. Cogdell and his people—one sermon preached and $11 of books sold.

The above-mentioned work and visitations of the Conference colporteur, together with a few days at La Grange and Bolivar, Tenn., all performed in the hot month of July.

The colportage work in this Conference is developing finely. Already there has been as much accomplished this year as during the whole of any previous year.

The Sunday-school cause is also on the advance in most places visited and heard from. We thank God and take courage.

Action of District Conferences.

OUR LITERATURE.

The Aberdeen District Conference, North Mississippi Conference, passed the following:

We find that our general organ is circulated more widely than any other church paper. This is, we think, as it should be. This paper requires no recommendation from us, as it carries with its every number its own recommendation. We urge upon you, brethren, to work for our general organ.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is our Conference organ, and presents its claims to us as such. While we do not think that it is what it should be in every particular, yet there is much good substantial reading in it, and we commend it to our people and urge upon them to give it a liberal support. There is one feature in this paper we would call special attention to; and that is, the notes on the Sabbath-school lessons by Bishop Vincent, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This, we think, adds much to its worth.

Our Sunday-school literature is not surpassed, and we are glad to know that it is being used in all our Sunday-schools. The magazine deserves special mention. Only fifty cents a year, it is very valuable, especially to teachers. We would recommend that a series of supplemental lessons on the cardinal doctrines of our church be placed in our senior and intermediate quarterlies.

We heartily commend Bro. G. W. Bachman and his work to our people.

The Alexandria District Conference, Louisiana Conference, adopted this paper:

Among the many evils with which we, as pastors, have to contend, the one which is most prominent, widespread and deleterious in effect, is some of the literature and cheap periodicals of the present day. We regret to notice also the downward tendency as regards morals in the majority of the daily papers now published. Anything sensational, no matter how vile in conception and prurient in detail, is given in extenso in the morning journals, and scattered broadcast in households where it falls into the hands of the young who, failing to see through the cloak of glowing language surrounding the narrative of what is probably an infamous crime, are attracted by the idea of notoriety; and seed is thus sown which too frequently brings forth bitter fruit in future days. More especially is this the case with the cheap weekly story paper and the paper-backed novelette; and we can not use language strong enough to condemn such literature and to exhort and plead with our members to keep all such out of their houses and the hands of their children.

In contradistinction to this class of literature is a pure, moral journal devoted to chronicling the doings of the church of God on earth, and which, while giving the important news of the day, does not pander to a depraved taste for anything and everything that is sensational—a journal, the reading of which improves the mind of the reader and, at the same time (it may be at times), almost insensibly leads him to take a higher view of things than otherwise would be the case. On the young mind this is especially visible. Children who are raised in a family accustomed to subscribe for such a journal take a delight in reading it in preference to any other; and the excellent influence of such reading is perceptible years after. And that

Whereas, We, the members of the Alexandria District Conference, in session now assembled, being deeply sensible that we have in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE an organ which, under its present management, fulfills all that is wanted in this direction, desire to place on record the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in our opinion the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE ("our ADVOCATE") under its present able management fills the requirements of a first-class religious weekly—pure, moral, elevating and instructive in tone; and we especially commend the expositions of the Sunday-school lessons now appearing therein.

Resolved, That, recognizing to the full the power and influence for good exercised by such a paper, and the necessity for placing it in the hands of as many of the families of our members as possible, we pledge ourselves, individually and collectively, to support the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to the best of our ability, and with renewed zeal and diligence endeavor to get new subscribers and largely increase its circulation.

OUR SCHOOLS.

The Alexandria District Conference passed this preamble and resolutions in regard to Centenary College:

Whereas, Centenary College of Louisiana, at Jackson, La., the only male institute depending upon the Louisiana Conference for support, is not receiving the patronage it deserves, the last catalogue showing a roll of only fifty-seven students; And, whereas, The trustees of this college, at their recent annual meeting, elected Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt president, to be assisted by four able and competent professors; And, whereas, This school, thoroughly manned and equipped, is not and has not been canvassed within the bounds of this district, except occasionally by the presiding elder and some of our preachers; And, whereas, Other denominations are vigorously drumming for and receiving boys in our very midst by means of employed agents; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we do earnestly and fully endorse and recommend this grand old college to all the Methodist families and the public generally within this district and Conference as a proper place for the mental, moral and religious training of their boys.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Alexandria District Conference, who are pastors, will see to it that Centenary College be publicly and privately recommended and advertised by special addresses to congregations, as well as by thorough distribution of catalogues where they will do the most good, and that we recommend the college to send out a good, active agent to canvass for the institution.

Resolved, That we will do all we can to raise the assessments for education, thus helping our college in its noble work of educating, free of charge, the young ministers and preachers' sons that are there in attendance.

This paper, in behalf of Mansfield Female College, was adopted by the same body:

Whereas, The Louisiana Conference owns a first-class female college at Mansfield, La., under the presidency of Rev. A. D. McVoy, and a competent corps of teachers; And, whereas, This school is not patronized to any appreciable extent within the bounds of this district; some of our Methodist parents even sending their daughters to other denominational schools, owing mainly to energetic work of salaried agents from those institutions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as preachers, will make, as far as we can, in every circuit a thorough canvass of our people, urging upon them the duty and importance of sending their girls to this school of our own already in our midst.

Resolved, That we will secure circulars of this school and scatter them broadcast wherever practicable, thus counteracting, in some measure, the work among our own people.

Resolved, That we gladly welcome among us the president of Mansfield Female College, Rev. A. D. McVoy.

Centenary College.

I was gratified to learn through the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, of July 26, that Dr. Hunnicutt has accepted the presidency of Centenary College. I have been impressed for several years with his eminent ability to take charge of and manage one of our first educational institutions. He has an aptness to instruct. His whole make-up, intellectually, is in the line of an instructor, an able sermonizer, profoundly learned in the Scriptures, a practical Christian, a man of devoted piety, knowing what to teach and how to teach. He is the very man to take charge of Centenary College, and we predict for him a useful and successful career.

The membership of our church should endow that seat of learning, and heartily join the efforts of the trustees in raising the $25,000 this year. The writer has for many years been a helping friend of this college. Our Conference is to be able again to contribute to its endowment. The first appeal in behalf of this college was made in this city by Dr. Winans, in 1845. Dr. J. C. Keener, now Bishop Keener, visited our section in 1856 or 1857, and took up quite large subscriptions in its behalf. He has always been an advocate of Centenary since its location at Jackson, La. Now is the time to again render a helping purse. The new president will feel that the church endorses him, and will sustain him with their patronage and means. Those of our brethren that have volunteered aggressive work in this direction should be commended.

From the Work.

BUENA VISTA CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a good meeting at Macedonia. Fine revival in the church; fifteen conversions, five accessions, and all the collections ordered by the Conference raised in full. The people at this point have determined to build a new church, and we think they are going to do it. The general outlook is better at this church than ever before. We were assisted by Revs. A. B. Dearing and R. H. Kennedy. Bro. Dearing was with us but a short while, but Bro. Kennedy was with us throughout the meeting, and did as faithful service as could be asked of anyone. As an appreciation of his services, the people presented him with a copy of an Oxford Teacher's Bible.

HESLEP R. TUCKER.

BETHEL, WASHINGTON CHARGE.

MR. EDITOR: I began a protracted meeting at this church on the fourth Sunday in July. Bro. Davies, of Opelousas, came to my assistance the evening of the first day, and remained until the close the following Thursday night. The gospel was preached and the great truths of Christianity were expounded with power by Bro. Davies. Our membership was greatly strengthened, and five new members were taken into the church. Praise the Lord!

We have yet one more meeting to hold, on Waxia. Bro. Harry, of Abbeville, has promised to help me the third Sunday in this month. I am hoping and praying for a pentecostal time.

H. S. JOHNS.

CAMDEN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a very interesting and profitable meeting of eleven days' duration in Camden. Visible results are: Nine valuable accessions, several conversions, and many of the older members quickened and revived. Thanks to Bros. C. A. Powell and W. B. Lewis for efficient help. May the Lord abundantly bless those brethren!

IRA H. ROBERTSON, P. C.

LARTO, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We have been holding some revival meetings on this circuit with great success. The most notable one was at Larto. This settlement is on the lake of that name, lying in the fork of Black and Red rivers. It has always had a bad name abroad, and I was advised on coming to this circuit not to go there if I valued my life. I resolved to venture a trial trip, and, to my surprise, I found the people as courteous and hospitable as can be found anywhere. I found they had never had the gospel, and were hungering and thirsting for it. I promised them a protracted meeting—something they had never had. At the proper time they prepared for us; and I must mention the novel manner in which it was conducted. Instead of the ladies worrying themselves almost to death cooking for it (as is the case in most rural districts), they only cooked a lot of plain bread to carry, and then the men in proper turns killed the meat (mutton, kid, pork and beef), and barbecued it on the ground, so all enjoyed the meeting alike. I was assisted by Bros. Kimball and Smith, the latter a local preacher. The Lord met us on the ground the first day, and at the end of five days there were thirty-eight accessions and many conversions. It was a meeting of the primitive Methodist type in every respect.

I have now a church of forty-three members (five having joined at a meeting before where six months ago it was considered dangerous to go. We have no house, but will build one soon. The best part of all is they have gone to work. They at once began two weekly prayer meetings, and nearly all pray in public. They did not forget either that "they that preach the gospel shall live by the gospel." May the Lord continue his visitations on Larto!

GEO. T. ASHLEY, P. C.

GLADE, Louisiana.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a very gracious protracted meeting at Fannin Church, which began Friday night before the fourth Sunday in July, and continued eight days, with three services a day. From the commencement to the close of the services God's presence was felt with increased power. The visible results are three infant and five adult baptisms, four conversions or regenerations, eight accessions to our church, and a general revival of religion in the souls of believers. Many of God's children, both sons and daughters, took up their crosses nobly, and in public offered to our common heavenly Father the sacrifices of prayer, praise, and thanksgiving for his blessings.

The closing service was one long to be remembered by us, when scores of people from eight to eighty years of age came forward and gave to me their hand, promising to run the Christian's race, so as to obtain the prize; with an occasional overflowing of God's love, here and there, in the congregation. Nor did their anthems of praise and shouts of victory cease with the benediction, for some were so overwhelmed with a sense of God's love that, while leaving the churchyard, they continued to give expressions to their joy. And on entering their home some renewed their praises and shouts of victory to God. For unto him be all the praise.

J. N. TUCKER.

WOODSIDE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I have been laboring hard, preaching earnestly and praying fervently since I arrived on this circuit (Woodside and Ebenezer). Light is beginning to dawn; the leaven is beginning to work; the revival fire is kindling. I have just closed an eight days' meeting near Terrel's school-house, in the grove, where hundreds attended, and from thirty to fifty were found at the altar every service. There were thirty-five or forty conversions, and as many seekers left when we closed. Eleven accessions to our church, and others to come. The entire community was stirred from its very center. We will have other meetings to report you soon. Our excellent presiding elder, Bro. Cassity, did the most of the preaching for us. Toward the close of the meeting we had Bro. McVoy, son of the president of Mansfield College, with us. He did good service. This is just the beginning. Pray for us.

FRED WHITE, P. C.

The Boys and Girls.

BY D. W. FOSTER, M. D.

What is to become of the boys and girls of the present and the coming generations? Early in the primeval age of the world the fiat went forth from the Almighty, emphatically, that "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." And, again, early in the Christian era the divine command was issued, "that if any would not work neither should he eat." But, notwithstanding the promulgation of these inevitable laws, long since the absurd idea has become prevalent that they may be evaded with impunity, and that it is not genteel or respectable to work for a living—that is, to do manual labor is special and unbecoming gentlemen and, much more so, ladies. Now, it is self-evident that all can not be gentlemen and ladies in that false sense. The world can not exist without manual labor—and a great deal of it, at that. Yet there are many (old as well as young) who have come to think that people, however good and honest and industrious and sensible and deserving they may be, can not be considered exactly as gentlemen and ladies unless they occupy only certain few positions, and do only certain few things, which distorted public sentiment considers to be the only respectable occupations. Perhaps it is as much, if not more, false shame than downright laziness that prevents many people from bettering their circumstances by "doing with all their might whatever their hands findeth to do." The false notions about the relative degrees of respectability of the different occupations of life is, no doubt, a great obstacle in the way of many working their way from pinching want to comfortable circumstances—from poverty to affluence even. The disproportion between production and consumption is entirely too great. The non-producers are ruinously in excess; and without a proper balance among all the vocations and industries in life public prosperity and well-being can not exist.

This world is a big thing, and there are innumerable multitudes of people in it, and a vast deal is needed for them to live and accomplish the objects of their creation and continued existence. And yet there are comparatively only a few of those positions and occupations supposed to be genteel enough for gentlemen and ladies to engage in; while there is a world-full of other honest and necessary business-work that must be done, but which is regarded, falsely by too many, as unbecoming genteel people. The making of bread in the field or workshop is considered beneath the dignity of a gentleman, by far too many; or it is looked upon by them as out of the question for a lady to spoil her pretty hands to cook

God bless the women! The world could not get along without them. At least, there is one man in it that would not if he could; though he might have the house and kitchen both full of the best of domestics, and the world outside was filled with the best of men. Woman was God's best gift to man, except the Savior himself. And society could not possibly exist without her heavenly influence—it would break up in confusion, and perish in chaos, in twenty-four hours without it. And strong man ought to put around her his arm of protection and support; and he ought to love her, comfort her, honor and keep her in sickness and in health. And he would be utterly unworthy of her if he should ever require of her more than God and true love approve.

How many boys think it more genteel and respectable to clerk, even if it be in a chicken wagon traveling along the road, or in a whisky den where vile loafers congregate to drink and gamble, curse and fight, than to make an honest living on a farm, or in a shop, and become useful, honorable and independent members of society? Alas! far too many boys entertain such silly ideas, and swarm around such places, seeking employment even at starvation wages, instead of going into the fields and shops to work and produce necessary and valuable commodities, while they preserve their self-respect and that of all good, sensible people, and eventually attain unto the best positions and honorable independence, as all may do—at least, comfortably well. While a few clerks struggle into success and build up good homes and fortunes, untold numbers fall far short of anything much worth, and hordes of them never accomplish anything worth living for; not that clerking is not a proper and respectable occupation, but the unfortunate mistake is, that it is considered to be more proper and respectable than occupation in the field or shop, and, therefore, that business is overcrowded, beyond profit or reason, and great loss is sustained and many boys ruined. Even a great many farmers and mechanics have made money enough to educate their children before they conceived the absurd idea that it was not exactly genteel to work in the field or shop, and hence encouraged their sons to crowd into some of the professions, which were considered to be much more respectable than the occupations in which their fathers succeeded well and were respectable also. But success is more difficult, uncertain and slower, with a few exceptions, in the learned professions; and, while a few attain fame and fortune, many meet with disappointment, and worry through life dissatisfied, whereas they might have achieved abundant success in some other business, and been useful and happy and respectable, too, if they had not been misled by the alluring, but deceptive phantom of the one, and deluded by the mistaken views of the other. There is no position in this life wherein the sweet is wholly unmixed with bitter. Too often the thorn is overlooked or disregarded until it pricks the hand that would pluck the rose.

It is a fact that every individual was endowed in his creation by the Almighty with the peculiar and necessary faculties for a certain special occupation, and if he adopts it in time and prosecutes it (whatever it may be) faithfully, he is bound to succeed. God and all creation will be in his favor, and he will become useful and happy and, of course, respectable, as sure as there is a God that overrules the universe. There is nothing surer than that. That is the very secret of success. And no false notions or allurements—nothing ought ever be allowed to turn him aside from that, his natural channel, into any other whatever, however inviting and promising it may seem or be represented. He had about as well undertake to run his chicken wagon on water, or paddle his canoe on land, as to try to succeed out of the sphere in which he was created to operate in.

And now it is high time, and absolutely necessary, that some practicable measures be adopted and put into effective operation to correct all these false sentiments about the relation, respectability and importance of the various avocations in life; and that strenuous efforts be made to remedy the great and growing evils cropping out all around the mistakes that have already been made, and are still being made in these matters. Let the various avocations be duly respected and properly encouraged. Didn't Abraham Lincoln split rails before he was elected President? Didn't William Henry Harrison live in a log cabin before the people of the United States sent him to the White House? And was not Mr. Lincoln respectable while he was splitting rails? And was not Mr. Harrison a gentleman while he was living in a log cabin? Mr. Lincoln could not have made bread for his family without rails to fence in his crop. These rails were important things, essential for the support of his family, and it was praiseworthy, respectable—yea, honorable in him to split them, and make bread in the field, even if he had to rent it, or work on shares, if that had been the best he could have done at the time to support his family, rather than let them suffer want, as some poor deluded creatures do. And so, everyone who will always do the very best he can, in whatever circumstances he may find himself, will be sure to prosper and advance to better fortune, as Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Harrison did. Mr. Harrison had no mansion at one time, and he could not have protected his wife and children from the storm without a cabin, and it was natural and honorable for him to build one to shelter them from the inclemencies of the weather. And who will presume to say that the memories of those gentlemen ought not to be as much respected for those necessary duties performed with their own hands for the sustenance and comfort of their families as for any they ever discharged afterwards for the welfare and honor of their country.

The Character of the Bible.

BY REV. ROBERT HAVERS.

Blessed is that people who are governed by the laws of this book. It is so complete a system that nothing can be added to it or taken from it. It contains everything needful to be known or done. It affords a copy for a king or a rule for a subject. It gives counsel to a senate, authority to a magistrate, cautions a witness, requires an impartial verdict of a jury, and furnishes the judge with his sentence. It entails honor to parents and enjoins obedience of children. It prescribes the rule of the ruler, and the authority of the master. It commands the subject to honor and the servant to obey. It promises the blessings and protection of its Author to all who walk by its rule. It promises food and raiment, and limits the use of both. It points out a faithful and eternal guardian to the departing husband and father, and tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children and in whom his widow is to trust. It defends the rights of all and reveals vengeance to every defrauder. It is the first book, the best book, the oldest book in the world. It is a brief recital of all that is past and a certain prediction of all that is to come. It settles all matters in debate, resolves all doubts, and eases the mind and conscience of all scruples. It reveals the only living and true God; the Father, the Son and the Spirit; one God and Savior Jesus Christ as the Savior of men, and leads the way to him, setting aside all other gods, describing their vanities. In short, it is a book of laws to show right and wrong; of wisdom, that condemns all folly and makes the foolish wise; of truth, that depicts all lies, confutes all error. It is the Book of Life, showing the way from everlasting death.

It is the most compendious book and the most authentic history. It contains the earliest antiquities, the most wonderful occurrences, the most heroic deeds, and unparalleled wars. It describes the celestial, terrestrial and infernal regions, the origin of angelic myriads, human tribes and infernal legions. It will instruct the profoundest artist, teach the best rhetorician, confound the most skillful arithmetician, puzzle the wisest anatomist, and exercise the nicest critic. It corrects the vain philosopher, guides the wisest astronomer. It exposes the subtle sophist and makes diviners mad. It is a complete code of laws, a perfect book of lives of travel and of voyages. It is the best covenant that was ever agreed upon, the best deed that was ever sealed, and the best evidence that was ever produced. To understand it is to be wise indeed. To be ignorant of it is to be buried in darkness. It is the king's best copy, the magistrate's best rule, the housewife's best guide, the servant's best directory and the young man's best companion. It is the schoolboy's spelling-book and the learned man's masterpiece. It affords knowledge of witty inventions and dark sayings for the grave, and it is its own interpreter. It encourages the wise, the hardy warrior, and the spiritual racer, and promises an eternal reward to the conqueror. And, to crown all, the Author is without partiality or hypocrisy, for in him is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

"Blessed Bible, what a treasure!
Who its sacred worth can tell?
Here I search with holy pleasure
Stores of truth unsearchable."

God's presence is enough for toil and enough for rest. If he journey with us by the way, he will abide with us when nightfall comes; and his companionship will be sufficient for direction on the road, and for solace and safety in the evening camp.—Macbren.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed in benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Briefs.

"No man climbs to the throne of God by the pathway of the stars who has not first faced him in the inner sanctuary of his own soul."

Did you ever notice that Paul's great chapter on the Resurrection is followed immediately by these words: "Now concerning the collection for the saints"?

Hawthorne says: "Christian faith is a grand cathedral with divinely pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory, nor can possibly imagine any; standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendors."

Religion is for every-day life and work. The Christian should plow in the field, sell goods, work in the shop, travel on the road, wash dishes, make up beds, broil steaks, sweep the house, and do everything and say every word as a Christian. The religion that does not prove its value in the little things of life needs to be examined as to its genuineness.

We do hear some curious praying sometimes. Some very sensible people offer to God some very senseless petitions. The general idea of prayer is, that it is asking for something, the need of which is felt. There is, however, much prayer that has no element of asking about it—much that never reveals a felt want in the soul of him who offers it. We once heard an old minister say that to ask God to do for us what we can do for ourselves will not pass for true praying. To ask God to do for us that which it is our duty to do is to ask him to pay us a premium upon our laziness. We have heard persons pray to God to "consecrate them to his service." Now, consecration is a thing that belongs to us. It is our simple and plain duty to consecrate ourselves to God. To pray to God to consecrate us, when he requires us to do that very thing, is to pray for him to do our work. We have no reason to think any such praying will be answered.

THE NORTHMEN IN CONVENTION.—During last week a convention was held, in this city, of citizens of Louisiana who have come among us to live. It was a large gathering, and a fine-looking body of men. They represented many States of the Union, and were cordially welcomed by our citizens. The Mayor, Dr. Palmer, President of the Board of Health, and others, made addresses of welcome, which were responded to with heartiness. These men, coming from all parts of Louisiana, spoke words of praise and commendation for our climate, soil, productions and people. Such meetings do good in paving the way for a fuller and freer fellowship. They advance the interests of the State by proclaiming to the world the views which Louisiana's adopted sons hold in regard to her resources and her possibilities. In this way a better class of immigrants will be reached and induced to try their fortunes with us.

The Board of Supervisors for Hinds county, Miss., recently refused to allow an election to be held in November, next, under the local option act. This puts such an election beyond January, 1889. That county is to be congratulated.

Collegiate Training.

There is a widespread and popular idea abroad that a college education is beneficial only to boys who intend to enter some of the professions. When a boy announces his intention to be a farmer or a mechanic, it is immediately concluded that to give him the benefit of a college training will be so much money thrown away and so much time wasted. It is thought that the place for such a boy is between the plow-handles or behind the work-bench. It is thought that reading, writing and arithmetic to the double rule of three will be sufficient education for such an one; and parental authority dooms a young mind to ignorance of some of the grandest facts in God's universe, and to a state of servitude to narrowness of mental vision which will contract the intellectual powers continuously and forever.

The idea that a college education is beneficial only to those intending to enter "the learned professions" has a bad effect also upon some boys. A farmer, whose life has demonstrated to him that his education was defective, endeavors to remedy the defect by affording his sons the full benefit of a college training. Now, the popular idea gets hold of these boys, and after graduation they have no notion of following their father's calling. They must engage in professional life, and oftentimes, instead of a cultivated farmer or a skilled mechanic, society has to put up with a pettifogging lawyer, or suffer under the practice of a third or fourth-rate doctor!

This popular idea, which is doing great harm in these two directions, is the outcome of a most defective view of education. It is presumed by people holding it that education is simply the gathering of facts, and the storing of information in the mind. Upon such a view, perhaps, the idea may be, in part, correct. A man need not know the principles of higher mathematics in order to run a straight furrow across his field. It is not essential for him to be acquainted with the roots of Greek verbs in order to push a jack-plane. But that is not the right view of education. The gathering of information and storing of facts are simply the preliminaries to an endless process. That process is continuous cultivation, resulting in perpetual enrichment. It has been said that "in reality there is only one point of difference between people in this country, and it is that of cultivation." Two farmers live side by side; they cultivate the same kind of soil; they sow and reap the same products; they deal in the same markets; yet they are as opposite as the poles, and their farms and all pertaining thereto bear the impress of the characters of the owners. The one farm seems to be under the direct influence of the spirit of progress and improvement. Year after year the farm is enriched and beautified and adorned by the best products of skill. Art and science contribute to make the wilderness blossom and build up a home fit for the habitation of an immortal, progressive spirit. The other seems to be presided over by the spirit of desolation and decay. The soil loses in value every year. The home is the same uninviting place. The owner plods and plods through every day in the same listless manner. Thus round and round in the same old tread-mill style the years come and the years go and life ends, and the man is poorer in every sense than when he began. What makes this difference? The one is a cultivated farmer, the other an uncultivated farmer. The one has had his mind enriched by the training of a college course. The knowledge of facts and principles has enlarged his mental powers, so that he is able to put ideas to the test of practical use, and lives in direct contact with the moving and active forces about him. "He understands the laws which govern these forces, and works in harmony with them and thus becomes a fountain of fresh life and perpetual growth." The other considered that time and money would be thrown away on a college course of training; so, instead of going to college, he went directly to the plow-handles. He made a "living," he may have "made money;" but if his mind ever went beyond the boundaries of his own fields, or his soul soared above the clods that turned from his own plow-share, nobody ever knew it. The joy of enlarging, enriching culture he never knew. A participation in all the blessed influences growing out of the world's progress, which comes through books and newspapers and communion with the activities about him, he never experienced!

Our observing readers know that this is no sketch of fancy. They have seen these two men many times. The same results they have seen in men of other occupations. The cultivated mechanic is a very different person from the uncultivated mechanic, because he not only knows how to use tools, but he has acquired the knowledge of mechanical principles and how to apply them, and by this acquisition he is enabled to rise to the top of his vocation. We see, then, what education is from its results. It develops mental power, awakens mental energy, dissipates prejudices and enables the mind to understand and apply universal principles, so that the educated man is able to use his knowledge in any given direction. For this reason we say that a college training is as necessary for a farmer as for a lawyer; as necessary for a mechanic as for a doctor; and, what we need now is to patronize our colleges to such an extent that this education shall enter upon and rule our common, every-day life, and thus lift the laborer up into the position God wants him to occupy. We plead for the Methodist boys of Mississippi and Louisiana! Whatever positions they may occupy in the future, they are the hope of the Church and the State, and neither State nor Church can afford to let them grow up uncultivated. We plead with the Methodist parents of Mississippi and Louisiana to discard forever the idea that a college training is intended only for those entering the learned professions. Ours is an agricultural country, and will be for generations to come, and a large proportion of our people must needs be farmers, but they need not be ignorant farmers. For the best good of the land they must be cultivated farmers—men trained in the best and highest schools of the church. Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana, "think on these things."

On Conducting Revival Services.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

At a meeting of a number of ministers at the Seashore, the subject, of what are usually called, "Revival Services," was considered, but no defined theory was presented or discussed; indeed, there can be no settled plan; in the nature of the case the methods must be varied. Different men have different gifts, and ought to use such means as they can use most efficiently.

Of course, it is a great fact recognized by all evangelical men, that the "increase must come from God;" that without his blessing on the methods, no matter what they may be, the methods will be vain. A special service meant to be of an aggressive character, meant to make men feel their need of God, must be preceded and constantly attended by much "fervent and effectual prayer"—the "prayer of faith." The faith of the church should be encouraged to expect gracious results. As far as possible the membership should be put to work. Let the work of visiting and conversing be thoroughly done by pastor, and as many brethren and sisters as can be got to help, with the purpose of drawing the people to church services and awaking an individual concern in personal salvation. Let all who can sing, and profitably lead in holy song, be put to work. The preaching should be appropriate, pointed, earnest, intended to arouse a heartfelt concern in the community on the subject of personal salvation. These sermons and exhortations should be short, and rendered instructive and interesting by judicious and appropriate illustrations drawn from every legitimate source. How my heart has mourned when some brother has got up and aired his vocabulary in some nice and critical speculation on "petra" and "petros." It seemed as though it snowed six inches deep, or a hard frost had fallen. A preacher coming to assist in revival services should ask what had been the character of the preaching up to date, what has the Spirit seemed to own and bless. And he should inquire what is the state of feeling, what seems most needed, and then govern his efforts accordingly. The services should not be suffered to be tedious or grow monotonous. Let there be as much variety as may be consistent with propriety. A praise service, or a promise service may be a useful interlude—or an experience service where the leader sees to it that the prolix and extravagant are avoided. Such services often kindle sparks to a flame, quicken zeal, strengthen faith, and encourage hope.

The general custom among the Methodists in this country and this century has been to invite penitents forward to pray, and for prayer. This was never done in the first seventy years of Methodism in England, or in the United States prior to 1800. This custom grew out of the great number of penitents and the want of rooms for inquiry. It was necessary to draw them out of the throng, to make them accessible for instruction. It was not until Caughey visited Great Britain, that the custom of inviting penitents to the "altar" was introduced there. I do not know that it is common even now.

I once participated in, and partly conducted, a revival service where some five hundred professed faith in Christ, where we reversed the order—we went to the penitents and people in their pews. The service was introduced by songs, prayers and short addresses. Then all who desired to be Christians, and who wished instruction and prayer, were requested to stand up where they were for just a minute. Then we announced that the ministers and a number of competent brothers and sisters were going into the congregation to converse with these seekers of salvation, and that any who wished to leave could do so without formal dismissal. Few only would leave. We had a choir of more than fifty, and two organs, and song books all over the house. Singing began and rolled on in a glorious volume of inspiring song from thirty to fifty minutes. The ministers and active church members were dispersed all over the house, conversing and praying with penitents. The continuous swell of song filled the house, and gave entire privacy to the questions and answers in the pews. This privacy is essential to enable the penitent to forget everything but his needs and his Savior. It was a grand success; but it requires abundant help to work the plan.

In our conversation with inquirers we should be clear, pointed and scriptural. Ascertain the purpose of the penitents, find out their difficulty if possible; then encourage them to trust wholly and promptly on Christ. A good deal that is said to penitents at the "altar" is little better than mere emotional raving that affords no help, but rather distracts and annoys. Tell the penitent to have no theory how God pardons sin; how they will feel when he does. These are in no sense their responsibilities. Their business is to be done with sin, and then to trust only in the saving merit of Christ. Leave all the rest where only it belongs—to God.

Let us never forget penitents have bodies and physical needs like others. If too much crowded, they may suffer for air and be oppressed with heat. They may be in a cramped and painful position, enough to distract their thoughts. Change their positions, have them stand, or sit, or kneel, so as to prevent weariness and a desire to seek rest. Make them physically comfortable, hold on to them, encourage to persistent seeking. Let there be no dreary spaces of silence, except for short, silent prayer. Have such singing as will instruct and help the penitent to Christ. It is too often otherwise.

The ministers at Seashore Camp Meeting requested an article on this subject. I hope this will help young men and elicit something better from the old.

Reading into the Bible.

The following extract from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate suits us as well as if we had written it:

It seems strange, but most of us probably read as much into the Scriptures as we read out of them. We remember distinctly having twice heard a Methodist preacher consume over an hour of precious time trying to show his congregation that the Bible taught the "itinerant policy" as we have it in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was not contending for the scriptural right of a church to adopt this policy, but for the scriptural requirement to do so. More than once have we heard Baptist preachers read into the Bible the necessity of baptism by immersion. Time and again have we heard Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists read into the Bible the necessity of being baptized before partaking of the Lord's Supper. Some people seem to think that the Bible forbids anyone to baptize others, or to administer the Lord's Supper, except he be an ordained minister in some church. There is not a word of all this in the Bible.

Some years ago, in a great conference of a great church, a great man said that the Bible forbid women taking ruling part in the church. But he failed to tell the place in the Bible where the injunction was to be found.

Not long ago we were talking with a pious minister, of very studious habits, on this same subject, and he surprised us by saying that when our Lord chose seventy disciples, and sent them out before him to announce his coming, he chose men only.

He looked very much puzzled when we told him that the Bible did not say or intimate that the "seventy" were all men. Mind you, we are not arguing any of these points, but simply illustrating our text.

One evil effect of this habit is, that it lessens our charity for others. Real Bible truth broadens us, brings us into sympathy with Christ and humanity; but our little notions and dictions which we read into the Bible dwarfs us and excite in us a zeal in their defense in inverse proportion to their value. Because we believe the Bible to be of God, whatever we put into it becomes at once clothed with divine sanction and we fight for it and against all who oppose it, with a fervor and a courage worthy of the truth itself. Our Primitive Baptist brethren oppose a Missionary Board and a prayer meeting with as much heart, as we contend for the same things. And they are as religious as we are.

We want to make a confession: we are as guilty, probably, as anybody of our age of reading things into the Bible that are not there; this we judge to be true on account of the number of them that we occasionally discover; we have spent a good deal of time in the earnest defense of things for which God has not bid us sacrifice our lives; and we have found out that there are few things which are really worth contending for, and these are the things which God has said in the Bible, not what we have read into it.

In a communication received in this office, the oft-quoted exhortation of St. James has been rendered in this way: "Release the devil and he will flee from you." That brings the subject of temptation before us in an entirely new light.

Notes.

The origin of "windfall," in the sense of "good luck," dates from the time of William the Conqueror. It was then a criminal offense to cut timber in the forests. Only such could be gathered as the wind had blown down; hence a heavy windstorm was hailed by the peasants as so much good luck, and from this its modern application.

We commend to your notice, brother preacher, this note from the Southern Christian Advocate:

The elaborated sermon may be a failure in the delivery; it frequently is; but the study put forth in its preparation has probably created power that will be felt on some future occasion. The dead carcass of an elaborated failure has often yielded the sweetest honey in after days. These dry bones have lived. In the matrix of apparently unrequited toil has been generated the grandest efforts of the human mind.

In the matter of taking the collections ordered by the law of the church, we call the attention of all our pastors to the following clip from the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

If a pastor treats a benevolent cause as an incident, it will get only incidental attention and interest from the people. It is fatal to begin by putting the emphasis on the "collection." Let the "cause" get the emphasis. Wake up interest; and the collection will take care of itself. Tell the church about God's plan and commands. Tell about the field, and show what godly men have done there, and how they rejoiced and were exceedingly glad almost in proportion to their very bodily sufferings.

Dr. Tillett, of Vanderbilt University, has in press a history of the hymns prepared for our New Hymn Book. We have had the privilege of examining a few pages of this work, and think it a very valuable contribution to our hymnal literature. The history of a hymn is sometimes a most interesting matter, and sometimes it is necessary to the proper understanding of the hymn itself. If we know why the hymn originated, and how, it increases both our interest in the hymn and its author. Dr. Tillett's book is intended as a companion volume to the New Hymn Book, and, besides a history of the hymns, will contain a biographical index of the authors of our hymns. We will be glad to see such a work widely circulated among our people.

The losses which our religion brings us are very significant. The people who believe that religion is a losing business are correct as the general subject, but woefully incorrect as to details. Men do lose by being religious. They lose corrupt appetites and vindictive passions and perverse natures and guilty consciences and sin-burdened souls. These are tremendous losses! Many a heart-broken wife has lost a drunken husband by religion! Many a poor mother has lost a prodigal son by religion! Many a husband has lost a brawling wife by religion! Who can measure such losses as these? And what is paradoxical about these losses is, that they all are transferred to the other column and help to swell the gains of godliness. Ah, blessed losses! What true man or woman mourns over them?

When a Christian endeavors to do that which neither the endowments of nature nor the acquirements of education nor the bestowments of grace have qualified him for he is most apt to "beat the air." Herein is one of the reasons that accounts for much of the failure in church work. In every such case the result is an absolute waste of spiritual energy. Men are too apt to go before they are qualified. There is a plain law laid down under whose authority all Christian work must be done in order to success, and all Christians should study that law in its application to themselves. The law is promulgated by the Apostle Peter. It is this: "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

"For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich." If we are not careful, we shall make a mistake in the interpretation of the last clause of this magnificent passage. It is very significant that this great thought should have just the setting that it has. While it appears in other forms in various other places in the Scriptures, here it flashes as a great diamond in the midst of lesser beauties of the same kind! The grace manifested in the incarnation of our Lord was the emptying himself out in benevolence and beneficence to the needy, and thus becoming "rich unto all that call upon him." It is through the manifestation of that sort of poverty that we are to become rich. The passage in its connections shows plainly that the meaning is this: This assumption of poverty by our Lord is intended to induce us to become rich in liberality, for, says Paul, "See that ye abound in this grace also."

Personals.

We have received the first number of the Montana Methodist, a new paper started in the interests of our church in Helena, Mon. We welcome the new enterprise, and wish it all success. From this number we are not surprised to read that Bishop Galloway is capturing everybody in the Territory. We are a little surprised, however, to read that he preached "with Herculean power." It may be that the Bishop, having gotten out in the "Wild-West," sees the necessity of acting in the role of "Hercules with his club."

Bro. Pipes, writing from Grand Cane, La., says: "We had a big barbecue here yesterday and realized more than $100 for the new church."

Bro. Edgar, of Waynesboro, Miss., writes: "I have just closed a protracted meeting of eight days' duration at New Hope, eight miles from this place, in the country. Results: thirty accessions, forty conversions, and the whole community for miles around most deeply awakened."

Bishop Keener has changed the time of holding the North Mississippi Conference from November 14 to December 12. See notice in another column.

Bro. Cooper, on the first page, pays a beautiful tribute to the memory of a most promising young preacher who recently passed over into the City of God. The church sits in sorrow because of the departure of her strong, young ministers; but has not God called them to service in another realm?

President Boyd, of the State Normal School, at Natchitoches, La., has favored us with a circular of his school. This is a school established by the State for the purpose of training teachers, and has been in successful operation for several years. It has a fine corps of teachers, and to those who intend to enter the occupation of teaching, there are facilities offered equal to any in the land.

The Los Angeles Christian Advocate has this item of news:

The establishment of our Methodism at Ventura completes the chain of churches of our denomination along the Pacific Coast from San Francisco to San Diego. We have now an unbroken line of churches in every county seat on the coast from the Golden Gate to the State line, and our Methodism surely has cause to rejoice and sing praises to him who is the giver of every good and perfect gift.

Just here we ask the preacher who is reading this, if he has preached on the subject of "Christian Education" this year? See Discipline, page 83—Nos. 16.

The one hundred and forty-fifth conference of the Wesleyans convened in Camborne, England, July 21. Rev. Joseph Bush was elected president and Rev. D. J. Waller, secretary.

A young lady of this city, who has just graduated at the first Kindergarten Institute of New Orleans, is desirous of a position in some town or college in that educational line. The very best references can be given. Address the editor on the subject.

Rev. C. B. Carter, Morgan City, La., writes:

Our meeting was not as demonstrative as some I have seen, but we sowed the seed, and, watered by the Holy Spirit, it is springing up. Two persons joined the church and a good many said they had received a blessing from the hands of the Lord.

We have received an invitation to attend a meeting on Monte Sano, at Huntsville, Ala., August 22, for the purpose of organizing the Monte Sano Chautauqua. Our thanks are tendered hereby to Rev. J. H. Bryson, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. A. B. Jones, of Huntsville Female College, Committee on Invitation.

We have received the first number of "The Mississippi White Ribbon," a monthly paper published at Meridian, Miss., and devoted to the interests of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is edited by Mrs. H. B. Wells, of Fayette, Miss. Price $1 per annum. We wish this new enterprise abundant success.

Bishop Galloway's articles are exceedingly interesting, and growing more. What a wonderful country "the Great West" is! We have already on hand another charming letter for next issue.

BOOKS.

SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY. A complete body of Wesleyan Arminian divinity, consisting of lectures on the "Twenty-five Articles of Religion." By the late Rev. Thomas O. Summers, D. D., LL.D., organizer of Systematic Theology in Vanderbilt University; arranged and revised with introduction, copious notes, explanatory and supplemental, and a theological glossary by Rev. John J. Tigert, M. A., S. T. B. Vol. 2. Price, $2; usual discount to preachers. Published by Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Our Publishing House deserves great credit for the admirable typography and binding, and for the expedition displayed in the volume before us. The eminent author has given us the crystallization of his life-study in as fine a compilation of arguments and statement of facts as any who have preceded him. For a scientific treatise there remains in the manuscript possibly too much of the rhetorician, and too much of the triumphant resonance of the class-room and the pulpit, where he was heard without question or suspicion. The want of conciseness is more than compensated for by lucidity of statement, and the lack of novelty in analysis and arrangement by the facility of his application of great doctrines to current theological and philosophical heresies. If the study of these pages does not bring the sensations of an electric battery, they do the calm assurance of safety. Dr. Summers is always orthodox, always strong and direct. He deserves especial gratitude from Southern Methodism for the formal elucidation and defense of the Twenty-five Articles of our creed, and his scholarly work should find its way into every household in the church.

C. F. E.

SHAKESPEARE PORTRAYED BY HIMSELF. By Robert Waters. Worthington Company, New York. G. F. Wharton and Bro., New Orleans.

"Ten thousand different essays, pamphlets and books have been published concerning the life and writings of Shakespeare." So writes the author of the above book, and he has added one more. The author takes the position that Shakespeare has written his own life in one of his own characters. The argument of the book is, that the character of Prince Hal, in the drama of Henry IV., who is known in history as Henry V., is Shakespeare himself. The theory is worked at very ingeniously and speciously to the author's satisfaction. He characterizes Mr. Donelly's "cryptogram as the height of absurdity. We think his own fanciful theory is just about as absurd, but much easier to get hold of. Like all fanciful things, the book is pleasant reading.

LIFE-WORK. By Rev. John Pipes, of the Louisiana Conference, with an introduction by Bishop H. N. McTyeire. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.

Bro. Pipes has dedicated this little work to the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference; an act of grace which we are confident all the brethren will rejoice in! They will also hasten to procure the book, and read eagerly after him who holds such a large place in the affections of us all. A good part of the book treats of family government, and there is, of course, a chapter on temperance, one on sanctification and one on the Sabbath. Our young preachers will be interested in the chapter on a divine call to the ministry. The chapter of reminiscences is specially interesting. The book closes with forms of prayer for every morning and evening in the week. Get it and read for yourselves.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL NORMAL CLASS. Guide No. 2. Arranged by Rev. J. Spencer, of the Southwest Missouri Conference. Published by our House, in Nashville, for twenty cents.

This is a controversy between Rev. H. M. Wharton, of the Baptist Church, Baltimore, and Rev. C. Carrier, of the Roman Church. It was first published in the Daily American, and is now published in pamphlet form.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

INFATUATION.

Who can tell what the baby says
As he chatters, and laughs, and crows,
And tosses his head, with its tasseled lez,
And plays with his small pink toes?

What is he trying so hard to tell
As he talks in his earnest way?
Come put your ear close, and listen well—
What does the baby say?

All day long the bright little elf,
With his cheeks like a full-blown rose,
Chatters, and laughs, and talks to himself
In a language that no one knows.

Does he speak in Turkish, to match his lez,
Or the language of Hindostan?
Who can tell what the baby says?
Well, his mother thinks she can.

A Bishop's Letter to His Son.

Our "little cousins" will be interested in the following letter from Bishop Galloway to his little son, Ethel:

My Dear Little Boy: I must redeem my promise and write you a letter from this Western country. You remember I was at home last Sunday, and though a day and night were spent in Nashville, a half-day in Chicago and a whole day in St. Paul, I reached Bozeman this morning, Saturday, over twenty-four hundred miles from Brookhaven. So much for railroads. You have seen the Mississippi river at Vicksburg and New Orleans, where it is one mile wide and very muddy. At St. Paul, Minn., it is narrow and the water is clear and beautiful. Only ten miles from St. Paul is the city of Minneapolis, also on the Mississippi river. There I saw again the Falls of St. Anthony. The river rushes over rocks and falls fifteen or twenty feet. That water is used to turn the machinery in great flour mills that make thousands of barrels every day.

Coming west by the Northern Pacific railroad, we passed near several beautiful lakes in Minnesota as clear as crystal and full of fish. Most of the Territory of Dakota I saw was prairie, with very few houses near the line of railway. The houses were small and low, and all the stables and barns were covered with hay, wheat, straw or dirt. That is done to keep the horses and cattle warm in the winter.

Another thing I saw you would have been curious to understand: On both sides the railroad, opposite each cut, there were high fences. Sometimes there were two lines of fence on each side. Now, what do you suppose they were for? To catch the drifting snow and keep it from blockading the track and stopping the engines. But after all that, the trains occasionally have to stop. A gentleman told me that he was a whole week going from here to St. Paul last winter, and that thirteen engines were snowed under along the way and had to be dug out with spades. As much as little boys like snow, I expect that would be too cold for you, wouldn't it?

At one town, near the line of Dakota and Montana, the train stopped for fifteen minutes, and I got out to look through an Indian bazaar. It was a store filled with all sorts of Indian curiosities and stuffed birds and animals. You could have seen just how to fix arrow heads, bows, blow-guns, etc. At that place we changed our time and had to set back our watches. We lost one hour in changing from what the railroad men know as "central" to "mountain" standard time. We left the town an hour before we got there. Isn't that strange? I expect you will have to get mother to explain it to you.

At the town of Glendive, in Montana, we made another stop of several minutes. I got out the ear for a little exercise and to catch my first glimpse of the Yellowstone river. There the river is wide and muddy. Along its banks we ran for three hundred and fifty miles. But I intended telling you something else about Glendive. In the depot I noticed a large card hung against the wall, on which was the picture of a little boy, and over it were these words: "Missing Boy." His name was Ernest C. Eckert, and he had been lost since September 1, 1887, nearly a year. The card said he was out with some men herding cattle near Sioux Falls, Dakota, and had never been heard of since. I thought of his father and mother, and how anxiously they were yet waiting to hear something from their lost boy. And then I wondered what could have happened to him. He might have fallen asleep and been attacked by a bear or other wild beast, or he and his pony may have fallen over some mountain side into a deep canyon, and both been killed. And then I prayed that my little boy might be kept from all harm at home, and that he might grow up to be a good and useful man.

Awaking this morning, I looked out the car window and saw snow on the mountains. And from the house where I am now writing I can see great mountains with green grass on the sides and the tops covered with snow. They look very near, but I am told are ten or fifteen miles away. They have some beautiful ponies here called Cayuse ponies (pronounced Kiwee). They seem to be gentle and travel very nicely.

On Monday morning I expect to start for the Yellowstone National Park. It will take five or six days to go through it and see all the lakes, water-falls, boiling springs, canyons, mountains and other wonders in that "Wonderland." I will try to see some things especially for you and write to you about them. In the meantime you get a map and find out where the Park is, and then look at the pictures in Bro. Stanley's "Rambles in Wonderland," which you will find in the library at home. The guide-books say that near all the principal points on the road through Dakota and Montana hunters can find buffalo, antelope, mountain sheep, bear and other game. But I doubt if any buffalo can be found. I saw a buffalo robe today, but have no hope of seeing the living animal. Don't forget to ask God to bless your father and bring him safely home. Be a good little boy and "keep care" of mother. Give love to sisters and brother.

Your affectionate father,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

BOZEMAN, MON., JULY 14, 1888.

The success of some of the agents employed by B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., is truly marvelous. It is not an unusual thing for their agents to make as high as $20 and $30 a day, and sometimes their profits run up as high as $40 and $50—even more. But we hesitate to tell you the whole truth, or you will scarcely believe we are in earnest. Write them and see for yourself what they will do for you.

Full, Yet Room Enough.

"Mamma," said six-year-old Fred, "I can't love God and you both, so I'll choose you."

"Why, my child! what do you mean by saying that you can not love both?"

"'Cause that's what the Sunday-school lesson says; it says that I must love God with all my heart, and there isn't but one 'all' to it, so if I love him with all, there won't be one bit left for you."

Mamma laughed, and only asked Fred to come with her. Going to the cellar, she quietly asked him to help her fill a large pan with potatoes.

"There," said he, piling on the last big fellow, "it's full."

"Full, yet there's room," answered mother, as she next took a bag of beans and commenced to shake them into the big crevices between the potatoes. She poured and shook until a quart or more had disappeared, and the pan was specked with white.

"Neither is it full yet," she said; and, taking up a shovelful of sand, she scattered that over the pan, and it, too, disappeared, and another after it.

"Not full yet," she said again, as she took up a cup and began pouring water on the pan, and she poured and poured until several quarts were gone.

"Now, you see how a thing can be full, and yet hold more—of something else. So your heart may be full of the love of God, and plenty of room left for me, and papa, and sister, and play, and books."

Household.

MAKE YOUR HOME BEAUTIFUL.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Make your home beautiful—bring to it flowers:
Plant them around you to bud and to bloom:
Let them bring light to enliven your gloom:
Make your own work—one that never has sorrowed—
Of music and sunshine, and gold summer air;
A home-world whose forehead care never has furrowed,
And whose cheeks of bright beauty shall ever be fair.

Make your home beautiful—weave round its portal
Wreaths of the dessamine, and delicate sprays
Of red-fruited woodbine, with gray immortelle,
That blesses and brightens wherever it strays.
Gather the blossoms, too—one little flower,
Varied vechenla, or sweet mignonette,
Still may bring bloom to your desolate bower,
Still may bring something to love and to pet.

Make your home beautiful—sure, 'tis a duty:
Call up your little ones—teach them to walk
Hand in hand with the angel of beauty;
Encourage their spirits with nature to talk;
Gather them round you, and let them be learning
Lessons that drop from the delicate wings
Of the bird and the butterfly—ever returning
To him who has made all these beautiful things.

Make home a hive, where all beautiful feelings
Cluster like bees, and their honey dew bring.
Make it a temple of holy revealings,
And "love" its bright angel with "shadowing wings."
Then shall it be, when afar on life's billows,
Wherever your tempest-tossed children are flung,
They will long for the shades of the home-sweeping willow,
And sing the sweet song which their mother had sung.

Domestic Training for Girls.

Nothing is more significant of the social condition of a people than the training of its girls in domestic life. In Germany the daughters of the noblemen, of the prince, and of the small shopkeeper learn alike to cook, to sweep, and to keep house. After the training in books is over, Fraulein Lena and her royal highness Princess Sophie both begin this home education. There are establishments where they are taken by the year, as in a boarding-school. In one month they wash dishes and polish glass and silver; in another they cook meats; in another bake; in the next "lay down" meat for winter use, or preserve fruit, make jellies and pickles, sweep and dust. Plain sewing, darning, and the care of linen are also taught thoroughly. The German "bewrothed" is thus almost always a thorough housekeeper, and spends the time before marriage in laying in enormous stores of provisions and napery for her future home.

In France a girl begins at twelve years of age to take part in the household interests. Being her mother's constant companion, she learns the system of close, rigid economy which prevails in all French families. If there be but two sticks of wood burning on the hearth, they are pulled apart when the family leave the room, even for a half-hour, and the brands are saved.

English girls of the educated classes seldom equal the German and French in culinary arts, but they are early taught to share in the care of the poor around them. They teach in the village school or they have industrial classes; they have some hobby—such as drawing, riding or animals—to occupy their spare time with pleasure or profit.

These facts are for the girls. They can draw the lesson for themselves.

A JUDICIOUS CHEERFULNESS.—There are few characteristics, writes the Medical Reporter, which go further towards making a successful physician than a judicious cheerfulness, which, while it does not underrate the importance of human ills, does not overrate them either. The bright, sunny disposition of certain medical men does as much good as their medicines. This is the doctor's contribution towards the cure or alleviation of disease. But there is something of the same sort which may be contributed by the patient and his friends. Both he and they may do much to supplement the labors of the physician by maintaining as much as possible a cheerful frame of mind. We have all heard, indeed, of patients so hopeful that they insisted they would get well when the doctor said they would die—and did it, too. Of course, no physician could approve of such insubordination; but we are all willing to have our patients help us by making a good, brave, cheerful fight for recovery as long as there is a fighting chance.

Blessed are the missionaries of cheerfulness.—Lydia M. Child.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

PITTS—Mrs. ELIZABETH A. PITTS was born in Jones county, Ga., 1821, and died in Mansfield, La., July 26, 1888, aged sixty-seven years. For thirty-nine years she lived in Her native State, mostly in Monroe county. In 1860, with her husband and family, she came to Mansfield, La., where she spent the balance of her days.

At the early age of seventeen years she was wedded to Mr. George L. Pitts, with whom she lived and journeyed in matrimonial alliance for more than a half-century, ever true to all the relations of life allotted to woman. Her virtues were nowhere more appreciated than in the domestic circle. It was here she was looked upon by all as a model worthy to be imitated. Having lived her nearest neighbor for twenty years, we can testify to her uniform kindness in this respect: especially in times of sickness and sorrow, she was truly an angel of mercy. For more than forty years she was a Methodist and a Christian. Her Christian character was uniform, symmetrical, beautiful. It is only a few times in life that we are privileged to meet with a character of such sweetness and constancy. When the note came announcing her death, joy was turned into tears of sadness, and we hastened to comfort the bereaved family and help lay her to rest. Her remains were followed by a large concourse of people, and the universal sentiment was, "Farewell, Lippie;" for such was her title in the community, a name given to her, in ante-bellum days, by an afflicted servant child, because of her attention and kindness to it. It signified kindness. We shall behold her next in the likeness of Christ.

J. P.

BROGAN—Resolutions adopted by the Meridian District Conference in memory of Rev. J. C. BROGAN:

Whereas, In the providence of God, our beloved brother and fellow-laborer, Rev. J. C. Brogan, preacher in charge of Paulding circuit, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, has been called to his eternal reward: therefore, be it

Resolved, That we mourn the death of this faithful servant of God, believing, as we do, that no more faithful or useful minister of the gospel has lived or died among us: especially prominent and successful in establishing and building up Sabbath-schools, where the lambs of the flock are taught, from Sabbath to Sabbath, by devout men and women the great truths of the Bible, and in this way are fed upon the pabulum of Christian doctrine and obligation. The good our brother has done in this field is incalculable, and will continue to the end of time. And, though the Master has called the faithful workman to his reward, his memory will continue to linger in the minds of men, which will be a monument to his name more enduring than brass or marble. Farewell, beloved Bro. Brogan. Though we sadly miss your presence and wise counsels, we will fondly cherish your memory and try to emulate your virtues.

Resolved, That a copy of this expression of our love and esteem for Bro. Brogan be furnished his family, and published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

H. P. LEWIS, for Com.

MCKNIGHT—ELISABETH T. MCKNIGHT, wife of our brother, Major Thomas McKnight, was born in North Carolina, 1813, of godly parents, her father being a minister of the gospel. In her twelfth year, sixty years ago, she professed faith in Christ and connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Bro. McKnight came to New Orleans in 1814, at which time Sister McKnight attached herself to the church here, and continued in it until our Father called her to Himself. It has been my happiness for more than thirty-six years to know Sister McKnight as a Christian and a friend, being her pastor many years. She was ever a consistent, uniform, persistent Christian. She was most hospitable, especially to God's ministers; charitable in donations to the poor, and liberal in her offerings to God's cause. She was a sympathizing friend, her face ever greeting you with a sweet smile of friendship and peace. I need not to say, only to those who did not know her, that she was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, a kind neighbor and a true friend. Her sufferings were severe and long, but borne with gracious resignation, trusting God and rejoicing in hope. She and all who saw her great sufferings were glad when her deliverance came. She is an angel now, and a blessed child of light. We confidently expect to meet her among the glorified. A large circle mourn her loss, but sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Her Pastor, J. B. WALKER.

OBER—RUTHERFORD B. H. OBER died, near Lake, Miss., June 7, 1888, aged two years and one day. He was sick three weeks. He bore his illness with great patience, although his sufferings were great. Medical aid was administered by three physicians, but nothing seemed to relieve the sufferer. The good Lord said, "Come up higher;" for he has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." His funeral was preached by Bro. H. R. Caldwell. He spoke many words of comfort to the bereaved family; but, oh! the broken-hearted mother, her grief is so great. But he is not dead; he is only sleeping. He is gone from her, but not forever; only for awhile. How great will be the joy when they meet in the happy by-and-by!

His Aunt, ADA B. DENNIS.

PEGUES—Whereas, It has pleased the Great Ruler, in his providence, to remove from our midst, by a sudden death on July 2, our sister and co-laborer, Mrs. EMILY T. PEGUES, who was also the wife of our Sabbath-school superintendent of long standing, Mr. Marlborough C. Pegues; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we do hereby express our profound and heartfelt sorrow at this, our unquestionable loss from our Sabbath-school of one who has been a willing and efficient teacher, and from the membership of Soule Chapel, Pine Mountain circuit, Holly Springs district, North Mississippi Conference, a useful associate and an acceptable communicant.

Resolved, That, while we deplore this, our loss of our coadjutor's unfailing Christian aid in every good work, we do at the same time recognize an obligation to bow in meek and proper submission to this inevitable infliction from above, feeling assured, as we do, we have "a reason for the hope that is within us" that, under a merciful hand, the termination of her brief suffering here was her eternal gain."

Resolved, We do herewith tender to her afflicted relatives in this vicinity and to her bereaved husband in his home our deepest condolence and earnest sympathy, commingled with our highest appreciative recognition of worth, withal knowing that in this unexpected disposition of the divine decree, as in all, "he doeth all things well."

Resolved, That this, our chart of faithful assurances as our best expression, be presented for publication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, our Conference organ; and, being spread upon its sheets, a copy or copies of the same be furnished to the family of the deceased.

MISS ELISE JARRATT, for Com.

GROUT—At her home in Patterson, La., July 9, 1888, entered into rest CORNELIA MUGGAH, beloved wife of James D. Grout. Sister Grout was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a devout Christian, an affectionate and devoted wife and mother. The latter years of her life were accompanied by much bodily suffering and depression, in all of which she exhibited Christ-like gentleness and patience. A character eminent for unaffected humility, genuine sympathy and fervent charity. She died in the assurances of our Lord's redeeming grace.

F. S. P.

"It is a fact," that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood, overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

The phrase "grace and truth," as twice used by John in the profound prologue to his gospel, is deserving of the serious thought of all who wish to "grow in grace." "The Word," he says, "was made flesh and dwelt among us . . . full of grace and truth;" and again, "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Why does John twice join together these precious words, "grace and truth"? In the first instance because the fullness of the Father's love was manifested in the person and unfolded by the words—the truth—of Jesus. In the second instance it signifies that the meaning and experience of Heaven's helpful grace can be learned and enjoyed only through the study and belief of Christ's words. Thus as the grace of regeneration—the love of Christ which is the life created in the new birth—is gained only by faith in the truth which unfolds the reconciling love of God in Christ, so that new life can only be nurtured, deepened and perfected by being fed upon "the sincere milk of the Word." As surely as a new-born infant dies when deprived of suitable nutriment, so surely does the life that regenerates a man decline and die if it be not properly fed on the truth, which is its divinely appointed nutriment.—Northern Christian Advocate.

Many People refuse to take Cod Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis, General Debility, Wasting Diseases of Children, Chronic Coughs and Colds, has caused physicians in all parts of the world to use it. Physicians report our little patients take it with pleasure. Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

"Difficulty," said Lord Lyndhurst, "is something to be overcome." It is not a thing to daunt us. Grapple with it. Send a quick cry to Heaven for aid, and then lay on. Take it as a chance God has given you to try the mettle of your faith and courage. It is a saying of Burke that "difficulty is a severe instructor set over us by the supreme ordinance of a Parental Guardian who knows us better than we know ourselves, as he loves us better too. He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is thus our helper."

Christ in us, that we may never despair when we are beset by difficulties; we in him, that when we have attained something we may reach forward to greater victories.—Canon Westcott.

Music Boxes and Their Construction.

Although the music box can only be regarded as a superior kind of toy, there is so much ingenuity exhibited in its construction that its mechanism will well repay examination.

It is scarcely necessary to explain that the familiar and not unpleasant tune is produced by means of a series of steel teeth collectively known as the "comb" from its resemblance to that indispensable toilet implement.

These teeth are operated on by minute steel points fixed in a revolving cylinder of brass. The "marking" of these "barrels" is in itself an extremely difficult operation, requiring great skill, as the utmost accuracy is indispensable in fixing the almost innumerable tiny points in their proper positions. In order to execute pieces of greater length than can be set on one barrel, an ingenious device has been introduced, viz: the use of a duplex cylinder in connection with the separate combs.

The fabrication of the comb is also an exceeding troublesome detail. After thoroughly testing the piece of mild cast-steel selected for the purpose, it is polished and annealed, being made red hot, and buried in sawdust to exclude the air. The teeth are then rapidly cut with great exactness by means of a machine specially devised for the purpose.

When the keys are tuned, it frequently happens that some of them prove feeble and unsatisfactory in sound. These are taken out and replaced by others in the following manner: New ones of the same size and shape as the defective ones are made, and immediately beneath each a "foot" is formed. A slot is then filed out of the steel block, of precisely the same size as the "foot" just referred to. The key is then gently hammered into its place and soldered. When the operation has been repeated as often as necessary, all the new keys are filed to the same level as the remainder and tuned by extra filing underneath.

The cylinder which slowly revolves in front of the comb is operated by means of a circular spring coil of tempered steel. In some of the largest instruments this spring represents a motive power of 700 or 800 pounds.

M. Paillard has brought the manufacture of the music box to the highest state of perfection and introduced many "effects," which elevate it almost to the dignity of a musical instrument. Its establishment in Switzerland is of considerable extent, where he employs quite a little army of skilled workmen.—Musical Herald.

INDIA-PAPER.—India-paper, which the Chinese call lehi, is made from hemp, mulberry-bark, cotton, bamboo, rice-straw, barley-straw, and from the interior membrane of silk-worm cocoons. Sometimes the whole of the stalks of bamboo of a year's growth are used. The pulp is mixed, after it has been prepared, with a given proportion of a vegetable gum called hotong in China. The paper is molded in molds made of fine bamboo filament. Those sheets, sixty feet in length, which the Chinese are said to make, are supposed to be fabricated by artfully joining several small sheets at the moment of laying the paper. When taken from the molds, the paper is stretched upon a wall, hollow inside and heated, the surface of which has been coated with a very thin mastic. The application of the mastic is made with a brush, and this accounts for the streaks and roughness that appear on the wrong side of this paper. India-paper, being too thin to bear handling or any strain, is mounted on vellum, which serves as a lining to it, and the white borders of which set it off as a frame would do. The sheets thus prepared are kept in a dry place, far away from the fire, and may be preserved for years.—Popular Science.

Do to-day's duty, fight to day's temptation; do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you can not see, and could not understand if you saw them.—Charles Kingsley.

In cases where Quinine utterly fails to have any effect, and where the patient can not take it by reason of its unpleasant influence, a cure is promptly obtained by Shattenberger's Antidote. It cures immediately. In no case will there be more than one chill after the first dose, and in the majority of cases not even that. Sold by Druggists.

Educate Your Children.

In many of the homes we visit with this paper there are young people whose fate will be decided this year. Whether they are to be sent to school or not is a very pressing and large question. They now wish to go; next year they may have other desires. Life does not wait for any of us. The life of your boy will not wait for you to get ready to direct it. If he wants a good education, it is at once a folly and a cruelty to deprive him of it. It is the best thing you can give him, if he will take it. If he does not want it, useless may be the task of forcing it into him. Rejoice and make any possible sacrifice to give it to him if he has a mind to the work of a student.

Education, the best, avails for all the pursuits of life. Heads work in our age. The man who has only a pair of hands must pit them against steam and brains. Mere muscle has competitors so powerful that it must lose in the struggle of life. The property a kind father intends for his son may be lost; the education put into the boy can not be lost. The boy's mind is the safe bank. Give the boy a chance.

Do not hunt about for the cheapest school. The very cheap may be very poor. You may save a little money, and yet lose a great deal more by considering nothing but expense. On the other hand, parents would do well to check the growth of unnecessary personal expenses at college. A good many Methodist boys are spending too much money at school. Parents have more power than teachers have to repress a growing evil. Let them study the situation and stick the stakes around miscellaneous expenses. In many cases the evil has begun at home, and boys go to schools educated in the art of spending money, perhaps to learn little more except new branches of the same art. Better a poor boy in college living on his own exertions than a pampered spendthrift. It will be found that as a boy's expenses grow his scholarship declines. In this interior region of the country not one student in a hundred is worth his salt if he spends more than $300 a year. If he spends twice that he is usually a dead failure.

There are many good Methodist colleges almost in sight. You need not cross the continent to find a good one. It is folly to go out of your own church for a school. We have them in our own denomination, colleges and universities approved by good work and good graduates. The smaller colleges do good work, and their alumni take high rank. Too many of our Methodist boys are practically turned out of the church of their fathers by being sent out of the church to school. Patronize your own Methodist schools. Give the church schools a fair trial.

An education develops often undreamed-of tastes and capacities. As his mind grows, the boy's aptitude and calling will appear. Many a father has foolishly fixed the life-work of his son. It is impossible to row against the stream of a personal fitness and choice in the young man's mind. There are many uses of an education. The particular use may be left to the end of a course. If a boy gets a real and sound education, he can not help being the better for it. The question whether he will make a lawyer or a doctor does not contain the large reason for education him. Nor does any result in his fortunes contain it. He has a mind which was made for knowledge and thought. He has a right to a chance to obtain the powers and pleasures of knowledge and thought. No other gift will compensate him for the deprivation of education. It ought to be settled without controversy that a father should give his children the best possible education.

You may be deciding much more for the church and the world than you know. Therefore settle all questions of this kind on your knees. God may want your boy or girl for a great work; take counsel of him in the matter. The Lord has need of boys to make stalwart Christians of. He needs men and women to save souls and build civilizations. The lad or lass in your home may be a chosen child of Providence. Pray over it until you know what to do and how to do it. You have in this world no other business of a hundredth part of the importance of your duty to your children.—Western Christian Advocate.

MIDSUMMER.

BY JOEL BENTON.

Across the fair midsummer vale,
The zephyr floats from sweet to sweet;
What fragrance marks its pinkless trail
By fields of grass and tossing wheat!

The sky is poised, a perfect cup
Above the landscape's rich expanse,
And where the morning mists went up,
The hills seem stilled as by a trance.

No more the boisterous spring-time choirs
Make nature jocund with their notes;
The casual song the heart inspires,
And summer's noon of peace promotes.

Watch the hurrying humble-bee
Crooning his low-down mellow bass;
But curving past each fence and tree,
To kiss some flowret's blushing face—

A zigzag wanderer through the air,
Following a path that's all his own,
Without a thought, without a care,
And making every flower a throne!

Deep in the grass the ground-bird hides,
And, where the river winds away,
One little shallop calmly glides
With joy the long midsummer day.

A Bishop on His Travels.

MR. EDITOR: Another has yielded to the seductive influence of the Yellowstone National Park, and is all that the pressure of official duty will allow. After a refreshing sleep at the Lower Geyser Basin, with the mercury down to the frost line, we are ready for a second day's ride and "round-up" of Wonderland. We anticipated greater things than the day before, and were not disappointed. The plan for the day was a trip to the Upper Geyser Basin, a distance of ten miles, and return. Our route was along the banks of the Fire Hole river, and not for a moment during the day were we out of sight of steaming caldrons or spouting geysers. The whole Fire Hole Valley, for twelve miles or more, seems to be but a thin crust of treacherous silica over a great seething basin of hot water with almost numberless vents and vats. The Lower Geyser group alone contains 693 springs, besides seventeen geysers.

About half-way between the Lower and Upper Basins we reach what is known as the "Middle Geyser Basin" and "Hell's Half Acre." One of the principal geysers in this group, "The Fountain," we missed seeing in eruption by a half-hour. It was in almost perfect repose, seemingly a harmless, beautiful spring, thirty feet in length by twenty in width, filled with water of a delicate greenish tint. The frilled edges of the basin resembled the tasteful needle-work of a woman's deft fingers. One party that lingered for a half-hour saw it in operation, and pronounced the display one of the most charming in the Park. Here, however, I must take occasion to say each tourist regards that wonder the most wonderful which he discovered, and you failed to see. Near the "Fountain," and farther up the hill, is the famous Mud Geyser, better known as the "Paint Pot." It measures about forty by sixty feet, with walls four or five feet high. Instead of water this basin is filled with a white, thick paste of clay, and is in constant agitation. The steam seems to be strained in forcing its way through the silicious mush, and keeps up a continual blubbing, flopping sound. The mud is thrown up from one inch to a few feet, and falls back in every conceivable form, each assuming a different figure. About one-half of the basin is a lovely shade of pink, contrasting strikingly with the pure white in the other. Dozens of other springs and small geysers in this group I can not mention.

A half-mile down the river, and on the opposite side, is the "Excelsior," which has become the greatest geyser in the world, both in volume of water and height of eruption. Some years ago it was thought to be only an immense spring, with no intimation of its present geyser glory. As late as 1880 a scientific gentleman reported as follows: "It is possible that it may be a geyser with long periods; but we have no data to that effect." Only a year after the "Excelsior" began its stupendous displays. Its basin is 350 by 250 feet, with irregular, overhanging walls on three sides. Clouds of steam roll up ceaselessly from the agitated waters, and obscure the view into that dreadful cauldron. For a number of years its eruptions were irregular, and never more than once in twenty-four hours. This year it plays every fifty-five minutes. I saw it twice, and with increased awe and wonder the second time. Just before the eruption takes place the agitation of the waters becomes more violent; then follows a rumbling sound like the roar of a heavy freight train in a deep cañon; the earth quakes, and the mighty upheaval begins. The vast body of superheated water which fills the immense basin is tossed up into a thousand shapes, one spout rising above another, until the height of three hundred feet is reached, while great stones of various sizes shoot up as if thrown from a masked battery. I had to retreat with some speed in order to escape one of those falling geysorites. The water poured out in the eruption and, flowing into Fire Hole river, raised the bed of that stream and made the current steam for a half-mile or more. The thunder of this watery volcano continued for several minutes. Such a display of terrific power I never witnessed. Long after the eruptions cease the nerves tingle, and it is difficult to suppress ejaculations of extravagant wonder. A remark of an intelligent, elderly lady from Minnesota, standing near, quite amused me. She said: "I wonder if there are any Second Adventists here!". Possibly she thought they would find confirmation of their theory in the portentious upheavings of that liquid Vesuvius.

Within a few paces of the Excelsior geyser is the Grand Prismatic Spring, an indescribably beautiful body of water over three hundred feet in length by two hundred and fifty in width. It is aptly named. From the neighboring hill, before we reached the river bank, I noticed the prismatic coloring of the vapor clouds arising therefrom, and supposed it was a rainbow. The water is gorgeously tinted, varying from deep green to a brilliant red. Around the edges there are colored deposits of every shading, and little terraces of every form and fringe. Nothing more charming could be desired by the most exuberant fancy. Only a few feet from the Prismatic Spring is another, not quite so large, whose dark blue waters suggested its name, the Turquoise.

But we can not longer linger here. A ride of a few miles brings us to the Upper Geyser Basin, the largest group of great geysers in all Wonderland. According to official reports there are 440 springs and geysers in this Basin, twenty-six of which are real geysers. A few moments after reaching the hotel it was reported that "Old Faithful" was getting ready for an eruption, and all hurried out to witness the display. The crater of "Old Faithful" is two by six feet, and situated on a large, high mound of geyserite built by his daily deposits of silicious stalagmite. I approached quite near the crater while the preparatory rumblings were shaking the hills, but had to beat a hasty retreat when the boiling foam began to spout. The water is perfectly clear, and rises to a maximum height of 150 feet. At that altitude it separates into large crystal drops, which flash in the sunbeams like a mountain of solitaires. "Old Faithful" is properly named, for he may be relied upon with perfect confidence to furnish entertainment to every tourist. He goes off regularly every sixty-five minutes by the watch. His is not so grand as the "Giant," nor so terrible as the "Excelsior," but more beautiful than either. The "Lion," another large geyser which makes a roaring sound before and during eruption, strikingly like the great monarch of the forest, for whom it is named, gave us a grand display. And, when it ceased, one of the "Cubs" near by began and tossed the foam from his growing mane for twenty minutes. Of the "Castle," the "Grotto," the "Splendid," the "Bee-Hive," and others with their interesting formations, I can not write. The interval of eruption with these geysers varies from a few minutes to fourteen days; the duration from a minute to one hour and a half, and the height of column from one foot to three hundred feet.

The following story was told me, and vouched for by the hotel clerk and others. A Chinaman came to the Upper Basin to do the laundrying for the hotel. He stretched his tent over one of the small hot springs, and had his water ready at command, without the expense of wood and fire. On purpose, or by inadvertence, he dropped some soap into the spring, which suddenly converted it into an active geyser, shooting up a column of water fifteen or twenty feet, destroying the tent and badly scalding the Chinaman. The laundry summarily closed out, and the Celestial took speedy departure, exclaiming in not very euphonious phrase, "Too much hell-ee for me!"

After four or five hours among those inverted Niagaras we returned to the Lower Basin to spend the night, taking in the "Excelsior" again by the way. The next day embraced a trip to the Great Falls of the Yellowstone and the Grand Cañon. Our route thereto gave us a view and smell of the Sulphur Mountain. Near its foothills were springs spouting, and quite large deposits of pure sulphur in large yellow crystals, amounting, I suppose, to tons. Arriving at the hotel about four o'clock, all are soon mounted on Cayuse ponies, and start down the trail for "Inspiration Point," three miles distant, where the best view of the Cañon is obtained. The "Upper Falls" of the Yellowstone, much resembling the "American Falls" at Niagara, are very near the hotel, and lull the tourist to sleep at night by their glorious thunder. For a half-mile above the rapids begin, and each wave, like a mad charger with foaming mane, seems to increase its speed for the final, fatal leap of one hundred and sixty feet to the rocky depths. But the study of this was reserved for another time. Three-quarters of a mile below we reach the "Great Falls," where the channel contracts and the vast volume of water plunges over a precipice three hundred and fifty feet into the awful depths of the Grand Cañon. I descended to the brink of the fall, and had a magnificent view of the river's majestic plunge, and the change of the water from a deep blue to fleecy foam as it descends. The cliffs rise to a great height, the Cañon yawns beneath, and very near was a bank of snow glistening in the evening sun. At "Point Lookout" and other places down the river splendid views of the Falls are obtained. But the wonders of the Grand Cañon, which at first divide honors with the Great Falls, after awhile absorb attention and eclipse all the glories of that Wonderland. Such an enchanting scene can scarcely find an equal in all marvelous works of God in nature. The immense, perpendicular walls of rock two thousand feet high, of every conceivable color and the most brilliant tints, strangely contrasted and interblended, with the river far below, like a narrow, streaming ribbon, present a picture of marvelous magnificence. And a more careful study in detail reveals a curious penciling on the walls, wrought by frost and sunbeams, wind and snow, starlight and storm. The richness and magnificence of color awoke the poetic in a New York clergyman, and his nervous pen wrote the following, which, I dare not say, indicates the slightest extravagance: "The whole gorge flames. It is as though rainbows had fallen out of the sky and hung themselves there like glorious banners. The underlying color is the clearest yellow; this flushes onward into orange. Down at the base the deepest mosses unroll their draperies of the most vivid green; browns, sweet and soft, do their blending; white rocks stand spectral; turrets of rock shoot up as crimson as though they were drenched through with blood."

Early on the following morning I arose and walked down to "Point Lookout," to see the Cañon by sunrise, and the scene was more wonderful than the evening before. The gorge seemed to grasp and hold every beam, until from the highest cliff to the ribboned stream, two thousand feet below, there waved a flame of glory. But I must leave the imagination of your readers to fill out the picture.

Returning to Mammoth Hot Springs for the night, I left on Saturday for Helena, the beautiful capital of Montana, where the Sabbath was delightfully spent. Fraternally,

A Plea for Joab.

BY G. CARGADINE, D. D.

The writer, while in a meditative mood lately, had the thought to occur, that he had never known an individual, either with tongue or pen, to give forth a vindicatory word for Joab. He has heard Cain defended, and Judas apologized for, and the conduct of Demas held up in a favorable light; but never a gracious, commendatory or defendatory expression on behalf of the son of Zeruiah. There has always been in my heart a certain tenderness for the underanimal in a canine struggle, a warm and kindly feeling for the abased or injured man who remains silent. Certainly Joab has been condemned, audibly by many, silently by a great many more. All along the ages the prejudged judgment and the foregone, contemptuous conclusion have been sifting down upon the man such a load of obloquy, that the buried condition of Herculaneum compared to his is bright and hopeful. This contributor deponeth that he never knew a man so depraved but that he possessed some good points or qualities. He believes that Joab is no exception, and, that while not a saint, yet he had a few sterling virtues—while in regard to his evil life something in palliation or explanation, not defense, may be said.

One point I advance in his behalf is, that we are prejudiced against him, to begin with. We do not incline to him because David did not fancy him. We have received a bias from David's words about the captain of his army; his personal feeling has unconsciously colored our judgment here, just as we have felt our opinions of men to be affected a thousand times through what we had heard of them. David says more than once, "These sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me." That sentence settled Joab's case with the multitude. Men captivated with the pastoral, military and kingly life of David, won by his beauty, ingenuousness, valor and nobility of character, feel inclined to side with him at once, and ready to condemn at sight the foe or opposer of such a man. But please mark the speech again. It is not said that Joab was too hard for God, but too hard for David. This certainly throws some light on the matter, for a man may be personally offensive to me for various psychical reasons, and yet be acceptable to Heaven. I detect in these words merely the natural antipathy or antagonism springing from difference of temperament. David was gentle, tender and refined, a man of the harp and marble palace, while Joab was the rough, plain-spoken soldier; his sweetest music, the blast of the war-bugle, and his joy to be amid the flash of descending swords, and struggling in the surge and onset of battle. They never met, did these two men, without a nervous shock, a mutual electric repulsion. The one firm in his gentleness, the other violent and unchangeable in his opinions and proceedings, there was never an interview but suffering flowed like blood, at least from David.

It is a great advantage gained for a minister in his pastorate when he recognizes and accepts the fact of difference of temperament. We have all misunderstood and, hence, misjudged people here. They were not as tender and emotional as ourselves, and, lo! we consigned them to regions outside of Christ's kingdom, with a wave of the hand and the remark, "This man is too hard for me." And yet he was not too hard for the Savior, or the minister that followed you. The real state of the case here is, that Joab did not think and feel and act like David, and this seems to have been the cause of his condemnation. Just exactly as many a preacher has condemned a member of his church or a fellow-minister, the words of the excommunication being, "These people be too hard for me;" which phrase, being interpreted, means these people do not think and live as I think and live.

Another point I make in Joab's favor was his loyalty to David. The King of Israel had many friends, but he never had a truer friend or more faithful subject than the son of Zeruiah, about whom he complains so bitterly. When the kingdom was small and weak, Joab was the principal leader of the army, and many of the victories won at that time and afterward were achieved mainly through his skill and valor. Again, when Absalom rebelled, and all the nation forsook David but a handful of his troops, Joab was true to his monarch in the face of a defection so general that it included statesman and warrior, civilian and priest, high and low, and went into poverty and exile by his side without a murmur. If that famous march or retreat over Mt. Olivet, with a weeping band of friends, was dark to David, the man of God, how much gloomier was it to Joab, who had no spiritual life and experience to sustain him! And yet there he was by the side of his flying master, purposing to stand by him and share his fate, no matter what his lot should be. That lot promised to be one of defeat and death when they left Jerusalem together.

I merely glance at the faithful service he rendered David when, with his blunt speech, he aroused him from the stupor of grief into which he had fallen, upon the death of Absalom. It was a painful rousing, we admit; there seemed to be no kindness in it; and yet we need only glance at the situation to see that the utterances of the blunt soldier were true, and that if David had not come forth and spoken to his troops, he would, doubtless, have witnessed a greater defection and experienced mightier calamities than had broken upon him at any time previous.

Almost immediately after this Joab sees himself set aside from the command of the army he had so victoriously led, and by the king he had so valiantly delivered. And yet he still remains under his banner, and wins new victories for him.

In addition to this, we see him endeavoring to restrain David from the sin of numbering the people, and steadfastly refusing to have anything more to do with the matter. He never gave a greater proof of friendship than in the fearless stand which he here made.

In a word—for nearly thirty-three years he was the devoted soldier and subject; and though we pretend not to deny the fact of his being a man of blood and of treachery, as evinced in the murder of Abner and Amasa, yet the point we are making was his loyalty to David. This devotion to his king's interests remained until he saw David in the infirmities and imbecilities of old age—until he was really no longer king—and then, and not till then, he was drawn away into the rebellion of Adonijah.

The last point we make in Joab's favor is that he knew of David's great sin. What he might have been but for that, I leave every spiritual student of human nature to say.

Joab had often seen David in his worship; heard him striking his harp and singing the psalms of his own composition. Doubtless, he had beheld him in his dancing before the Ark of God. He had read his religious lyrics: "Blessed is the man who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly;" "My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed;" "I have set the Lord always before me;" "Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord." All these and more he had heard from his master's lips. And yet he saw him fall into a great sin. It was Joab who received a letter from David, saying, "Put Uriah in the front of the battle, and when the battle is hottest retire from him, and leave him to die." It was all done, and a good man perished by order of the king. But how Joab must have despised David in his heart! He thought of the Psalms he had heard David sing, and which may have impressed him. He recalled one—"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, he that hath clean hands"—and, doubtless, he laughed now a hard, defiant laugh at the memory. Still up to this time he knew only a part of David's guilt. It was not long, however, before he heard the rest. Uriah was scarcely buried before the intelligence came down to the army that David had taken Bathsheba as his wife. Then came the immediate birth of the child; and Joab saw through the whole dark transaction.

Who can tell how much this may have affected Joab as to his religious life? His faith in God may have gone down with his faith in man. He may have hardened from that hour. He recalled afresh those religious lyrics: "My heart is fixed, O God." "I have set the Lord always before my face." He remembered how David danced before the Ark, and, doubtless, concluded all religious people were hypocrites.

David had said more than once, "These sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me;" but from this time Joab could return the compliment, and say, "This son of Jesse is too hard for me." Doubtless, David often caught the eyes of Joab fixed upon him meditatively and mockingly. How it must have paralyzed his tongue and humbled his spirit! He knew that his chief captain was acquainted with his iniquity, and the thought must have kept him in the dust continually. This fact alone throws additional light on the expression, "These sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me."

THE FORTUNATE ISLES.

BY JOAQUIN MILLER.

"You sail and you seek for the Fortunate Isles"
The old Greek Isles of Ocean Rowland's song
Then steer straight on through trackless unwatery miles.
Straight on, straight on, and you can't go wrong.

Nay, not to the left; nay, not to the right;
But on, straight on, and the Isles are in sight—
The Fortunate Isles, where the golden lilies sing,
And life lies girt with a golden ring.

Those Fortunate Isles they are not so far;
They lie within reach of the lowliest doors;
You can see them gleam in the twilight star;
You can hear their sails in the moon's white shore.

Nay, never look back. Those buried graves
They were landing steps; they were steps into thrones
Of glory for souls that have sailed before,
And have set white feet on the Fortunate shore.

And what are the names of the Fortunate Isles?
Why, Duty and Love, and a large content.
Lo! these are the Isles of the waterly miles
That God let down from the firmament.

So Duty and Love and a true man's trust;
Your fair friend a God, though you feel in the dust
So Duty and Love, and a child's sweet smile
And these, O friend, are the Fortunate Isles.

Sunday-School Lesson.—September 2.

THE SPIES SENT INTO CANAAN.

Numbers xiii. 17-33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it.—Num. xiii.

TIME.—B. C. 1490, in July or August.

PLACE.—Kadesh, or Kadesh-barnea. Identified by solid reasons, elsewhere shown, with Ain Kadis, Williams, Palmer, Trumbull, and others, with Ayn Qudeis (or Ain Gadis).—See verse 26.)

17. Moses sent them. To spy out the land of Canaan.—The command of Jehovah to send out men to spy out the land of Canaan was occasioned, according to the account given by Moses in Deuteronomy i. 22, by a proposal of the congregation, which pleased Moses, so that he laid the matter before the Lord, who then commanded him to send out for this purpose "of every tribe of their fathers a man, every one a ruler among them." The mission of the spies originated in unbelief and craven-heartedness. The mere proposal to inspect the land betrayed that there was in the hearts of those who made it a suspicion that the country would not be found to be so good as it had been represented. The intimation that the commissioners might be able to guide them as to the best way of entering the country was a slight upon the pillar of cloud and flame, by which they had hitherto been conducted. And the whole project was a device to gain time, and to postpone the conflict through which alone they could obtain possession of the heritage which God had designated for them. They did not wish just then to exert themselves in any measure, and they adopted this expedient in order, for the moment, to evade all effort. Get you up this way southward—Rather, by the Negeb, or south country. The Negeb is frequently mentioned in Scripture, and it is also three times enumerated, by its Hebrew name, with the Egyptian article prefixed, in the list of places conquered by Shishak, hieroglyphically engraven on the walls of Karnak. Go up into the mountain—The hill country of southern and central Canaan, mostly within the borders of Judah and Ephraim.

18, 19. See the land. Or, inspect the land. The people ... whether they be strong or weak, few or many—Whether they are courageous and brave, or spiritless and timid; and whether they are little or great—that is, numerically. The land ... whether it be good or bad—With regard to climate and cultivation. Healthful or unwholesome, fruitful or barren. What cities ... whether in tents or in strongholds—That is, in open villages and hamlets, as contrasted with strongholds or fortified places.

20. Be ye of good courage—The service in which the spies were employed required great courage, for they could expect no favor from the Canaanites in case they were detected and apprehended, and they must, therefore, go forth at the hazard of their lives. Bring of the fruit of the land—As samples of its fertility to encourage the people. The time was ... of the first ripe grapes—This was in August, when the first clusters are gathered; the second in September, and the third in October. The spies' absence for a period of forty days determines the grapes they brought from Eshcol to have been of the second period.

21. Searched the land from the wilderness of Zin—The name of the wilderness of Zin, in which Kadesh was situated, appears to have been given to the northern or northeastern part of the wilderness of Paran. Unto Rehob—Probably the Beth-rehob of Judges xviii. 28, near Dan-Laish; and apparently to the north of it, since it gave its name to a Syrian kingdom (II Samuel viii. 3), and must thus have lain without the territory occupied by the Israelites. As men come to Hamath—By the "entrance of Hamath," the assigned boundary of the inheritance of Israel, is to be understood the southern approach to Hamath, from the plain of Cœle-Syria, lying between those two ranges of Lebanon called Libanus and Antilibanus. A low screen of hills connects the northernmost points of these two ranges; and through this screen the Orontes bursts from the upper Cœle-Syrian hollow into the open plain of Hamath.

22. Ascended by the south. Came unto Hebron—Hebrew, he came, to wit, Caleb, as appears from Joshua xiv. 9, 12, 14. Hebron was situated in the heart of the mountains of Judah, in the southern extremity of Palestine. The town, or "cities of Hebron," as it is expressed in the Hebrew, consists of a number of sheikdoms distinct from each other, standing at the foot of one of those hills that form a bowl round and inclose it. Hebron was in existence as early as Abraham's time. (Genesis xiii. 18; xxiii. 2.) Ahiman, Sheshai and Talmai, the children of Anak—The progenitor of the Anakim was Arba, "the father of Anak," from whom the city of Hebron took its name of Kirtah-Arba. The name Anak denotes "long-necked;" and though here the name of a race may originally have been that of a chieftain, yet Ahiman, Sheshai and Talmai were probably not individual warriors, but names of three tribes of the Anakim. Hence we find them still in existence half a century later, when Caleb, who now brought tidings of them, became their eventual destroyer. Hebron was built seven years before Zoan—Zoan (the Tanis of the Greeks) was situated on one of the eastern branches of the Nile, and boasted a higher antiquity than any other city in Egypt. The decided and explicit manner in which Moses declares exactly how long Hebron was built before Zoan shows a conciousness of authentic information, and a freedom from all fear of being contradicted, even by the Egyptians, who were proud of their antiquity, and may well be considered as an internal evidence that the history is genuine.

23, 24. Came unto the brook of Eshcol—This is generally identified with the rich valley immediately to the north of Hebron, described by Robinson as producing the largest and best grapes in all Palestine, besides pomegranates, figs, apricots, quinces, and other fruits, in abundance. Cut down ... a branch with one cluster of grapes—In one of these extensive valleys they cut the gigantic cluster of grapes, and gathered the pomegranates and figs, to show how goodly was the land which the Lord had promised for their inheritance. Bare it between two upon a staff—The mode of carrying the cluster was evidently adopted to preserve it entire as a specimen of the productions of the promised land: the Israelites were familiar only with the scanty vines and small grapes of Egypt. Brought ... pomegranates ... figs—The pomegranates and figs were probably carried on the same pole. The words may be rendered thus: "And they bare it between two upon a staff; also some of the pomegranates and of the figs." The place was called ... Eshcol—This verse states the reason why the valley was so called by the Israelites, but does not determine the question whether it originally derived its name from Eshcol or not.

25, 26. Returned ... after forty days—They had no doubt in this time explored the whole land. It was, however, with the southern part that the Israelites expected to have to deal immediately; and accordingly it is that which is particularly referred to in the following verses. Hebron and its vicinity above all. To Kadesh—Kadesh is the modern Ain Gadis, or spring of Kadesh, and lies in that north-eastern plateau of the wilderness of Paran which formed the stronghold of the Amorites.

27, 28. Surely it floweth with milk and honey—The report was given publicly in the audience of the people, and it was artfully arranged to begin their narrative with commendations of the natural fertility of the country, in order that their subsequent slanders might the more readily receive credit. Nevertheless the people be strong—Potent for the strength of their body, and the valor of their minds. The cities are walled, and very great—No doubt the repeated invasions of the Egyptians had compelled the Canaanites to intrench themselves in those fortifications which afterward, as the book of Joshua shows, were the element of their greatest strength. Moreover we saw the children of Anak there—Whose lofty stature seems to have filled their imaginations with a vague and indefinable alarm.

29. The Amalekites ... the south—Where we are to enter the land; and they who were so eager and fierce against us that they came into the wilderness to fight with us, will, without doubt, oppose us when we come close by their land. Hittites—The Hittites inhabited the hill country of Judea, especially in the neighborhood of Hebron. In the time of Solomon and Joram there were independent kings of the Hittites. Jebusites—Inhabitants of Jebus, the ancient name of Jerusalem. The Jebusites, a mountain tribe, seem never to have been conquered, or to have recovered possession of Jerusalem and to have retained it, till David took Jebus; and even after the conquest we find Araunah, the Jebusite, who is called "Araunah the king," living in peace and prosperity in the land. Amorites ... in the mountains—Apparently the most powerful and wide-spread of all the Canaanitish tribes, dwelling chiefly in the hill country of Judea, subject to five kings, but also spreading to the other side of Jordan, to the north of the Arnon, even to the river Jabbok. Canaanites ... by the sea, and ... Jordan—The remnant of the original inhabitants, who had been dispossessed by the Philistines, were divided into two nomadic hordes—one settled eastward near the Jordan; the other westward by the Mediterranean.

30. Caleb stilled the people—Which implies either that they had begun to murmur, or that by their looks and carriage they discovered that grief and anger which boiled in their breasts. The fact that Caleb only is mentioned, though, according to chapter xiv. 6, Joshua also stood by his side, may be explained on the simple ground that at first Caleb was the only one to speak and maintain the possibility of conquering Canaan. Before Moses—Against whom they were incensed, as the man who had brought them into such sad circumstances. Let us go up at once, and possess it—Caleb may signify all heart; and he was evidently a man of true courage, steadfastly facing danger in the path of duty, in the exercise of vigorous faith, and entire dependence on God. He did not say, "Let us go and attack the Canaanites;" but, "Let us go up at once and possess the land:" as if he thought the forty days spent in searching the land had been too long a delay, and was impatient to take possession of the country which God had given them.

31. The men that went up with him—All but Joshua. We be not able ... they are stronger—Both in stature of body and numbers of people. Thus they wickedly question the power, and truth, and goodness of God, of all of which they had such ample testimonies.

32, 33. They brought up an evil report of the land—By exaggerating the difficulties of the conquest in their unbelieving despair. A land that eateth up the inhabitants—Their wish was to lay stress upon the difficulties and dangers connected with the conquest and maintenance of the land, on account of the tribes inhabiting and surrounding it; the land was an apple of discord, because of its fruitfulness and situation; and as the different nations strove for its possession, its inhabitants wasted away. The people ... are men of a great stature—Literally, men of measures. Such persons did undoubtedly exist in the land of Canaan, but there is no evidence that the inhabitants generally were of extraordinary size. We saw the giants, the sons of Anak—Whom, in their fear, they seem to have identified with the Nephelim of the antediluvian world. The term in Hebrew implies not so much the idea of great stature as of reckless ferocity, impious and daring characters, who spread devastation and carnage far and wide. We were in our own sight as grasshoppers—A strong Orientalism, by which the treacherous spies gave an exaggerated report of the physical strength of the people of Canaan.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

When we are bent on having our own way, God punishes us by giving it. "He gave them their request—but sent leanness into their soul."

Very various are the media through which different men see the same thing—same, for example, through spectacles of fear, others through spectacles of hope. The true motto is, "In thy light shall we see light."

"In all kinds of mortal endeavor, secular, menial, moral, and spiritual, whatever we get we must somehow fight for it."

Our Indian Missions.

BY SECRETARY I. G. JOHN.

We reached Vinita, in the Cherokee Nation, July 19, and were soon in council with the trustees of Galloway College. The site selected for this institution, embracing 160 acres, is within less than a mile of this flourishing railroad town, and has been secured to our church, "for missionary and educational purposes," by the act of the Cherokee National Council. The Mission Board appropriated $5,000 toward the erection of buildings on condition that the friends of the enterprise would raise the same amount. The condition has been met, and a building, to cost $10,000, will soon open its halls for the reception of students from my part of the territory. Such a school is greatly needed. In its absence our young men educated in secular schools, or in institutions under the charge of other denominations, will pass from under our charge. We must educate our children if we expect them to remain in our communion.

We found Harrell Institute, at Muskogee, under the charge of our Woman's Board, undergoing important improvements. The patronage of the institution rendered its enlargement a necessity. An addition, which will increase the size of the chapel and dining-room and furnish accommodations for twenty additional students, will soon be completed. From the outlook this enlargement will not more than meet the demand. Bro. Prewer and his wife and assistants are doing a work of vast importance in this mission.

Our next point was a full-blood camp meeting at Hitchert, some twenty-five miles from Muskogee, in the Creek Nation. We reached the ground Saturday afternoon, in company with Bro. Brewer, in time to hear a sermon by Bro. Methvin, our missionary among the Western tribes, through an interpreter. We noted with much interest the discharge of this duty by one who has had long experience in such service. Each sentence was framed to complete the idea of the speaker. Dependent sentences, as far as possible, were avoided. The time required by the interpreter in presenting the thought in the native language afforded ample time for the preacher to formulate carefully the next sentence. As one paused, the other took up his task promptly. We had an opportunity on Sunday morning to exercise our gifts in this unusual mode of preaching the gospel. Bro. Berryhill, the district interpreter, stood by our side. After a few sentences, we settled down to our work, and preached with as much freedom as we ever experienced when facing a white audience. We have seldom felt the weight of our commission as we did when standing in the midst of that congregation of full-blood Indians.

Several of the preachers earnestly warned the people against attending the "busk." On inquiry we learned that the term is applied to one of the customs they inherit from their days of savage life, known as the "green corn dance." As the corn ripens into roasting-ears, before they commence using it, the chief of each town or band orders a "busk." They assemble at the appointed place, and a large pot of boiled roots that have been gathered by their medicine men is prepared, and each one is expected to drink of it. It is a powerful emetic, etc. When it has commenced its work of purification, all set down to a feast, of which green corn forms a prominent part. After the feast, they spend the night in dancing. To refuse compliance with this custom of their fathers requires no small amount of moral courage on the part of the Christian Indians. Not only are they reproached as faithless to the memories of their people, but in some cases a fine is imposed. In view of the demoralizing influences attending the "busk," the missionaries feel constrained to warn their people against it.

After service, Sunday night, the bell was again rung, and a congregation, consisting of full-blood Indians, assembled at the stand for an "all-night meeting." Their reason for this service is the fact that they were accustomed to spend all night in superstitious rites and sinful revelry, and that they should be willing to render the same service to their Savior who had redeemed them from the power of darkness and sin. Only a curtain separated the congregation and the portion of the tent we occupied, and we had the full benefit of the services until day. They consisted of singing, prayer, preaching and exhortation. The earnestness of the preaching, the fervor of the prayers, and the weird, plaintive melody of their songs awakened within us a spirit of devotion that amply compensated us for loss of sleep.

Dr. Young J. Allen on the Missionary Conference.

I propose in this communication to refer only to a few points which most deeply impressed my own mind. First, the stupendous significance of the Conference. This was two-fold: (1) actual, (2) prophetic. The conflict of conscience which has through all the ages characterized the church, severed its communion, destroyed its unity and paralyzed its effort, found there neither champion, friend nor advocate. The ends of the earth were met together in brotherhood and love, and the angel of the Lord pronounced anew the benediction of Heaven: "Peace on earth, good-will to men." It was a spectacle worth crossing the ocean to behold—1,500 of the leading men and women of the church, representing almost every denomination and shade of doctrine, assembled in one place from out all nations, and characterized by that unity of spirit which in apostolic times anticipated the descent of the Holy Ghost in pentecostal power. The missionary cause is the universal cause, and on its platform the unity of the church is restored. This was the actual, the real significance of this World's Missionary Conference to the church itself. But that is not all; for outside and beyond whatever it may mean to the church itself, it as assuredly gave promise that the moral forces of Christianity should be in the future more powerfully felt and more generally recognized in the intercourse of nations. The missionary cause is a pioneer cause, and it is now known that the missionary everywhere is a pioneer not only of the gospel, but of the fullness of the gospel blessings. But of neither the one nor the other can he be a wholly successful forerunner until the church which sends him forth shall more thoroughly and powerfully impress the character and spirit of Christianity on the civilization of Christendom. The unity of the church must now face the selfishness and inhumanity of so-called Christian nations, and claim for the heathen a brother's rights, and shield them in international intercourse, politic, social and commercial, from the imposition of a civilization which, while it enlightens, kills and exterminates. Herein foreign and domestic missions unite and cooperate, and the churches at home and in foreign fields establish their essential unity, the only guarantee of a universal success.

Second, the next most striking feature of the Conference was the united, the universal testimony from every quarter of the globe as to the open doors that now await the church. Providence everywhere is in advance of his messengers. This fact so deeply affected the minds of the Conference as to awaken the most earnest solicitude and prayer for more laborers, and appeal after appeal was made to the churches represented to double—yea, treble and multiply—their zeal, their gifts, and offerings of men and means for the prosecution of the great work.

Another point, which was emphasized by the testimony from heathen lands, was a call for a wiser and more catholic administration abroad. The heathen converts practically insist on our unity in Christ. They know of no distinctions in the church save the two great divisions of Roman and Protestant, and the question arises, Should they, ought they ever to know except historically? No doubt this attitude of the heathen converts has had much to do with restoring the unity of sentiment at home on the basis of the missionary cause. Certainly it is one that should be respected, and it will be. The conflict of conscience should never be kindled in such nations and in such countries as India, China, and Japan. The heartiest fellowship and co-operation was the sense and sentiment of the Conference. Christ must be all in all.

Of the probable effects or results of the Conference I have not room to speak. They will, however, most assuredly be along the lines above indicated. The spirit of missions will be more intensified. There will be a wider diffusion of knowledge, a better acquaintance with the facts, a heartier co-operation and a speedier occupation of the world in the name of Christ and his church.

In conclusion, indulge me this one personal allusion. I am now on my way to China, to take up again the burdens laid down for a brief season. I return in some heaviness, even sadness; for, while the Woman's Board is fully alive to the opportunities that await them there, and have in hand the means to send forth the desired re-enforcements, the Parent Board is not able to meet our calls. Whose fault is it? O! that the church would consider this matter and give us the help we so much need! O! for humiliation and prayer!

From the Work.

GRAND CANE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Assisted by Bros. Caraway and Bogard, local brethren of Logansport, I began a meeting at Gum Spring, July 28; and while the apparent opposition was very great because of a certain element there that seemed determined to break down the aggressive movements of our church, the Lord soon manifested his presence and saving power among us, giving free course to and making potent the Word preached, so that strong men were cut to the heart, and sought peace and found pardon by believing in Jesus. Through several days the Holy Ghost came down each service, and filled to overflowing the souls of believers, and shouts of praise were heard in the lone woods where our arbor was erected; and nine accessions and eleven conversions, with evidences from many others of deep and abiding work for good, was the result of the six days' work, as well also an impetus in church building. So you need not be surprised if at Conference there is reported a beautiful church for Gum Spring. To the Lord be all the praise.

Yours in Christ,

W. F. HENDERSON.

MADISON CIRCUIT, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have had a glorious revival in our church. The Spirit of the Master has truly blessed us. We had eleven accessions to the church, and the membership greatly revived. The services were conducted entirely by Bro. I. W. Cooper, of Edwards circuit, we having but recently lost our beloved pastor, J. A. Newsom, by death.

Your brother in love,

J. A. BENNETT.

MORTON AND FOREST CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: On Wednesday last we closed our protracted meeting at Wesley Chapel. There were nine accessions to the church, and we baptized fifteen children. It was a good meeting. Bro. C. C. Griffin assisted me. Our people are working on a camp ground, one mile south of this place. It promises to be a success. Respectfully,

C. M'DONALD.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Since my last writing to the ADVOCATE the writer and his family have been favored with a most enjoyable occasion. Just after our protracted meeting at this place had closed, the good people of this community (including all denominations represented here, together with many who do not belong to any church) desired to make a thank-offering to God for his spiritual benedictions by bestowing their material substances upon his servants. Accordingly, on Tuesday night, July 31, they came by scores and "stormed" the parsonage with several boxes filled with a variety of the necessities of life, and with them a cigar-box filled, not with tobacco, but containing hard cash, to supply the unknown wants of their pastor and friend.

When we had spent an hour or two in pleasant conversation, we ate with a relish of a lunch of watermelons which had been furnished by a brother for the occasion; after which, by suggestion of the donors, we engaged in a season of praise to our God, reading his holy Word, and prayer, when the congregation dispersed, and left us to enjoy with pleasure and surprise the many things left behind them. May God's richest benedictions and grace ever be upon them!

J. W. TUCKER, P. C.

MANY CIRCUIT, LA.

MR. EDITOR: This is our third year with these kind people. Since January our congregations have been good, and the good Lord has visited us with showers of refreshing. Our third quarterly meeting was held at Prospect last Saturday and Sunday. Our presiding elder, Bro. J. B. Cassity, was on hand, and preached Saturday and Sunday with the power and demonstration of the Spirit. On Sunday evening Rev. J. M. Franklin preached us a real heart-searching sermon. These brethren had to leave us on Monday morning; but we continued the meeting until Wednesday night. The Lord was present with us in saving power. Sinners were converted, mourners converted, and the church greatly revived. This meeting was the beginning of our protracted meetings. We thank God and take courage. There were fourteen conversions and eleven accessions to the church. We have received into the church this year twenty-four members. To God be all the praise.

S. S. HOLLADAY.

BLACK HAWK, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We closed quite a revival at Acona, in Black Hawk charge, a few days ago. Thirty accessions to our church, and the membership quickened. We were assisted by Bro. J. T. Howell, of Sidon, and Bro. J. E. Thomas, of Grenada station. These brethren did us good work. Bro. J. W. Beville, of Jackson, Tenn., was with us, leading in the service of song. The people were delighted with, and profited by his singing. We begin a meeting here to-night.

Yours truly,

E. G. KILGORE.

BENTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a protracted meeting in the Deasonville neighborhood, which resulted in forty-five bright conversions and forty-two accessions to our church. The Holy Ghost came in grand, sweeping power, and everyone was brought under its influence. "Glory to God in the highest!"

Yours, etc.,

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

To Whom It May Concern.

MR. EDITOR: Oblige me and our Wesson Church by asking the brethren in Mississippi and Louisiana to discourage people from coming to Wesson for work. The Mississippi Mills have as many employees as are needed, and there are enough unemployed people already here to fill any vacancies likely to occur. The new mills will not be completed before January. To come here without means now can only result in suffering. Our church has fully as many needy poor as we can care for now. Do not send any more for our hard-working poor to take care of. We can not do it.

T. L. MELLEN.

Preachers and Prohibition.

BY REV. L. CARLEY.

What is the proper attitude of preachers towards prohibition? There are two opinions relative to this question. 1. As citizens they have a right to advocate it, but as preachers it is inexpedient for them to do so. 2. It is both their right and duty to advocate prohibition.

Both these opinions have their defenders. I unhesitatingly subscribe to the last. Preachers should walk circumspectly before God and men, and, if possible, estrange no one from them. Their citizenship secures to them the same rights that are enjoyed by others; but that does not justify them in political partisanship. Prohibition, however, is different from any merely political question. It is a moral question affecting alike the interests of all parties. If it fail, all are injured; if it succeeds, all are benefited.

The right of preachers to advocate any similar question would hardly be denied. Suppose the State should legalize polygamy, would anyone blame the preachers for advocating a return to laws prohibiting it? Suppose a denomination of Christians were denied religious toleration—a denomination against which the State could bring no charge of immoral teaching, or of anything else conflicting with its interests, would they not have a right to remonstrate? And if the matter were in the hands of the people, and toleration could be secured only by a majority of their votes, would anyone complain if they were to go before assemblies of the people and advocate their claims? Assuredly not.

But, we are told, prohibition is a political question. It is no more so than the ones just mentioned. And, if under such circumstances, preachers would have a right to address public assemblies, with a view to securing a change in State laws, they certainly have a right to do the same on the question of prohibition. Admitting their right to do so, we are still asked if it is the duty of preachers to advocate prohibition. I answer, It is. They are the standard-bearers of the church, and the mission of the church is to "teach all nations." If the right of the church to exist is admitted, the universality of its mission must be admitted also. It is, therefore, the duty of the church to teach the State, as well as the individual, on all questions it is commissioned to teach. The right of the church to exist and perform its functions is recognized by the State in the appointment by itself of chaplains to Congress, to the Legislatures and to the army. What is the church commissioned to teach? No one will deny that, among other things, its duty is to teach morality. Well, now, if the church sees the State ignoring the principles of morality, is it not its duty to raise its warning voice, and say to the State, "Your conduct is God provoking and ruinous"? And if the Church sees the State not only ignoring the principles of morality, but actually establishing, or, at least, licensing schools of vice, would it not be recreant to its high mission if it did not enter a solemn protest and labor to bring the State to see its error and correct it?

Apply this to the licensing of saloons. They are schools of vice licensed by the State, and exist by the consent of the people. Is it not the duty of the Church to warn the people of their danger, and, by every legitimate means, prevail upon them to withdraw from the State the power to thus legalize iniquity? If this is sound reasoning, then what better agency than the ministry can the Church employ in this great work? Resolutions and edicts by the Church can not effect the State except to a very limited degree; and if the ministry is not allowed to perform this work, then by whom will it be performed? It must go by default, and the church be responsible to God for inefficiency as the propagator of Bible morality.

But, we are told, the Church and State are two separate institutions, and they must not interfere with each other's duties. In reply to this, I would say the Church occupies a different sphere, somewhat, from that of the State. As has been seen, it is the duty of the Church to teach the State, but the State has no right to teach the Church. Neither has a right to interfere with the other so long as each confines itself to and performs its legitimate duties. But suppose the Church should abandon its high and holy mission of preaching the gospel and of inculcating morality, and should begin to sanction and teach immoral practices dangerous to the peace and safety of the State, would it not have a right to interfere, and say to the Church, "Your doctrines and practices are detrimental to the interests of the State, and must be abandoned"? Though the State has no commission to teach the Church, it is its duty to prevent the propagation of doctrines and usages that tend to immorality. Under such circumstances, who would dare to say the State must not interfere with the Church because they are separate institutions?

Moreover, the Church does not propose to use coercive measures to bring the State into harmony with itself. This should not be forgotten. When the Church assumes authority to do this, it loses its New Testament character, and justly excites the suspicion and jealousy of the State. It propagates its teachings by moral suasion, and upholds them by the same means. Its effort to day is not to coerce the State into the adoption of laws prohibiting the licensing of saloons, but, by its authority to teach all nations, to convince it that the toleration of the liquor traffic is a sin against God and man—ruinous to itself and to the individual.

Now, as preachers are the divinely-appointed watchmen upon the walls of Zion, it is manifestly their duty "to cry aloud and spare not." This work can not be relegated to politicians. It is the work of the church; and the preachers who shrink back at the charge of being political meddlers, or from any other cause, would do well to re-examine their commission, and see if they are not failing at an important point to discharge the functions of their office. (Ezekiel xxxiii, 1-6, inclusive.)

The Boys and Girls.

BY D. W. FOSTER, M. D.

Perhaps no better plan can be devised to accomplish what is so much needed, in this respect, than to establish all over the land manual-labor schools, or require every boy to do manual labor, as well as cultivate the intellectual faculties. That system would have the several good effects of making correct impressions that manual labor is not something to be ashamed of, but, on the contrary, it is reputable and important, and the regular systematic exercise will promote healthy development of both body and mind; while, at the same time, valuable skill in work could be acquired in many instances, and a proper appreciation of its value and importance in the prosperity and welfare of the country. And another very valuable (if not the most valuable) consideration is, the boy could pay his own way, to a very large extent, at least, while acquiring an education, which a great many could never obtain otherwise; and that of itself ought to be a strong argument and urgent plea in favor of manual-labor schools. But when all the advantages of the system are taken into consideration, they are overwhelming in their favor—especially so in the present straitened condition of our Southern country. As it is now, there are thousands of good, honest parents, who are anxious to have their children educated, but positively can not pay the present cost, which (reasonable as it is) is above the ability of a very large and respectable majority, who would hail with glad hearts and large patronage some good system of schooling brought within their reach.

Why more girls than boys are being educated can be easily accounted for. There is not money enough on hand to pay the cost, and unless the boys stay at home and work to make it, neither can go to college. If the sisters were to stay at home, they could not make enough to send their brothers. So the boys have to stay at home and work in the field or shop, and thus the girls are afforded opportunities the boys can not possibly have, in the existing state of things. And thus it is, that the girls are getting better educations than the boys. But, alas! how does it turn out too often? A. and B., neighbor boys, for instance, stay at home and work hard in the field or shop, and help pay the expenses of their sisters in college; but while they are there (or soon after, if they did not have them before) the girls imbibe the false notions about the respectability of the different occupations and professions, and when they come home they turn up their noses at the noble-hearted boys whose faces have become bronzed and their hands hardened with industrious and praiseworthy labor in the sun. Nic! fie! Let the children all be taught better sense. And, unfortunately, the good, industrious boys, who are worthy of more sensible girls, are too often simple enough to feel ashamed of themselves, instead of cultivating an honest pride that should enable them to hold up their heads and compete for better prizes, which are to be won by them. Why, it is a law in some countries that the heir to the throne shall learn some trade—shall do manual labor. And shall less favored boys feel ashamed to labor with their hands! No, no. Let us have manual-labor schools all over the length and breadth of the country, and teach all the boys to be ashamed of nothing but sin. Help them educate themselves, and encourage them to make good, useful and honorable men of themselves. Teach them that it is infinitely more disgraceful to idle in ignorance or loaf in poverty than it is to plan or plane to earn an honest living, acquire a valuable education and accumulate an easy competency.

Manual-labor schools can be arranged and conducted so that boys can pay their way to good, practical education by their own labor, and be all the better for having thus made themselves intelligent, useful, responsible, and prepared themselves for future success and honorable independence. Judge Shattuck, of Mississippi, when a boy, had to work hard all day on the farm; then he would gather wood to make a light at night on the hearth, and then lie flat of his back on the floor, with his head toward the light, and thus read till late bed-time, and he became a learned man, an eminent minister of the gospel, an able judge on the supreme bench, and once president of Centenary College. Elihu Burritt mastered several different languages while working [illegible] and many others have achieved similar successes in equally adverse circumstances. And there are thousands of boys scattered all over the country who would become learned and useful and eminent men, if they could only have such encouragement and opportunity as good manual-labor schools would afford them; while without some such schools much and valuable natural talent must remain forever undeveloped—buried out of sight, like the precious metals in rich mines that are unknown and unworked. And without some good practical school system put within reach of all, general illiteracy must continue and increase until the people be sunk deeper and deeper into vice and crime. By all means let us have manual-labor schools established all over the country.

The collection of tracts, which we call, from their excellence, the Scriptures, contain, independently of a divine origin, more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, purer morality, more important history, and finer strains both of poetry and eloquence, than could be collected within the same compass from all other books that were ever composed in any age or in any nation. The two parts of which the Scriptures consist are connected by a change of compositions which bear no resemblance in form or style to any that can be produced from the stores of Grecian, Italian, Persian, or even Arabian learning. The antiquity of those compositions no man doubts; and the unrestrained application of them to events long subsequent to their publication, is a solid ground of belief that they were genuine predictions, and consequently inspired.—Sir William Jones.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 23, 1888.

Brief.

Rev. John Snyder contributes an interesting paper, on "Our Barbarous Funeral Customs," for the August number of the Forum. He says: "What we call, in unconscious satire, 'Christian burial,' is not only condemned by sane religion and rational sanitary science; it is without those elements of the beautiful, the graceful, the poetic by which it can justify itself to the imagination. It seems to represent, not the sweet and trustful confidence of an ancestral faith, but the gloom and chill of an inherited despair." According to the writer, our funeral customs contradict the glorious teachings of our religion, and we put away our dead as if there were no such thing as the immortality of the soul. Everything about our funerals is so ordered and arranged as to express the lowest depths of a hopeless bereavement, and thus the whole thing is out of harmony with the Christian religion. We quote this significant passage: "We often withhold the body from the grave until it becomes a menace to health. Then we inclose it in a casket, the price of which would support a poor man's family for a year. Then we cover it from sight with ugly and tasteless floral decorations, often the offering of social vanity rather than of personal affection. And over its final resting-place we build a monument representing, not unfrequently, as much money as would build a modest hospital or endow a professorship in a college. Many a man spends at least one-sixth of his year's income upon a funeral. Under the present condition of things, one of the humbler class of wage-workers can not bury a member of his family without depriving those who survive of necessary comforts." The writer touches several other points in our "mortuary barbarism"—such as "mourning jewelry," "mourning visiting cards," "mourning stationery," "mourning etiquette"—and says that "the ghastly humor reaches its climax in 'second mourning,' which symbolizes sorrow vanishing through the ministrations of the milliner and the mantua-maker! It is an interesting, but certainly not edifying sight to see a blooming young widow pass through these various stages of grief which rigid etiquette demands, from the midnight gloom of costly crape, through the subdued twilight of 'second mourning,' back to the full daylight of gorgeous color." We heartily agree with the writer when he says: "These customs should be frankly characterized as barbarous." From the standpoint of Christianity they can not be defended. But what shall we do? The wealthy and intelligent people ought to start a reform in this matter; and we feel assured that they will have the hearty support of every minister of the gospel.

THE STORM.—Last Sunday was the stormiest day we have had in this city for a long, long time. During the whole day and night the rain came down, and the wind blew at times a perfect gale, reaching sometimes the velocity of sixty miles an hour. The wind played havoc with the electric light and telegraph wires. The city was in darkness during the greater portion of the night, and all communication with the outside world by telegraph was completely cut off. The water covered the back parts of the city entirely, and much damage was done in the way of houses and fences and trees blown down. Altogether it was the fiercest storm that has visited us for years.

Christian Education.

While our contributors are discussing this very important subject, in a way that brings it before the church and country more prominently than ever, we may get a lesson where we least expect it. In the Forum, for August, there is a paper, on "What Shall the Public Schools Teach," by Prof. S. E. Warren, in which the writer says: "Without some positive instruction, and on a Christian basis, in the essentials of character, all other training possibly goes only to make a perfected engine of mischief. Are more consciences violated by the Proverbs of Solomon, the Sermon on the Mount, or the shining gems of precept in the apostolical epistles, than by hiding these treasures, or by substituting for them even the best of wordly wisdom, from Franklin back to Confucius? We might well learn a lesson from others in this matter, and make home, church and school all co-operate in righteous character-building instead of letting the school be antagonistic, even if only by being neutral. In Scandinavian lands religion is one of the regular school studies." The writer then quotes from an address to the schoolmasters of the District of Nicosia, in Italy, by Prof. Catalano, Inspector of Schools, these remarkable words; and they are words that ought to be repeated o'er and o'er to all the teachers in this land. The Professor said to the teachers:

It will be your duty to unfold and fix firmly in the mind of the child the belief in God—that he is the Supreme Being and infinitely good; and so to order your own conduct that the child shall perceive that the chief end of man is to have formed within him the likeness of his Maker, the great type or example of moral perfection. In this way many and many of those grand educational and social problems may be resolved. A system of education can not be complete unless it includes religion. It is well to educate the rising generation in those ideas and principles of action which will produce a strong and loyal patriotism. Much more noble, however, is it to instill into their hearts that all-embracing love, that sympathy for all mankind which includes, as it were, all the rest of the virtues put together. To this end I propose that the gospels shall be read. I am aware that this suggestion will meet with opposition, but it will be opposed only by those who do not know how much philosophy, science, knowledge of the human heart, and of the destinies of men is shut up in that book, which is eminently suited, from its structure and inherent power, to educate the man.

These noble words should be pondered calmly and prayerfully. It will be a strange thing if Italy teaches the American churches to put the Bible in the course of study in their church schools! And yet it is better to learn from that unexpected quarter than to go on dishonoring God by refusing to use his Word as a factor in the education of our children.

The College Question.

BY REV. J. W. HONNOLL.

Bros. Cameron, Wyatt, Newell and Hunnicutt have all written on the important subject of Christian education—important because the education of the head without the education of the heart only increases the power to do evil and results in the moral degradation of our race; and, while we may differ in reference to the means to secure the end, we are all agreed that Christian education is essential to the welfare of our people. Therefore, to all that Dr. Hunnicutt says we all say, Amen! And I suppose that we all agree with Bro. Newell in what he says about the unity of Methodism, its growth, the annihilation of space by railroads and electricity; fine buildings and endowments. These facts all bear directly on the subject under consideration, and, to my mind, demonstrate the folly of building new colleges while those we have have ample room, and "to spare." We are not all agreed with Bro. Newell that we can support a Mississippi Methodist college; that one hundred thousand dollars is to be collected; and we can only judge the future by the past. And where was the State pride of these liberal brethren when we were struggling to raise four thousand dollars to save an institution worth forty thousand at Grenada? This same State pride has stood by and suffered our high school at Kosciusko to die for the want of their support. We can not depend on the State pride of those brethren to build a great college whose Methodist pride and love for Christian education are not sufficient to call their boys from State schools to our own institutions. So I take the amen corner while Bro. Newell exhorts our people to give their children a Christian education. I know that Bro. Wyatt is honest in his convictions and anxious to see our boys in our own schools. But what evidence does he give us that we would succeed in supporting a new college? As Bro. Cameron says, "It is with facts we have to deal." We can not depend on what seventy thousand Methodists ought to do. What are the facts? Where have we supported a college under similar circumstances? Why did the Memphis Conference fail to support a college at Trenton, Tenn.? They had no rival between Paducah, Ky., and Aberdeen, Miss.; had more territory and more money than we, but did as many of us do—sent their sons East and North to school; and the college died. These are facts; and "it is with facts we have to deal"—with the people as they are, and not as they should be. As for what Bishop Galloway said at the Winona District Conference, we can only say, if he was understood, this is in strange contrast with what he said last year in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE on the subject of Christian colleges, when he said, in substance, that our colleges should be improved rather than multiplied. But, perhaps, he has been caught by these liberal Mississippi Methodists, who propose to do so much if it can be done on the soil of Mississippi; but, if so, we are not to forget that great men sometimes err, and he and the other Bishops and our leading educators are not of one mind.

Bro. Cameron, in his interrogative affirmatives, asks: "Is it a fact that the majority of our Mississippi Methodists send to our schools which happen to stand just over the State line?" I answer, No; not in the sense in which he asks this question. The majority of the Methodists of Mississippi do not send off to school anywhere. I meant that the majority of our people who send their boys to Christian schools send to Bellbuckle, McTyeire Institute, Centenary, and other church schools beyond the State line. If I did not know Bro. Cameron to be so candid, conservative and fair, I would think he was trying to have some fun at my expense, and to draw off the mind from the main question, for we all know that nine-tenths of our people do not send to high schools anywhere.

Bro. Cameron asks again: "How many boys from the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference have attended school at the Vanderbilt University the past session? How many at Centenary College? How many have gone to these institutions since they have been such?" I do not know on which side of the Conference line, between this and the Mississippi Conference, some of these boys live, but I do know that about thirty have gone from the State of Mississippi to the Vanderbilt University during the last session, and many more have attended the preceding sessions since this institution has been such. And I know some have gone during the time I have been here on this district to Centenary College, some to Bellbuckle, some to McTyeire Institute, and, I suppose, some to the Southern University from this State. The Greenville district has sent to these church schools during the past four years an average of, at least, twenty-five boys. So this, if others have done as well, would be two hundred boys in our church schools. Half this number would be doing pretty well, comparatively, for Mississippi, which has been abused so much for neglecting Christian education.

Again he asks: "What does it avail though they do stand with open arms, if these arms are to remain comparatively empty?" Why are they empty? Bro. Cameron says our people are not inclined to send South to school. Would not the same reasons which keep our boys out of the schools we have now keep them out of new schools? Would it remedy the evil to multiply schools in the South? If our boys do not fall into the arms already extended, is it likely that they would rush into other arms less inviting because they are stretched out on Mississippi soil?

Bro. Cameron gives it as his opinion that the majority of our people attend our State schools, and that they do not answer the purpose of Christian education. On this subject we are of one mind; and, as I am not as modest a man as Bro. Cameron, I will say more. The giving of free tuition in these State schools is a great curse to Christian education, which is the hope of our country. It is a species of class legislation which is grievous to be borne; and, unless we get some relief, the churches will call a convention to devise means by which we can be relieved from this cruel injustice. Why should the Christians of Mississippi, after having furnished more than half the money to build these institutions, be forced to pay from year to year more than half the tuition of their neighbors who want schools without the Bible? If they do, let them pay their own tuition. On this subject I am ready to vote.

Bro. Cameron has wisely said nothing about asking the Mississippi Conference to unite with us in building a college. It seems to me that it would be a very bold step in us to ask the Mississippi Conference to desert this Conference college, for which they have been laboring so long, and now with a property free from debt, worth at least seventy-five thousand dollars, with a live president; just as she rises above the effects of the war and calls for an endowment that she may go forth and bless the world, shall we lure her friends away. I answer, No. "Hands off, and let her drive."

With all due respect to my brethren, I can not believe that we would succeed in establishing a Mississippi Methodist college with our State schools in our midst, the Centenary near us on the southwest, the Southern University in fifty miles of our center on the east, and the Vanderbilt not far away in the direction which Bro. Cameron admits our people are inclined to send to school, where we have a college department which is not to be eliminated, but add other improvements. How could we send our boys to an inferior college at Winona or Jackson, Miss., when we can send them to the Vanderbilt with such superior advantages?

CLARKSDALE, Mississippi.

Various Things.

BY "GILDEROY."

"Heated term?" Well, yes; very heated term. We have not had such continuous hot weather for years past. The dust is simply awful—awful to me. I have lived in the prairies for many years past where dust is almost unknown. I'll get my peck of dirt in a year in this country, where the air is full of dirt. I breathe it, eat it, and take it in by absorption.

We are a long ways off, but our people are about quarantining against Jacksonville, Fla. They want to keep out the yellow fever. It is a dangerous and highly infectious and contagious disease. It was here once. We have far more dangerous and infectious moral diseases much nearer home, but we do not quarantine against them. Indeed, we throw open our doors and invite them in. In too many instances there is little fear of God and no fear of sin before our eyes. There is in most of us an innate affinity for sin. We love sin; have a relish for it, and roll it as a sweet morsel under our tongues. The new life begotten in us by the Holy Ghost changes this inward propense. When born again, we love God and hate sin. We are buried with Christ by regeneration. We die to sin, and are buried away from it. We are raised to a new life—a life of holiness, of freedom from sin, so that we ought not, must not—indeed, can not live any longer therein. Living without sin, free from sin, is the only certain proof that we have been buried with Christ and raised with him. The old man—the natural, corrupt man—has been put to death by having been crucified with Christ, on purpose that the body of sin, the innate and inherent propensity to sin, might be destroyed. If this is not destroyed, the old man is yet alive. If we be dead with Christ and have been raised together with him, why, then, we have the new man in us; we are new men—men renewed in the image of God. We are washed in the laver of regeneration, and have the baptism of the Spirit that puts us into Christ.

It is quite fashionable now to ignore or to minify as much as possible the work of regeneration; indeed, simple reformation is often represented as equivalent to regeneration. Many persons join the church on their reformation, while they are yet total strangers to that radical change which we denominate regeneration. In some instances—yea, in many—water baptism (a ceremonial burial in water) is substituted for that spiritual baptism which kills the old man and raises the new man. The sign is taken for the thing; the shadow for the substance, and the ceremonial for the spiritual. In this way Christ is often stabbed in his own house. The man who dips with him in the dish betrays him. He says: "Hail, Master;" kisses him, and turns him over to his foes. A burial in water is not the baptism that buries a man with Christ. It is not the baptism that kills that it may make alive. The baptism of the Spirit, the Holy Ghost, alone does this. This baptism kills and buries the old man, and brings up a new man—one that ought to live, and does live, a new life—a life free from sin. We ought to die unto sin once, and once only. We would not need to die unto it oftener if we did not fall back into it. The trouble is, we fall back into sin; we go to living in sin again; we forget that we were purged from sin. We do not follow Christ in holy living. Some of us, perhaps most of us, die unto sin often; are baptized into Christ often; are buried with Christ by baptism into death often, and are often raised with him to newness of life. It ought not so to be, but so often is. Grace abounds even unto us who live in sin. We would be irretrievably lost if grace did not abound to the forgiveness of sins committed after justification. The overflowing abundance of grace should completely dry up the streams of sin. The graciousness of God in forgiving sin should be the cause of our hating it and living entirely free from it. Grace creates an obligation higher than law—more binding than law. It puts us under the law of love. It appeals to love rather than to fear: One is a ministration of death; the other, the ministration of life. One kills; the other makes alive. Law brings bondage and the knowledge of sin; grace brings freedom and the knowledge of salvation. Too many of us are Ishmaelites, sons of Hagar, bond-men, the sons of a bond-woman. Too few of us are sons of Sarah, free men, sons of a free woman. We go back and become entangled in the yoke of bondage from which we had been graciously set free by Christ. We are called unto liberty, but we too often use our liberty as an occasion for gratifying the lusts of the flesh. The loving leniency of God towards us is made the occasion of abusing his mercy. The doctrine of God's Word is one death unto sin, and one unbroken new life in Christ.

Notes.

In regard to a "note" in our paper, a week or two ago, President Hunnicutt sends us this:

The brother who wants some one to "formulate a plan" whereby all will be induced to contribute for missions, has slightly missed the word that expresses the want of our day. It is not plan, but purpose that is wanted. Formulate the purpose, and the plan will not be lacking.

In a private letter to the editor, President Jones, of Emory and Henry College, Va., says:

The church certainly owes it to herself to give a liberal support to those institutions which she has brought into being. Anything less than this is a reflection on her fidelity and indicates a decadence of that vigor and vitality which characterized our Great Master, and which must characterize every organization into which his life has been planted.

President Hunnicutt, of Centenary College, La., writes as follows:

This is our sentiment about education: The church is bound by every consideration of duty and interest to educate her children. To this policy reason and religion alike impel us; to the discharge of this duty our Discipline and our consciences alike constrain us.

These two terse deliverances on the all-important subject of education by the church came into our office by the same mail, showing that leading minds in different sections are pondering the subject. Verily we believe our church is beginning to feel the throes of a new life.

This paragraph from an exchange will do to be read twice and then, to be pondered over for six months or longer:

Think of praying, "Hallowed be thy name," and then voting to license the liquor traffic, which causes God's name to be blasphemed; "Thy will be done," and then voting that it shall not be done; "Lead us not into temptation," and then voting to place temptation in every one's path; "Deliver us from evil," and then voting for the greatest of evils, that a little money may come to the city or town treasury; "Give us this day our daily bread," and voting to license that which takes bread from thousands of almost starving children.

To be able to state a thought in words which need no explanation is a power to be desired and sought after and continually cultivated by every writer and speaker. There is nothing that charms a reader or a hearer like clearness in style. When we look at an object through a dim or hazy medium, the attention is necessarily withdrawn from the object to the medium and the vision divided. So when a writer or speaker expresses his thoughts in words whose meaning is not clear, the mind is drawn away from the thoughts and centered upon the style, and the force of thought is broken. We give an example from the New Testament. In the Authorized Version we have this: "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity." This is far from being clear, for the reason that we have invariably to stop and settle the meaning of the word "simplicity" in this peculiar connection. In the Revised Version it is this: "He that giveth, let him do it with liberality." That is as clear as a sunbeam, and everybody sees it meaning and feels its force.

A Plea for Joab.

Joab only saw the sin; he beheld not the repentance of David. He witnessed not the hours of dreadful mental and spiritual agony that he endured for his sin; nor heard his heart-broken cries to God, as recorded in the fifty-first Psalm—"My sin is ever before me." "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." "Cast me not away from thy presence." "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me"—and concluding, "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou will not despise." Joab heard none of these moving cries. He saw instead, what appeared to him, an inconsistent—nay, worse—a hypocritical life. And so he set himself in unbelief and fortified himself in his wickedness, and went on in a godless life because of what he saw in the palace and the Tabernacle.

Does it require any great call upon the imagination to declare what he said at this time? We have heard it so often, that, if there is anything we know well, it is this mocking speech of the world to the Christian: "I make no claim to being religious—in fact, I am a sinner; but I am not as bad as some who stand high in the church and make great pretensions." That Joab said this or something equivalent I have no doubt. That it is no justification of an evil life we all know. Men should discriminate between an imperfect creature and the perfect Truth. Like the apostle, we should say, "Let every man be a liar; Christ is true." Still while this is so, the sickening fact remains, that many will take their views of God from their views of men, and Christianity is and will be judged by countless thousands in the light of the words and spirit and lives of its followers. It is a fearful thought that multitudes are to-day stumbling and falling into hell over the inconsistent, worldly and sinful lives of men and women in the church of God. How much the subject of this sketch was effected by the misconduct of such an illustrious servant of God as David, I leave the reader to imagine. That such an influence was created appears from Nathan's awful rebuke—"By this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme." And so they did—nor have they stopped until this day.

Poor Joab! his was a stormy and a guilty life, but somehow we think that at the final judgment his character will not appear as black and terrible as some have imagined from a hasty view of his life-record. The relieving facts will be that, here in one of the darkest ages of the world there lived a brave soldier, a tireless defender of his country and one of the most faithful of subjects—faithful in the midst of general disaffection, and that, too, to a king whom he believed to be a hypocrite.

Church Extension.

HEED THIS CALL.

Two Conferences have been held this season, and both have reported to our Board, and neither pays its assessment in full. This is not an encouraging beginning. It makes us uneasy; and if the remaining Conferences follow this example, it will bring disaster to our work. We may as well tell the case just as it is, and let the church see our danger in time to avert it. Forty thousand dollars is the smallest sum with which the General Board can do its work for this year. We need—must have this sum to be used in donations, or be discredited. Besides the churches who are expecting it will suffer. Many of them are under way, and can not be stopped. Contractors will not allow it. Mechanics will enforce liens; banks will sue for borrowed money. If every preacher in charge who reads this will go at once to work, and collect his full assessment, or more, and report it at his Conference, we are safe. Otherwise, we suffer serious loss.

A Prize Offered.

Mrs. C. J. Fastor, corresponding secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of Louisiana, proposes to award a handsome banner to the Juvenile Society in the Louisiana Conference, Woman's Missionary Society, that raises the largest amount of money, per capita, for foreign missions, provided it pass through the usual channels to the Woman's Board of Missions. The Banner Society will bring the banner to the annual meetings, to be awarded again to the most successful.

Personals.

The Los Angeles Christian Advocate knows of a church of forty members, in that city, which has contributed $160 to missions. That sounds like doing something. Four dollars per member. Whew!

In the late World's Missionary Conference, in London, one of the speakers said that eighteen pence per year for missions for each communicant in the Christian Church is all that is contributed.

The Wesleyan reports that the wife of Bishop Key, who has been sick for some time, is now convalescing.

"Much of the random talk called preaching," is the center of one of Bro. Potter's pungent paragraphs in the last number of the Wesleyan.

Rev. J. B. Culpepper is confined at his home in Macon, Ga., with fever, and it will be some days before he will be able to do full work again.

A layman in the Denver Conference "contributed forty cows, most of them having calves, the proceeds of whose sale were to go to the preachers and their families, after deducting $100 for Pueblo Collegiate Institute."

Our contributors must possess their souls in patience. We have only so much space in the paper at our command, and can only publish that much each week. If your communications do not appear as soon as you expect, you now know the reason. Nearly every week we give space on the editorial page to others, and sometimes give it all. If the brethren would condense, it would help all around. We are looking forward to a time when we will be able to give our readers more reading matter.

Bishop Hendrix transferred twelve new men to the Denver Conference. Missouri and Texas furnished the most of them. Several were admitted on trial and into full connection from the Denver Conference itself. While this shows growth, there are still nine appointments left to be supplied.

During the session of the Denver Conference one day was observed as a day of fasting and prayer for more laborers in the Lord's vineyard. Would it not be well for every Conference to observe such a day during its session?

The Holston Methodist propounds this question:

Which is more destructive to religious fervor in the church—a political speaking for promoting a temperance reform, or a theatrical entertainment, to raise money for church improvements?

The yellow fever scare seems to have been only a scare after all. The promptness with which every place quarantined the supposed infected region demonstrates that the authorities, backed by their several communities, are ready to do anything to limit the progress of a plague of that kind. Our Board of Health has increased its vigilance, and if even a suspicious case occurs here, it will be promptly reported.

Bro. Scurlock, who is in charge of the "Lower Coast Mission," which includes the country along the river from this city to the Gulf of Mexico, reports having established preaching-places at St. Bernard, Pilon, Grand Prairie, Pilot Town and Port Eads. The congregations average about thirty persons each, and the prospect for permanent good being done is very fair. At one point about $500 have been subscribed to build a church.

Rev. F. P. Spencer writes from Friar's Point, Miss.:

Had a glorious revival at Bond's School-house last week. Twenty-four professions, the church greatly revived, and still the good work goes on. Also had a good meeting at Oak Ridge the week previous. Bro. Lincoln King was with us in the meeting. Our work progresses well.

We hear that Bro. Weems, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, proposes to give himself to the work of God in Mexico. Bro. Weems is an earnest and evangelical preacher and will, no doubt, do faithful service in that part of the Master's vineyard.

A Great Mistake.

It is a great mistake to start a youth out on a course of mere mechanical, technical or scientific education unless you wish to make a mechanic or a machine of him. To train the muscles, drill the fingers, and sharpen the wits for a particular style of work is to dwarf and narrow the mind and to forestall that broad culture which is essential to a fully developed manhood. To educate in the full sense is to teach the man to think clearly and consecutively, to reason correctly and to judge wisely. Education prepares a man for the mastery of any art, trade or profession. Mere technical drill fits him to serve skillfully in a special department of labor. Are you preparing your sons and daughters only to serve for wages, or also to bless the world with worthy and fruitful lives, approved of God and honored of men?

It is wonderful to see what a passion there is for technical drill in these days. Years of time and thousands of money are sometimes spent in training a young woman's fingers for the execution of music, and at the end she could neither criticise nor compose a piece of music. The young man is made a lightning calculator without ever learning those principles by which all real problems in arithmetic and algebra are solved. The tendency now is to ignore laborious, classical culture and take a high cut to a wage-paying technical drilling. A word to the wise is sufficient; a great deal to the unwise on this line would probably be useless.

...ew York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction ...tainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement ...e circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be the author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

TEN CENTS, AND A MORAL.

BY D. M. HENDERSON.

Here is a silver dime, my son;
Looks like lead, it is blackened so;
Not a bit like the shining one
I dropped in my pocket a week ago!
Dingy? Yes; do you think it strange
It should lose its sheen in so short a time?
Wouldn't you like to know what wrought this change
For the worse in a brand new silver dime?

The cause is simple, and readily told;
But pay good heed to it, son of mine!
See if it does not a lesson hold
For a bright brave boy with a wish to shine.
I draw from my pocket a copper cent;
See, there is the secret; this silver dime,
Dropped in the pocket by accident,
Has rubbed against copper all the time.

And the copper is never a whit more white,
And has gained not at all by its company:
But the silver dime comes out less bright,
And its value is questioned, as you see!
Now, the moral for boys is very clear;
And you see it, of course? Well, lay it to heart.
And see, I drop the dime in here,
And the copper there; let them be apart!

MR. EDITOR: As I haven't written to your excellent paper for some time, and I am like some other little girls when I see so many letters from our little cousins, I want to write myself. My father takes the ADVOCATE. We have a nice Sabbath-school. Bro. I. N. Sessions is our superintendent. He has gone North for his health. We had a nice Sunday-school celebration on July 4, in which six schools took a part; had several recitations from the scholars of the different schools, and this writer was one that was called on. I will tell you more about our celebration if some one older don't pretty soon. I answer Stephen H. Evans' question. The longest verse in the Bible is Esther viii, 9. For fear of the waste-basket I will close, by wishing the ADVOCATE much success. I am,

Your little friend,
I. CARRIE FLOYD.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. My ma takes your paper. I like to read the little people's letters. I go to Sunday-school. I will answer Ella Barnhill's question: "Grapes" is found in Deuteronomy xxxii, 32. I will ask a question: Where is "advocate" found in the Bible? I will close for this time.

LUTHER KING.
GALLOWAY, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I love to read your dear paper. I went on a fish-fry last Thursday, and had a very nice time. I am a little boy twelve years old. I have two brothers and one sister. I joined the Methodist Church last year. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is the wearing of gold forbidden?

MR. EDITOR: I have never written to the ADVOCATE, but read the other little girls' letters who write to it, so I thought I would write, too. I will tell you about our parsonage. It has been repaired and newly painted. I have not been to Sabbath-school lately, as I am out in the country. Your little friend,

How He Measured the Tree.

We sometimes call our Bob the young philosopher, for he is a boy who thinks a great deal. Whatever he sees that he does not understand he tries hard to study out for himself. And he solves some problems which would seem too difficult for such a little fellow.

Bob is the owner of a foot rule and a yard-stick, and he takes great pleasure in measuring garden walks, fences, and many other things about the place.

He will often guess at the distance from one point to another, and then measure it, to see how near he came. He had some difficulty when he tried to find out the length of his own shadow, for sometimes it was quite short, and at other times very long. At length, however, he discovered it was long in the morning, grew shorter till noon; then grew longer all the afternoon till sunset, when it would disappear. He also learned that twice each day (once in the forenoon and once in the afternoon) his shadow was exactly the same length as himself.

There is a beautiful tree near the house which runs up tall and slim. Bob used to say that it almost touched the sky. He often longed to know its real height, but could see no way of measuring it. One morning he noticed the long shadow of this tree plainly marked on the smooth, green lawn. Just then a new thought came to him. Why not find out the height of the tree by the length of its shadow?

He drove a stake into the ground, and found that its shadow was longer than the stake. But he knew that shadows were growing shorter at this hour of the day, so he waited and watched. In about an hour the stake and its shadow were of the same length.

Then Bob ran to measure the shadow of the tree. He found it to be thirty-one feet, and he felt sure that this was the height of the maple. He was delighted with his discovery, and he talked about it a great deal, and said he should sometime try to measure the distance to the moon.—Nursery.

An Ostrich Race.

Dr. J. C. Sketchley, near Los Angeles, Cal., has sixty acres devoted to ostriches, having imported thirty pairs of these birds directly from Africa, landing them at Galveston, Texas. He also brought with them four Madrasese men and women, these people being thoroughly familiar with the habits of the ostrich. An eye-witness gives the following account of an ostrich race:

"At a command from the doctor, one of the Madrasese keepers opened the door of one of the pens; and, in response to the doctor's call, two superb ostriches came running to him. After caressing the gentle creatures for a few moments, he showed them a handful of figs, of which they are extremely fond. Two of his men then restrained the birds by placing nooses about their legs until he and myself had walked to the other end of the course. Then, at a signal from the doctor, the birds were released and the race began. It was a rare sight. Ornithologists tell us that the stride of the ostrich, when feeding, is from twenty to twenty-two inches; when walking, but not feeding, twenty-six inches; and when terrified, from eleven and one-half to fourteen feet.

"It seemed to me that, in this race for a handful of figs from their master, these gigantic birds covered the last-named distance at every stride. Like the wind they came, their great necks stretched forward and upward to their utmost length, their wings like arms, working with a motion similar to that made by their legs, and filling the air with a mighty sound like the rushing of a whirlwind. Nearer and nearer they came, their speed increasing with every moment, till I was almost terrified lest they should run us down, feeling certain that we could not withstand the shock. They kept well abreast for nearly half of the distance, and then one began to forge ahead. He steadily increased his lead till within a few feet of us, when he turned his head, and, seeing that his competitor was considerably in the rear, he slackened his pace, and, jogging up to the doctor, received his reward in figs and caresses.—Providence Journal.

TWO KINDS OF GIRLS.—An exchange says there are two kinds of girls. One is the kind that appears best abroad—the girls that are good for parties, rides, visits, balls, etc., and whose chief delight is in such things. The other is the kind that appears best at home—the girls that are useful and cheerful in the dining-room, sick-room, and all the precincts of home. They differ widely in character. One is often a torment at home, the other a blessing; one is a moth consuming everything about her, the other is a sunbeam, inspiring light and gladness around her pathway. To which of these classes do you belong?

Household.

DOING THE SAME THINGS OVER AGAIN.

BY MRS. M. W. BLACKER.

'Tis a saying trite, repeated oftimes,
"A housekeeper's work is never done;"
The household wheels must be oiled each day,
And the work go on from sun to sun.

There is washing, and ironing, and baking to do,
While swift as a weaver's shuttle time goes,
And the small jobs sandwiched between these tasks
No one but a housekeeper guesses or knows.

The duties of the household have their weak points,
Although for the most part good men and true;
Not faults that are glaring, O no; no, no!
But follies and foibles like me and like you.

Some duties have a penchant for delicate bread,
And some for a mealy potato.
And some we have known covet polished shirt fronts,
And this, we must own, is but nature.

The children, too, must be coddled and fed,
Their bruises court-plastered, and each little sprite
Schooled, scrubbed, and guarded from perils by day,
And lovingly, tenderly cared for at night.

Wearisome isn't it, sisters all?
Wearing alike to heart and brain.
No way to avoid it, no way to shirk
Doing the same things over again.

But would we exchange, for store, or shop,
Or the factory's busy, unceasing whirl;
The quiet home where we reign a queen,
And go back again and again be a girl?

No; we'll cherish our homes, and each pet her John,
And nurture with care the children dear,
Patiently, cheerfully filling our lives,
Doing the same things year after year.

—Good Housekeeping.

How to Eat a Melon.

As this is "watermillion-time" with all our readers, except those who live in cities, we give them a recipe for eating melons from Henry Grady, of the Atlanta Constitution:

A watermelon, even though it be a sixty pounder, is not intended to be devoured in public; nor is one watermelon, no matter what its weight may be, more than enough for one healthy person.

This fact is probably well known to every country schoolboy. The art of eating a watermelon and keeping cool is as simple now as it was in the days of long ago. The rind should be slit with a short-bladed knife, so that when the melon is divided the heart of it shall rest in one of the halves in one luscious, juicy lump. The knife should then be carefully wiped, and then be put in the pocket. Then the coat should be taken off, and the sleeves rolled up. Plunge the right hand under one end of the heart and the left under the other; lift the dripping mass to the mouth and fall to. The juice will trickle down your arms and saturate your face; but what of it? There is plenty and to spare, though the feast is the rarest to be found on earth.

INFLUENCE OF MANNERS UPON CHILDREN.—No two individuals can come into contact with each other without being affected by that contact. An inferior may help or harm a superior; but as a superior may the more easily help an inferior, so the superior is in the greater danger of harming the inferior. It is generally a matter of more importance, ultimately, to grown people how they act in the presence of children, than how children act in their presence. In view of this truth, it is the duty of every one to study how he should act in the presence of those with whom he may be thrown. And this is no truer of one's relations to a king than of one's relations to the humblest child.—If royal courts justly demand royal court manners, so childhood, with its more than royal possibilities, justly demands manners appropriate to the presence of children. Whether we be in a street car or in church, when children are near us; or whether we be guests at the table where a child is present—we are as much, or even more, bound to a certain course of speech and of action, as the child is so bound by reason of our presence. The child ought to bear himself wisely and well for his own sake, we ought to bear ourselves wisely and well for our sakes and for the child's sake.—Sunday-School Times.

FLOATING ISLAND.—One quart of milk, four eggs, beaten separately, four heaping tablespoonfuls of white sugar, two tablespoonfuls of vanilla or essence of almond, one-half cupful of currant jelly. Beat yolks well, stir in sugar, and add to the hot milk—not boiled—a little at a time. Then boil until it thickens. When cool, flavor and pour into a glass dish—first stir well. Beat meringue, made of beaten whites and one-half cupful of jelly gradually beaten in in small bits.

CLARK—Little GERTRUDE, infant child of John D. and Otie M. Clark, was born September 11, 1887, and died July 5, 1888. She was loaned of the Lord to brighten the home and bless the lives of her parents. She was taken by the Lord to lead them home to him. All that human power could do to relieve the sufferer and keep her with us was done, but God ordered otherwise. The precious blossom, tendered with such care, is rudely taken away, and the hearts of the young parents are sad, but full of hope. Their angel-baby can not return to their home, which is subject to sadness and gloom, but they may go to her abode of infinite bliss. May the Lord comfort and sustain them in their affliction!

W. E. RACKLS, Pastor.

SIMPSON—HIRAM CHAPELL, infant son of Simeon B. and Malinda Shopson, was born January 31, 1888, and died July 7, 1888. Hiram was a sweet child, a precious flower, blooming only a short time on earth; then taken by the Father to bloom among his treasures that never fade in heaven. He suffered for six weeks, when the wheels of his young life stood still, and God took the little lamb to himself, only to draw the affections of father and mother heavenward. We breathe a silent, fervent prayer that this sad affliction may be overruled kindly for their greatest good.

The Nicaragua Canal.

H. C. Taylor, U. S. N., general manager of the Nicaragua Canal Company, is enthusiastic over the prospects of that enterprise. The party of fifty started in on their survey in November, and all returned but three, two of whom left the party voluntarily, and one was discharged on account of drunkenness. Commander Taylor announces that the surveys have been entirely completed, and everything is now ready to begin work immediately. The complete records of the surveys will be put into the hands of the draughtsmen, and in four or five weeks will be presented to the public. Then the company will be ready to open its financial operations. Commander Taylor says that the original estimate of cost, $50,000,000, with $15,000,000 additional for contingencies, has been cut down to $48,000,000 and $12,000,000 for contingencies. The company has already paid the Nicaragua government $100,000, and expended $150,000 in making the surveys, and has upwards of $200,000 in the treasury. It has not attempted as yet to take steps to raise the money required to complete the enterprise, because it wished to have all the preliminary work ready before doing so, but the projectors are entirely confident of being able to get all the capital needed from New York, London, Berlin, and Amsterdam. At present it is anxious only in regard to its charter. The Senate has passed the bill incorporating the company, but other business and the conventions have delayed the measure in the House, though Commander Taylor says that a very large majority is assured for the bill when it finally comes up for action. If by any reason Congress should fail to grant a charter, the company will take a State charter and proceed. The miles of territory to be excavated have been cut down by the survey from thirty-nine to thirty. There are 140 miles of free navigation.

Boils and pimples and other affections arising from impure blood may appear at this season, when the blood is heated. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes the cause of these troubles by purifying, vitalizing, and enriching the blood, and at the same time it gives strength to the whole system.

It is good for a man to be checked, crossed, disappointed, made to feel his own ignorance, weakness, folly; made to feel his need of God; to feel that, in spite of all his cunning and self-confidence, he is no better off in this world than in a dark forest, unless he has a Father in heaven who loves him with an eternal love, and a Holy Spirit in heaven who will give him a right judgment in all things, and a Savior in heaven who can be touched with the feeling of his infirmities.—Charles Kingsley.

Many People refuse to take Cod Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis, General Debility, Wasting Diseases o Children, Chronic Coughs and Colds, has caused physicians in all parts of the world to use it. Physicians report 'our little patients take it with pleasure.' Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

Air-Ship Building.

Although it is only a hundred years since the first balloons were made, it would take books enough to fill a good-sized library to record in detail the myriad styles of flying machines and balloons that have been invented, most of them within a comparatively few years. It is scarcely necessary to say that all the flying machines have proved utter failures, because of their being based on natural law. Balloons inflated by hydrogen or coal gas have not materially advanced in utility since the days of the Montgolfier. With all our boasted skill in other fields, we have been obliged to submit to the caprices of the wind when in the air. There has been no method found of propelling or guiding a balloon filled with gas. The great surface which a bag containing hundreds of thousands of cubic feet of gas offers, precludes this.

But man is going to navigate the air at will. It will be accomplished by the vacuum system. This method allows a firm structure, shaped so as to offer as little resistance to the wind, as the hull of a vessel for instance. The vacuum method is to be used by Dr. A. De Bousset, as the ascensional power of the vacuum air-ship designed by him, and for which a House committee has reported favorably a bill appropriating $150,000 to aid in its construction. The vacuum theory is not new by any means, and is based on an unalterable law of physics, which proves the practicability of its ascensional force. The immense advantage of the system over all others is the opportunity it offers to build a firm structure, shaped so as to offer the least resistance to the wind. De Bousset's machine will consist of a steel cylinder 654 feet long, with a diameter of 138 feet. The ends will be cone shaped. It will be propelled and steered by air screws capable of exhausting 300,000 cubic feet of air per minute, which, it is calculated, will give a speed of 75 miles an hour. A 100-horse power electric motor will drive these screws, and that in turn, will derive its energy from storage batteries. It is estimated that but one-third of this power will be necessary to propel the ship, the rest being held in reserve. The cylinder will be built of steel plate, one forty-fourth of an inch thick. These plates have already been tested and found capable of sustaining double the pressure they will be called upon to bear. The interior of the vessel will be divided into compartments, which, together with braces, will give the proper strength to the structure. The whole is intended to weigh 260,680 pounds.

The volume of air contained in the cylinder would weigh 719,707 pounds, which would give a lifting power, were the vacuum complete, of 459,027 pounds outside of the cylinder itself. Even if the vacuum is not complete—say within a third—still the lifting power would be 306,018 pounds, or 153,009 tons—quite sufficient to carry nearly 2,000 passengers. There will be what might be termed a superstructure under the cylinder, on which the engines for exhausting the air and propelling it will be placed, and upon which the freight and passengers will also be carried. It is by aid of the exhausting pumps that the machine is to be raised and lowered. The altitude attained will depend entirely on the completeness of the vacuum. A greater height can be reached with this air-ship than with the hydrogen method, because there is no danger of the thing bursting, as has often occurred in the old style, by the expanding of the hydrogen.

The bill describes the vessel as being a medium for rapid transportation of freight and passengers for long and short distances, overland or trans-oceanic; for purposes of commerce and for exploration, observation, etc. The constantly-increasing cheapness of aluminum, which is three times lighter and three times stronger than steel, gives great promise for the future of the vacuum system, as it will reduce the weight of the structure to almost 15 per cent. of that of steel.—Boston Transcript.

A Good Record.

From a letter of Dr. John E. Edwards, of the Virginia Conference, published in the St. Louis Advocate, we make this extract:

August 1st. To-day I am 74 years of age, and yet I only know I am old by the calendar. My sympathies are with the young. I try to keep abreast with the times. I read as much as at any time in my life, and write even more. I am just now on the last quarter of my fourth year on the Mount Vernon charge in Danville, Va. During the last two years I have never failed to open my Sunday-school with prayer, except on two Sundays when absent from the city, nor have I, even from indisposition, failed to preach Sunday morning and night, except on one occasion when suffering from hoarseness. All my pastoral work has been regularly attended to, beside preaching during the week at neighboring protracted meetings in the country. I am now finishing my 54th year in the pastorate, never having been anything other than pastor. Five years of early life were spent on circuits, the remainder of my ministry has been spent on "stations," as we call them. Thus far I have never failed to carry up to Conference every dollar of the "assessments" made on the charge I have served; nor, in any instance, have I ever failed, during these 54 years in the itinerancy, to receive every dollar in the way of "allowance" or "salary" or "traveling expenses" due me from the charges to which I have been assigned. I am to-day, thank God, as well and as cheerful as I have ever been. I have been "well to do" in worldly goods, and I have been poor, and yet I never lost a half-hour's sleep from the loss of money in my life, and I have lost a good deal for a Methodist preacher. I never thought it a sin to laugh. My piety never took that turn. In religious experience I am a 365th degree man—a "change" every day—better and better.

WARS OF CHRISTIAN NATIONS.—Since January 1, 1800, the nations of Christendom have indulged in some forty-seven great wars, and leaving minor squabbles and indirect expenses out of view, our sacrifices on the altar of wars since that day may be roughly estimated at $130,000,000,000, or just about 500,000,000 pounds of gold—sums which may be pronounced in two seconds, though a freight train transporting the gold in American box cars of the average size, and running at the usual rate of speed, would be two hours in passing any given point, for such a train would be twenty-two miles long. An equivalent in one thousand pound bank-notes, might be crammed into a box that could be carried on a medium-sized express wagon; but with the contents of that box we might have built double-track railroads from Halifax to Valparaiso, from Paris to Peking, from Cape Town to Stockholm; we might have bridged or under-tunneled the English Channel, the Straits of Gibraltar, the Kattegat, and the Hellespont, the Mississippi at New Orleans, and the Amazon at Para; we might have drained the Zuyder Zee and the Florida swamps; covered the hills of Asia Minor with cedars and the Libyan Desert with palm trees, converted Greece and Persia into garden lands, and Timbuctoo into a sea-port town; we might have done all that, and have money enough left to celebrate the birth of a new era by a grand international thanksgiving day.—John Bright.

The church falters and is weak on account of lack of faith. With the outstretching fields of heathen lands waiting for the sowers and reapers, the church halts; it looks at the open doors into which God is evidently inviting it as if it did not quite comprehend what it meant. Yet the history of Christianity teaches that God works only through the instruments which he has provided, the written word and the personal labor of those who have passed from death to life. Probably there is not a mission field in the world where twice the number of missionaries might not be profitably employed. And it is the same at home. There are thousands in all our cities and in waste places who have no one to care for their souls, although there are thousands of unemployed Christians within a few minutes' walk of the places which these Christless people call their homes. We need a genuine salvation corps that rejoices in doing God's will and hungers for the privilege of seeking after the unconverted.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The convention of the American party at Washington on August 13, nominated James L. Curtis, of New York, for president. Mayor Hewitt, of New York, received 1 vote and James S. Negley, of Pennsylvania, 4 votes.

Hon. James G. Blaine went to Portland, Me., on the fifteenth instant, to be present at a meeting held in his honor. After a number of addresses of welcome had been delivered, Mr. Blaine rose to return his thanks and spoke at some length upon political matters.

Hon. L. S. Ross was renominated for governor by the Texas Democratic State Convention, August 15.

Mr. Mills, of Texas, is about to start out on an extensive tour, during which he will make a number of tariff reform speeches. He expects to go first to Huntington, W. Va., and thence to Trenton, N. Y., then to Chicago and then Northwest. He will probably be hard at work until after the election.

The steamers "Gelser" and "Thingvalla" collided off Salde Island, near the coast of Nova Scotia, on August 14. The former sunk in a few minutes after the collision, and 105 lives were lost. The "Thingvalla" was so disabled that she had to put into Halifax.

With reference to a reported riot at Abbeville, La., on August 15, or that the negroes are arming throughout Vermillion and Iberia parishes for that purpose, it will be proper to say that no race issue is involved in the troubles at Abbeville, but that it is a question of public sentiment entertained by both whites and blacks against a number of bad characters of both races.

The fever at Jacksonville, Fla., is no longer epidemic, and on August 16 it was reported that there were no new cases, no deaths and only twenty persons under treatment at that place.

Gen. Gibson, of Louisiana, spoke on the fisheries treaty on August 16. His speech is considered an admirable presentation of the history and facts of the case, and Senators on both sides of the chamber declared that it was the best one that had been made during the discussion.

In a riot which occurred in Iberia parish, La., on August 17, twenty negroes and one white man were slain.

It is said that a proposition is under consideration by the Democratic campaign managers to arrange for a joint discussion of the tariff question by Speaker Carlisle and Mr. Blaine. It is proposed to challenge Mr. Blaine to meet Mr. Carlisle and dispute the question in alternate speeches in the twelve principal cities of the Union, six to be named by Mr. Blaine and six by the Speaker.

A storm swept over New Orleans and vicinity on last Saturday, Sunday and Monday, doing considerable damage. The losses are estimated at millions of dollars.

FOREIGN.

The eleventh Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association of the World convened in Stockholm, Sweden, on August 15.

The through railway train from Paris arrived at Constantinople on the fifteenth instant.

General Boulanger arrived at Abbaville, August 16. He went to the cemetery of the place to put a wreath upon the tomb of Admiral Courbet. Upon leaving the cemetery General Boulanger addressed the crowd which had gathered. A row followed and gendarmes dispersed the rioters. A large number of arrests were made.

The Emperor William will visit King Humbert at Rome, in October. His visit will last from the 15th to the 18th of that month.

The Emperor William attended the unveiling of the monument erected in memory of the late Prince Frederick Charles, at Frankfort, August 15. In a toast to German unity he said that 46,000,000 of Germans would die rather than deliver a single stone of Alsace-Lorraine to France.

At a meeting of the Liverpool Reform Club it was resolved to start a fund to assist Mr. Parnell in meeting the expenses of his action against the London Times.

Other members of the Irish Parliament party have announced their intention to bring suits against the Times. They say their object is to mulct the paper for costs.

General Von Moltke has been relieved of duty as chief of the general staff of the German army. General Von Waldersee succeeds him. Emperor William has written General Von Moltke a gracious and affectionate letter, nominating him as president of country defense. The appointment thus conferred upon Count Von Moltke was held by the late Emperor Frederick until he ascended the throne, since when it has been vacant. Count Von Moltke continues on the active list.

Advices from Spain say a military conspiracy has been discovered at Madrid. A cavalry officer and several sergeants and privates have been arrested.

A monument dedicated to Victory was unveiled at Leipsic, August 18, by the King and Queen of Saxony. Among the prominent people present were Count Von Moltke, Princes George and Frederick August of Saxony, and the members of the ministry.

A thunder storm passed over eastern Ontario and the whole of Quebec on August 16 and 17, and was the most terrific ever known here. Hundreds of houses and barns have been burned or blown down. Crops are in many places totally destroyed. Horses and cattle by the hundreds have been killed. Nearly $2,000,000 worth of property, and many lives lost.

Fourth Week in August.

What a wonderful amount of malaria! Malaria in the country from undrained swamp, from stagnant pool, and from decaying vegetation. Malaria in town from sewer gas, from unventilated houses and from a thousand unsuspected causes. Half the people you meet have malarial troubles in some form or other. Many people who went out of town for the summer to "health resorts," where they expected to be braced up with pure air, have come back with malaria in their systems.

Malaria attacks the liver, sometimes causing troublesome and protracted fevers; sometimes producing only a slight derangement of that organ and its connections. Malarial attacks, whether small or great, ought to be overcome as soon as possible. There is no telling the amount of mischief they may do if allowed to continue their evil work.

With such an effective remedy at hand as Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient, nobody ought to suffer long with a malarial attack. This famous remedy strikes at the root of the trouble and gets rid of the poison in the system which has caused the disorder. Its action is as delightful as it is prompt. For all liver obstructions, bowel irregularities, sick headaches, and the other ailments of the hot-weather season, Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient has no equal. All the druggist sell it.

GOD OVER ALL.

BY S. M. V. COLE.

The glowing map of night reveals
Its circling orbs upon their way;
The wood is leafing; wind and sun
Bear roses to the rustic wheels.

Lo forth, ye dreaming of the goal
That summons all the living years.
Hear, could the vast mysterious spheres,
The oldness one forever roll.

The God-sphere holding each in place;
So that the song rolls and a jar
In earth or Ore remotest star
Can lend no discord but a grace.

To him who marks the sparrow's fall
Nothing is great or small or strange;
Death has its bear and Pole to the eye,
And calls the love of God through all.

Help us, O Lord, to hear Thy love;
Thy love is great; help Thou our woe
To thy own law coal guides us still
And guides the wandering lights above.

A Bishop on His Travels.

HERE AND THERE IN MONTANA.

MR. EDITOR: Returning from the Yellowstone National Park, I reached Helena, the capital of Montana, on Saturday night, and spent Sunday, July 22, in that growing city. Large congregations quite filled our spacious temple on Grand street, both morning and evening, and gave patient heed to some lengthy prophesying. After long waiting, a pastor came to them several years ago, and our little band has entered upon a new career of prosperity. For six years the doors were closed, and the bell was silent, while their call was repeated for a faithful shepherd. Loyal to their convictions and unyielding in their attachments, our brethren watched and waited for the joy of a better morning. And it has come. They are well organized, harmonious, aggressive, enterprising and hopeful. We have a substantial church building, a nice brick parsonage, and a good congregation.

I am indebted to Bros. A. G. Clark and S. C. Ashby, strong business men of Montana, for delightful hospitality and many courtesies. Bro. Clark gave me an outing through the city, and much information about many things. I was quite surprised at the rapid growth of the place, and the evidences of great wealth on every hand. The county court-house, just completed, used also at present by the territorial officers and Legislature, is a massive stone structure of architectural symmetry, and cost over $250,000. I saw palatial residences worthy of any Eastern city, ranging in value up to seventy-five or an hundred thousand dollars. The government assay office was visited, and the various processes of eliminating the pure metal from its crude combinations were explained by courteous employees. The office does an immense business, making weekly shipments of thousands to Eastern mints. I had the privilege of handling, but not pocketing, a bar of gold stamped $3,000.

The ride through Chinatown gave me a vivid appreciation of Oriental sights, sounds and smells. There are possibly a thousand Chinese in Helena engaged in every business from hod-carrying to merchandizing. They are all gamblers, and train with the vicious classes. Over several of their huts I saw for the first time in life this sign—"Licensed Gambling House." The same was seen in other parts of the city, and in other towns in Montana over more pretentious buildings. These houses are licensed by territorial law, each being required to put up a sign advertising the place. But there is a growing moral sentiment against this vice of a new country, which will refuse revenue from such a source and at such a price. A Sunday law is sadly needed in Montana. All lines of business are pushed as eagerly on the Lord's day as on Monday. House-building, reaping, hay-harvesting, mining, etc., know no Sabbath for man or beast.

Not far away, and in full view of Helena, are grand mountain ranges, the most conspicuous peak of which was called by the Indians "Bear's Tooth," because of its jagged appearance. Of the vast wealth of Helena's placer mines, and the thrilling history of their discovery in "Last Chance" gulch, you have read. Fabulous stories have been told of their yield. One was that a man dug a cellar and threw the excavated dirt into the street. A shrewd miner asked for the pile, promising to return one-half of the proceeds. Nothing more was thought of it; but in a few days the miner called and gave the gentleman $692, as his half of the dirt.

Presiding Elder Stanley, who was with me at Helena, had made appointments for us at Deer Lodge on Monday night, and Anaconda on Tuesday night, including a church dedication at this latter place. We left the capital city in the afternoon. About twenty miles away we crossed the great continental divide—the crest of the Rocky Mountains—and found ourselves on the slopes of the Pacific. By immense curves and steep grades, and the aid of two mountain engines, our train climbed to the national summits, where the showers divide themselves between the Columbia river on the west, and the Mississippi on the east. A few hundred feet from the topmost peak the road is lost in the darkness of a long tunnel. Emerging on the western side, and looking up at the snowy sentinels that guard with eternal vigilance the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific alike, a strange exultation filled my soul—praise to God for his wonderful works and patriotic pride in my country, so vast in extent, so rich in resources, so thrilling with memories, and so marvelous in prophetic possibilities.

At Garrison we change cars and take the Montana Union down the beautiful Deer Lodge Valley, following the course of the charming little river of the same name. I have seen nothing more attractive than these narrow, fertile Montana valleys, blooming with beauty between vast ranges of sombre mountains crowned with snow. The town of Deer Lodge was reached about eight o'clock, and we found the Rev. John Moore, late of the White River Conference, in waiting to receive and hurry us to the Christian Church, where a congregation and already assembled. The next morning I visited our modest little log house—the first church building in Deer Lodge, and the shelter for all denominations for several years—which was cleared of debt and dedicated by Bishop Marvin. The memory of his great sermons and seraphic spirit yet abides fresh and green. We must rebuild in that growing college town.

The afternoon of Tuesday found us in the magic city of Anaconda, which, it is said, contains the greatest copper reduction works in the world. Bro. Barbee, brother of the Book Agent, recently from Tennessee, has charge of the parsonage, the beautiful little brick church dedicated that night, a capital Sunday-school, and a growing congregation, but not a communicant member. In this new country that is the natural order. Give a preacher shelter for his family and a place to preach, and he will "rustle" a congregation. Gratifying growth will be reported from Anaconda this year.

On Wednesday morning Butte was reached on a delayed train, and the Conference opened at eleven o'clock. For two years our flock in that mining city has been shepherded by Rev. A. C. Coney, a former and valued member of the Louisiana Conference. He has made full proof of his ministry, and found favor with the people. For the third year he has been returned to that charge, and, in addition, becomes editor of the new Conference organ, The Montana Methodist. Of the Conference proceedings you have probably heard from others. The occasion was pleasant in all respects, the reports quite encouraging, and the brethren went out greatly in spirit. Some features of the Conference were notably gratifying—the net numerical increase of nearly forty per cent., the strong accession to our preaching force, the full payment of all connectional assessments, and the heroic purpose of the brethren to use greater diligence in pushing the work. And after a careful survey of the field by personally visiting almost every pastoral charge in the Conference, I am satisfied that with men and money liberally and judiciously employed when Stateler and Stanley first made the call, ours would now be, socially and influentially, the State Church of Montana. We have even now better access to the agricultural classes than any other church, and have an open door in every community. The spirit of opposition, that nailed a Confederate flag to the spire of one of our churches some years ago, has given away to profound respect and fraternal regard. We preach a non-sectional, non-political gospel.

Butte is quite a city, and seems to have grown literally by the fabled touch of Midas. In 1875 the first mill was constructed for working silver ores, and the town had a population of only 200. Now it has a dozen or more massive mills and mines for working gold, silver and copper, costing millions, and their daily output runs up into the thousands. The population is about twenty thousand, and increasing daily.

After Conference I visited the Bitter Root Valley, and preached at Victor and Stevensville. At the latter place Bro. Stanley lives, and also Rev. T. W. Flowers, long a member of the Mississippi Conference. After remaining for some years on the supernumerary list, Bro. Flowers returns to the effective ranks. I hope to hear soon of his wife's recovery from a long and almost fatal illness. A more cheerful, trustful sufferer I have not seen.

Of the climate, soil, and social life of the Territory, I can not write at length. The average Montanian apologizes for the rigorous winters, discourses on the delightful summers, and enlarges on the marvelous productiveness of the soil. Well, the people look healthy and are evidently perfectly contented with their country. I am satisfied, however, that for a Southerner the Territory had best be seen in midsummer. To be told of the mercury getting down to fifty degrees below zero, and yet be comfortable, must have betrayed in the auditor a slight incredulity. The air is very rare and dry, and, of course, renders the extreme cold more endurable. The nights are most delightful in summer, though in midday the thermometer registers higher than in New Orleans.

After nearly a month in Montana of hard work and pleasant associations, I left on the morning of August 4 for the Columbia Conference, by way of Spokane Falls, Washington Territory, where the Sabbath was spent.

Fraternally,

The Baptists Ahead—The Reasons.

BY REV. A. D. MILLER.

MR. EDITOR: I see in the ADVOCATE, of August 9, some statistics taken from the Independent, and, according to its statement, the Baptists were in advance of all other churches in the United States last year, in number of accessions.

"And, now, if that is a correct statement, as I suppose it is, there are reasons for their being in advance, and we ought to hunt them up and correct them, as the Methodist Church is the largest church outside of the Catholic, and probably as wealthy or the wealthiest of any. I think it ought to be in advance in number of accessions, if there is not something wrong somewhere. I think there are several reasons, which I will give briefly.

1. The Baptist preachers usually have only from two to four churches; so they give each church a two days' meeting monthly, and sacramental meeting every three months.

Methodist preachers usually have from six to eight churches; so they usually have only services once a month, and half of them evening services at that, and many churches do not have a sacramental service once a year, as many of our pastors are not ordained, and local elders can not be had.

2. Baptist preachers, having only from two to four churches apiece, can swap around, and give each church from one to two weeks' special effort in the summer, and they do it; and when they get them interested, they hold on till they get them in the church.

Methodist preachers, having from six to eight churches, and only about six or eight weeks adapted to that kind of meetings in the country, usually only give a church about from four to six days, and it usually takes about four days to get the church in working order and get sinners interested, and the average preacher only able to preach about from four to six days in the week, and local help being scarce in many circuits, and only a very small margin of time to spare to swap with the itinerant; so you see our meetings, camp and protracted, only last usually from four to six days, just long enough to get the church revived and sinners interested, and the meeting closes, and some one else comes along and gets the fruit.

I know of what I am talking. I was once holding a meeting, and at the close of eight days we had received four members, and we went on four more days, and at the close received twenty-eight members; so you see what a little time will do when all is right. The most of the members that I receive is after the fourth day of my meetings.

3. Baptist preachers preach their doctrine, some part of it, almost every Sunday; and, according to their doctrine, it is a very easy matter to get to heaven. I heard two of their leading preachers preaching not long ago (educated men), and they said if a man believed that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, he was converted, and a fit subject for baptism; and one of them said a sinner had no right to pray at all, and further said, every time a sinner prayed he sunk his soul that much deeper into hell. He said all he had to do was to believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. The other said that nothing a man could do or leave undone after conversion would affect his salvation at all. So you see they have an easy way of getting to heaven. And people naturally fall into that idea.

Methodist preachers are too tender-toed; they are afraid of hurting feelings. I have heard a great many say they had never heard a Methodist doctrinal sermon, and have heard preachers say they had never preached a doctrinal sermon.

I do not believe in taking advantage of the pulpit to tongue-lash anyone; but I do believe we ought to preach our doctrine plainly and often, so that the people may know what we believe and why we believe it; and, if we fail to do it, we need not be surprised at others going ahead in statistics, and they ought.

4. Baptist papers publish articles on their doctrine almost every week, and keep their people posted. They mould sentiment for their church, and that is right. If they believe it, let them preach it and publish it to the world.

Methodist papers, with a very few exceptions, hardly ever publish an article on doctrine or any subject that would excite controversy. So you see we are lagging behind while others are advancing, and it will continue to be so until our papers and preachers and people come to the front, and stand by and defend the doctrine and discipline of our church.

Brethren of the ministry and press, we have one of the greatest churches on earth, and all we have to do to fairly outstrip all others is to stand "every man in his place and cry" (from his pulpit and press), "The sword of the Lord" (and of Methodism).

My brethren of the ministry, if we love God and our Methodism, let us rise up and do our whole duty. When we have a good meeting, continue as long as we can do good. Let us work for conversions and also for numbers. If we believe we are right, let's persuade the people to be Methodist. May God bless our Methodism and all the Israel of God! Amen!

Increase in Crime.

The Florida Christian Advocate, discussing the subject, "The Body in Religion," has this to say in regard to the increase of crime in our country:

But the strangest fact of our times is the reign of crime. Horrible deeds are multiplying to an alarming extent; and its gets worse and worse. Many reasons are given to account for it, but the most influential has been overlooked. It is the fact that millions are cut off from Sabbath rest and worship, and the fact that millions more labor so continuously that they have very little time for sleep and home-life and religion, and these facts cause evil forces to accumulate unrestained, except by toil, and at times they will break forth into crime. Feverish unrest takes possession; desperation follows; the heart says: "Life is a cruel bondage, society heartless, employers merciless oppressors, and a man may as well die as live;" and the heaving tide overflows into criminal excesses.

Sunday labor must be stopped. It is undermining our Christian civilization; and, so long as it continues, an immense number will be kept away from religious influences preparing for that mental and moral state, out of which come labor troubles, strikes, and riots; and worse things may be expected under separation from religion. The Reign of Terror and the horrors of the French Commune in Paris came from labor divorced by infidelity from religion; and now the dominant materialism is driving society on to similar results by separating labor from religion. Down with Sunday work!

But Sunday work is not all that must stop. If man is to be man, and religion is to have its legitimate effect upon him, the demands of his nature must be allowed. Not only restore Sunday to laborers, but restore night and home-life. Close every store and shut up every shop at sundown, so that man may have the day for labor and the night for home comfort and sleep.

Be brief, for it is with words as with sunbeams, the more they are condensed, the deeper they burn.—Southey.

Shall the dead live again? My friends, I can not prove to you that the dead will rise again. I can not prove to you that the sun will rise again. But I surely believe it will. And I as surely believe the dead will rise again. Ah, why should man perish utterly? Blow a little thistle-seed far away, a little thing no bigger than a pin's point; let it fall on the dark earth, even though it be in the farthest corner of the world, yet it will in the spring-time come forth a lovely flower, perfect in its kind. And man is surely as much to God as a little thistle-down.

Whoever gives his heart will have a heart to give. The consecrated heart stirs one up to consecration. He who has not given his heart to God is sure to be very conscious of the act of giving if he parts with anything he calls his own; whatever he offers to God's service he seems to give away. But he who realizes and rejoices in the fact that he belongs to God feels that what he parts with in the service of the Lord is only the Lord's offering. It is no wonder, when the Israelites came to realize that they were the Lord's people, that their earrings and bracelets and necklaces, and other spoils brought out of Egypt, were transmuted into the furnishings of the tabernacle.

(Standard.)

Every great leader of men is adapted to the age in which he leads. A Samson could not be prime minister in England to-day. But equally an eloquent, cultured, scholarly Gladstone could never have been prime minister in Israel in Samson's day, nor could he have carried dismay into the Philistine host. The world had not yet put on the silk and broadcloth of our softer civilization. Then it required a man who could slay his thousands, not with the jawbone of a practiced parliamentarian in debate, but with the jawbone of an ass in deadly fight. Great men, to be judged fairly, must be considered in their century and circumstances. Would that we had more spiritual Samsons to wage war against the modern Philistines.

(Zion's Herald.)

"The cup which my Father has given me, shall I not drink it?" It was a greater thing to say and do that than to calm seas or raise the dead. Prophets and apostles could work wondrous miracles, but they could not always do and suffer the will of God. To do and suffer God's will, no matter where it leads us nor what it takes from us, is still the highest form of the most sublime Christian achievement. To have the bright aspirations of young life forever blasted; to bear daily a burden never congenial, and see no relief; to be pinched by poverty when you only desire a competence for the good and comfort of loved ones; to be fettered by some incurable physical disability; to be stripped bare of loved ones until you stand alone to meet the shocks of life—to be able to say in such a school of discipline, "The cup which my Father has given me, shall I not drink it?"—this is faith at the highest, and spiritual success at the crowning point. Great faith is exhibited not so much in ability to do as to suffer.

(Evangelist, N. Y.)

As we get older and come nearer to the time when we expect to change this mortal for an immortal life, the more frequently we ask ourselves what are to be our employments in that life. Heaven certainly is not to be for any of us a season of idleness, although it is to be a place of rest. Rest, everlasting rest, is promised to the weary and heavy-laden toilers of this life, and Longfellow may not, after all, have been very far astray, when in his delightful "Hyperion" he represents the bustling and hard-working wife of a poor German blacksmith, as having no other conception of heaven than as a place where, her working days all over, she could put on for good her clean dress, white cap and apron, and sit in an easy chair all day and sing the grand old German hymns she loved so much. Rest, perfect rest, for her wearied soul and body, would be heaven. It may be an essential element in the happiness of all of us who toil as she toiled, and to whom rest will prove as grateful as she thought it would be to her. But while this is true, heaven is also to be a place of new and unceasing activities, but activity without weariness, in which the joy of intense life will be combined with a feeling of profound repose. The activities of heaven can not all be expended in adoring and thankful song. Though our songs could never become monotonous, we shall probably be no more alike in heaven than we are on earth, and our perfect happiness there may to some extent be the result of the intercourse of minds infinitely varied, and employments adapted to the wants and dispositions of all.

THE PASTOR'S PRAYER.

BY REV. W. N. HOBB.

Alone he sat among his books,
The printed page had lost its charm.
His thoughtful eyes of the straying ones
Of his dear flock who suffer harm.
And, though still, he yielded no alarm.

"Oh, grant me wisdom, Lord," he cried;
"Thy servant's eyes are strangely blurred.
How may these wanderers be won
From worldly ways?—by strong, keen sword,
Or by the calm, persuasive word?"

"Grant me thy spirit, dear Lord Christ,
That I may surely rise above
All fleshly passion, faithfully
To speak sweet words these hearts to move,
Or wield the sword with arm of love.

"And if it be thy will I ask
Keep silence (save as I shall cry
By day and night to thee, O Lord),
Help me to throw all hard thoughts by
And greet each wanderer lovingly.

"And I would plead for one thing more;
That I may very patient be
With those who seem so slow to grow
In grace of heart—let this I see:
Thou art so patient, Lord, with me?"

Sunday-School Lesson.—Sept. 9.

THE UNBELIEF OF THE PEOPLE.

Numbers xiv, 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.—Heb. iii, 19.

TIME.—B. C. 1490, in July or August.

PLACE.—Kadesh, or Kadesh-barnea, identified beyond reasonable question by Rowlands, Williams, Palmer, Trumbull, and others, with Ayn Quadees (or Ain Gadis). (See verse 26.)

1. All the congregation Except Caleb and Joshua, and some few others. Lifted up their voice, and cried—This appalling description of Canaan had so depressing an influence upon the whole congregation (camp. Deuteronomy i, 28: they "made their heart melt"—that is, threw them into utter despair), that they raised a loud cry. People wept that night—It was the sin of unbelief. This had been the root of all their evils. Everything had been done that could be done to develop their faith; and yet when the great crisis comes, when the time has arrived to enter the land which the Lord has promised them, and which they are to subdue for him, they show that instead of being "a kingdom of priests," a people who know that the God who made heaven and earth and sea is their God, and, therefore, nothing can withstand them when they advance in the power of his might, they have not the courage even to make the feeblest attempt.

2. Murmured against Moses ... Aaron—This is the way of the mob. Always ready to burden some one with reproaches. On the present occasion their murmuring was not against Moses and Aaron only, but they openly rebelled against Jehovah himself, to whom they ascribed, in the way of reproach, their exodus from the land of Egypt. Would God that we had died in ... Egypt—Such insolence to their generous leaders, and such base ingratitude to God, show the deep degradation of the Israelites, and the absolute necessity of the decree that debarred that generation from entering the promised land. Would God we had died in this wilderness—It was not long before they had their desire, and did die in the wilderness.

3. Wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this land, to fall by the sword—Their disappointment ripened into a mutiny more pronounced than any which had yet appeared among them. They looked back wistfully to their old slave-pens in Egypt, and they accused the Lord of bringing them out of their bondage that they might fall by the swords of the Canaanites. With strange inconsistency, the fear of death in the future made them wish that they had been dead already. That our wives and our children should be a prey—That is, should fall into the hands of the enemy after their entrance into the land of Canaan. They had seen all the plagues on Egypt; they had seen Pharaoh's proud host buried in the Red Sea; they had seen Amalek smitten before Israel while the hands of prayer were upstayed before the Lord—and must all this go for nothing? God had promised to give them Canaan; could they not trust him? They had bound themselves by most solemn covenant to follow him as their king; and shall they go back upon this great covenant? Were it not better for us to return into Egypt—The sinfulness and insane folly of their conduct are almost incredible. Their conduct, however, is paralleled by too many among ourselves, who shrink from the smallest difficulties, and rather remain slaves to sin than resolutely try to surmount the obstacles that lie in our way to the Canaan above.

4. Let us make a captain, and ... return into Egypt—Nothing can be conceived more absurd, as well as rebellious, than the whole conduct of Israel on this occasion. Surely it would have been at least as eligible to fall soldier-like, sword in hand, in attempting to conquer Canaan, as to die slaves in Egypt, or by famine or pestilence in the wilderness? The Lord was directly charged with an intention of bringing them out of Egypt, by altering them with the most encouraging promises, on purpose to destroy them and their families; and the whole present government of his express appointment was to be set aside, and a new leader chosen, in opposition to him, and in defiance of him. Such is human nature! and such counselors are discontent and passion!

5-8. Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly—At this murmuring, which was growing into open rebellion, Moses and Aaron fell upon their faces before the whole of the assembled congregation, namely, to pour out their distress before the Lord, and move him to interpose; that is to say, after they had made an unsuccessful attempt, as we may supply from Deuteronomy i, 29-31, to cheer up the people, by pointing them to the help they had thus far received from God. "In such distress, nothing remained but to pour out their desires before God; offering their prayer in public, however, and in the sight of all the people, in the hope of turning their minds" (Calvin). Joshua ... and Caleb ... rent their clothes—To testify their hearty grief for the people's blasphemy against God and sedition against Moses, and that dreadful judgment which they easily foresaw this must bring upon the congregation and people of God. The land ... is an exceeding good land—The two honest spies testified their grief and horror, in the strongest manner, at the mutiny against Moses and the blasphemy against God; while at the same time they endeavored, by a truthful statement, to persuade the people of the ease with which they might obtain possession of so desirable a country, provided they did not, by their rebellion and ingratitude, provoke God to abandon them.

9. Only rebel not ye against the Lord—They had proved the dreadful folly as well as sin of doing this. Neither fear ye the people ... for they are bread for us—We shall destroy them as easily as we do our bread or common food. Their defense is departed from them—Hebrew, shadow. "Alas! those poor people have lost their defense," literally, "their shadow," a metaphor highly expressive of protection and support in the sultry eastern countries. So that the meaning of the phrase, "their defense is departed from them," is that the favor of God was now lost to those whose iniquities were full, and transferred to the Israelites. The Lord is with us—"If God be for us, who can be against us?"

10. All the congregation bade stone them—Perhaps the other spies, counting this language a reproach of their conduct and a charge of direct falsehood; or else the rulers of the tribes and families first gave the word, and it soon became the general outcry through the whole multitude, that they who were nearest should immediately stone them—that is, not only Caleb and Joshua, but Moses and Aaron also, as it seems probable from the narration. Moses had apprehended the same outbreak of popular violence on a former occasion, and, at a later period, David was threatened in a similar manner. (I Samuel xxx, 6.) The glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle—Excited people resolved to stone them, when Jehovah interposed with his judgment, and his glory appeared in the tabernacle to all the Israelites; that is to say, the majesty of God flashed out before the eyes of the people in a light which suddenly burst forth from the tabernacle. (See at Exodus xvi, 10.) It was seasonably manifested on this great emergency to rescue his embassadors from their perilous situation.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Human nature, apart from God, is true to itself in every age. God's promises will always bear investigation, yet multitudes to-day are more ready to believe a lie than God's word, and the devil knows it and takes advantage of it.

Unbelief is a swift and deadly contagion. It breeds discontent, self-torment, hard thoughts of God, and drives men to suicidal courses.

"The Lord will afford peculiar protection and singular marks of regard to those who, in genuine love, venture to stem the torrent of prevailing iniquity."

"There is a point beyond which it is no longer possible to repair the follies of the past."

A Schoolmaster in a Fog.

BY REV. D. G. W. ELLIS.

MR. EDITOR: "The Schoolmaster," at Vossburg, Miss., submits his "thoughts" to Dr. Abbey's "theological criticism." I do not know whether "The Schoolmaster" intends by this appeal to Dr. Abbey to prevent others from entering into this discussion or not; but I feel, when he publishes his peculiar "thoughts" in the columns of a religious newspaper, that it is the privilege of any one among the thousands of its readers to criticise his statements in a fair, candid and Christian spirit. I hope my venerable friend, Dr. Abbey, will not think I intend to forestall him, for I only want to "cut the tap-root of "The Schoolmaster's" errors, which reveals itself in his first postulate, viz: "The foreknowledge of an event depends upon controlling its cause." This is the foundation upon which he builds his theory of the divine prescience; hence he ought to have made sure of that before he began building upon it. If he had said, "The foreknowledge of an event depends upon its cause being controlled and directed to that end," no one would have dissented. But this would only be saying that the cause of an event causes the event—a truism; hence it is evident that is not what he means. If he said anything to purpose, he must mean that God can not know with absolute certainty that any future event will transpire unless he has the cause of such event under control, and brings to bear omnipotent power to bring into being. Now, so may events contrary to the will of God have transpired in the history of the race. "The Schoolmaster" feels concerned for the honor of God, which he thinks can only be vindicated by pleading ignorance for the infinite Jehovah! Adam would not have fallen, and sin, with its frightful train of consequences, would never have come into being if God could have foreseen them. As these things did not turn out according to the wishes and purposes of God, he is disappointed, and it repents him that he made man. I am not misrepresenting "The Schoolmaster;" "for," says he, "God truly repented having made man, and we are necessarily forced to the conclusion that had he known how man would act he would not have made him!" He thinks if God foresaw these things and yet determined to proceed with the work of creation, that he is responsible for all the wickedness that has occurred in his empire, for he could have prevented it by refusing to create beings capable of sinning. But beings incapable of sinning would have been, at the same time, incapable of holiness, and, hence, could have had no moral character.

When God chose to bring into existence moral beings, he must have had a good and substantial reason for his choice; but if he could not foresee the result, creation was merely an experiment. If "The Schoolmaster" can not see how it is possible for God to foresee a sinful event without ordering, approving and bringing to pass such event, and thereby becoming responsible for it, I despair of being able to help him out of his difficulty. But if foreknowledge of a wicked event makes God responsible for it and the author of it, foreknowledge of a good event also makes him the author of all this latter class of events; and hence, in order to save man's moral agency and responsibility, we will have to leave God ignorant of all future events.

This is the logical result of the proposition upon which "The Schoolmaster" bases his theory, viz: "The foreknowledge of an event depends upon controlling its cause." This makes God ignorant in order to save his goodness. If the only way I could keep faith in the infinite goodness of God was to lose faith in his infinite wisdom, I might then, like "The Schoolmaster," give up the latter rather than the former. There are some who can not, or will not, discriminate between certainty and necessity—"The Schoolmaster" among the number. A necessary event is one that comes into being from the operation of necessary causes. But there are a vast number of events coming into being as the result of the action of free moral agents; these are foreseen and are certain in the mind of God, but are not necessary, because they are not brought into being from the operation of necessary causes. The sin of the Jews in rejecting and crucifying, and of Judas in betraying, Christ, was foreseen and foretold more than a thousand years before these events occurred; and, according to "The Schoolmaster," God controlled the causes of these events, and hence became thereby responsible for them.

The foregoing are a few of the many objections that may be urged against the postulate of "The Schoolmaster" upon which he builds so confidently. If the foregoing serve to help him or others out of the fogs of error into the clear light of truth, I shall feel abundantly compensated.

John iii. 5.

"Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

Without referring to the opinions of others in explanation of these words of Jesus to Nicodemus, I will give in brief my opinion. It has no reference to baptism whatever. Nicodemus, as a ruler among the Jews, was an educated man; versed in all the Scriptures; understood the baptisms of the Jewish Church, also the baptism of John. Nicodemus knew that the expression, "born of water," had no reference to baptism; hence no reply to Jesus. Nicodemus knew the mere baptizing "with water" could not effect this great change, and that in baptism there is nothing that represents a birth. The reverse is also true. Jesus used the metaphor, "water," to represent the gospel, then known to the world. Referring to the Word of God, we find the metaphor, "water," used in several places: Isaiah xii, 3—"Therefore, with joy shall ye draw water out of the well of salvation." Isaiah lv, 1—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Jeremiah ii, 13, charges the people with "forsaking the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that hold no water." Jeremiah xvii, 13—"The Lord is the fountain of living waters." Zechariah xiv, 8—"And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out of Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in winter and summer shall it be so." All these Scriptures refer to the Word of God. Let us come to the words of Jesus: and we will find that he used the metaphor, "water," to represent the gospel in several places: John iv, 14 (speaking to the woman of Samaria): "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John vii, 37, 38—"If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink," etc.

Notice that Christ uses two factors essential in this new birth—"water and the Spirit." I Corinthians iv, 15—"I have begotten you through the gospel." James i, 18—"Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." Other Scriptures teaching that "God hath begotten us again to a living hope:" I Peter i, 2, 3, teaches that in "being born again by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."—John i, 12, 13, teaches that we become the sons of God by believing on his name—that is, the gospel. Ephesians v, 26 (in speaking of Christ who gave himself for the church)—"That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." Hence the two. The gospel is the Word of God to beget. The Holy Spirit is God to give life. Paul says: "Ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the Spirit of God." Christ says that "now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." Titus (iii, 5) sums up the whole matter in a few words and gives the full meaning: "He saved us by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." St. John, in his apocalyptical vision—Revelation vii, 17: "For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living water." Revelation xxi, 6—"I will give unto them that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely." Revelation xxii, 1—"And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb;" verse 17: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

Water is a common emblem in Scripture; and its general significance is apparent. I trust the above will convince anyone that there is no baptism in the expression of Jesus in being "born of water," and that he had reference to the gospel. This is the synopsis of a sermon I prepared two years ago; preached it, and one good Baptist said that I knocked all the water out of his strongest citadel, and that it was as dry as a "powder-house." The Remedy for Care.

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."—I Peter v, 7.

None are strangers to cares, both real and imaginary; hence we shall not dwell upon the nature and effects of cares, troubles and trials, but rather let us consider the remedy or relief. We readily seek relief from the ordinary ills of life. We do not hesitate often to try, upon very doubtful testimony, remedies for the most serious troubles and ills pertaining to our physical being, our temporal affairs, and sometimes regard very favorably even doubtful remedies for our social, political and religious troubles. The mere suggestion of a friend or stranger is often considered sufficient reason to adopt a plan or try a remedy.

The will of God concerning us is that we be cheerful, contented and happy. He has pledged himself to aid us to the extent of our needs. By our own actions or failures to act we have rendered ourselves unhappy, and, notwithstanding we have been disobedient, forfeiting all claims upon God, rendered ourselves unworthy of the least of his blessings, he still says, "Cast all your cares upon him, for he careth for you."

Let us ask ourselves why we do not. Do we doubt his word? Will he, does he still wait to be gracious? See him, hear him, as he looks over the city: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" See him as he goes about doing good—tired, thirsty, hungry—having not where to lay his head. See, hear him in the Garden of Gethsemane; look at him as he hangs upon the cross. Oh, yes, he is willing! But is he able? See him as he commands the wind and the sea, and they obey him; see him as he heals the leper, opens the eyes of the blind; at the grave of Lazarus, raising the dead to life; see him as he, of his own power, comes forth from the dead, conquering death and the grave; and, besides this, all this, he says he is able. Do you, reader, want further evidence of his ability? It is he that bids us cast all our care upon him—and why? For he careth for us. Friend, brother, are you cast down? are you tempted to say, "It is a vain thing to serve the Lord"? Are you in trouble, afflicted, disappointed? Has the Lord taken some loved one, and you "can not understand this strange dispensation of Providence?" Remember, we see through a glass darkly now.

"Poor tempest-tossed soul, be still,
Bid promised grace receive:
'Tis Jesus speaks, 'I must, I will'"— and in humble faith and confidence say—

"I can, I do believe."

God's word is pledged, that his grace shall be sufficient for every need. Then let us "cast all our cares upon him, for he careth for us." Amen!

From the Work.

ROLLING FORK, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: This is undoubtedly one of the finest sections of country to be found anywhere. The lands are exceedingly fertile, and it is wonderful how abundant the yield per acre is in both corn and cotton. A reliable planter told me that he gathered on some land about 100 bushels of corn, and from one to one and a half bales of cotton. I am satisfied I have never anywhere seen lands susceptible of so high a state of cultivation. This has been an exceedingly unfavorable year, on account of excessive rains, and yet the prospects are good for a fair crop. The prospect is far beyond anything that could be hoped for in the month of June. This country certainly has a good future. When its morals are toned up and the hydra-headed monsters, whisky and gambling, are put aside, and planters move out of old ruts, and the church comes out boldly and does its duty, and our churches flourish as a green bay tree, this will be the garden spot of the United States of America. The lands that are in a state of cultivation are valued at fifty dollars per acre now; then one hundred per acre will not buy them. The health of this Deer Creek country is about on an average with any section where malaria prevails. It is said persons who are prudent and not dissipated rarely ever have serious sickness. The most fatal diseases here are pneumonia in winter and hematuria in summer. The most common, chills and fever. There seems to be interest and progress in religion where the soil is cultivated. Dr. Harmon, at Anguilla, just above me, has developed his territory surprisingly. Anguilla, a small town, comes out in all the proportions of a handsome station, demanding services every Sabbath. There is also near by a mission field consisting of five appointments, served by Bro. Henry, a young man, who, Dr. Harmon tells me, is doing a splendid work, the people manifesting a lively interest, and great good being accomplished. Rolling Fork and Carey have been moving steadily forward since early spring. Our new churches, both at Rolling Fork and Carey, we expect to have completed at no distant day in the future. Our congregations are large and appreciative, and we have frequent accessions. To date we have had forty-five accessions, and are looking forward to large ingatherings. Fifteen of these were added recently at Carey, in a protracted service in which I had valuable help from Dr. Jones, of Vicksburg, and Dr. Harmon, of Anguilla. Some of those added to the church are the leading men of this county. We are hoping for great results here at Rolling Fork. If so, this ought to develop into one of the best charges in the Mississippi Conference. The Lord of hosts is with us, and we are expecting a pentecostal shower. Bro. Skipper, I learn, is doing fine work at Mayersville, on the Mississippi; has built a new church, and there is improvement all along the line of church work.

We are glad that Dr. Hunnicutt has accepted the presidency of Centenary College. He is the man for the place, and will take hold in good earnest; determined to make Centenary one of the foremost institutions of the South. There is no reason why it should not be. A beautiful location, handsome buildings, an excellent Christian community and a strong faculty. Why should not Centenary move right up into the front rank? So it will, if our Methodist people will rally to its support by sending their sons to Centenary instead of elsewhere, and giving liberally towards raising that endowment of two hundred and fifty thousand. I am glad to know that already more than ten thousand of the first installment has been raised. Now, Dr. Hunnicutt says he means business, and that is just what every Methodist in the State of Louisiana and Mississippi ought to mean, and rally to old Centenary College and give her, at least, next October, two hundred boys and twenty-five thousand dollars. Christian education must be sustained. W. D. DOMINICK.

SABINE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I commenced a protracted meeting at Bayou Scie on Saturday before the first Sunday in August. I did all the preaching myself, except four sermons that were preached by local preachers. The meeting continued nine days, resulting in twenty-five accessions to the church, and a glorious revival and some conversions. The entire community was stirred to its very center. There were only three or four persons left out of the church at the close of the meeting. The people say that this has been the best meeting that was ever known in this community. Many of the church members labored faithfully and earnestly in this meeting. I have been preaching to the people of Bayou Scie nearly six years. I supplied this work two years as a local preacher; joined the Conference; was sent to Sugar Town at the expiration of two years; was returned to this work, and I am now closing up my fourth year, making in all six years at Bayou Scie. I have received nearly one hundred persons into the church at this place, and I can say that this has been the best and most pleasant year of all. I have been better rewarded up to date, both financially and spiritually, than any year before. We are moving on finely throughout the entire circuit. There have been between forty-five and fifty additions to the church up to date, and almost as many conversions. We will hold our next protracted meeting at Red Land.

REVIVAL AT LONGVIEW.

MR. EDITOR: Longview Church was organized about ten months ago, with seven members. It is well located, is six and one-half miles northwest of Carrollton, and is in the heart of a densely populated country. We have closed a great revival, which resulted in fifty or more conversions, forty-six additions to our church, a few to other churches, the erection of a number of family altars, and the organization of a community prayer meeting. Every shade of religious opinion is represented in the community, but nearly all who profess to be Christians entered into the work. Bro. R. A. Burroughs preached four good sermons, and Bro. B. T. Marshall, a layman, did excellent work, praying and talking with the people. I have spent the heat of summer in a vigorous war on sin, while some of our brethren have fled to the mountains of Hepsidam to enjoy the cool breezes of a more bracing climate. T. W. LEWIS.

WALNUT GROVE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my third protracted meeting, resulting in thirty-four accessions, a large number of conversions, and the church greatly revived. I was assisted by Bros. Miller and McDonald, local preachers, and W. W. Simmons, I. L. Peebles, D. G. W. Ellis and J. G. Cammack, of the traveling connection. These brethren all did efficient work for the Master, and made lasting impressions upon the minds and hearts of the people. To God be all the praise for the happy results of these meetings!

A Shorter Method with Skeptical Scientists.

BY G. J. ABBEY, D. D.

Mere theologians, or Bible-men, have nothing to do with mere scientific blunders that men of science may or may not commit. Our business with them is to defend the Scriptures. Nevertheless a theologian may or may not be a teacher in natural science. Then in that capacity, but not as a theologian, he enters the list of scientific investigation.

Our quarrel with skeptical geologists relates, first, to the origin of Matter, and, secondly, to the origin of Man. Now, let a few axioms be solidly planted, not to be removed.

1. The Bible very clearly states that the origination of matter was the work of God, but is totally silent as to mode, means, process or circumstances relating to the fact.

2. The origination of man was likewise by divine agency, but was not a primary creation; it was a making or evolution from something then and previously existing. And here, too, the Bible is totally silent as to mode, means or circumstances.

3. These two primary facts are in the nature of things incapable of logical or legal denial whether they be true or untrue. And they are alike incapable of proof. These three dogmas must be considered.

The supposition that the agency of God in the origination of matter has been denied upon scientific or logical grounds is a mistake. That would be impossible. It would necessitate the naming of some other creating agent, which would be only to call the Almighty by some other name. If the Bible had gone further and stated some mode of procedure in the creation, such mode might be questioned; and so far as this might seem successful, it would virtually deny the fact as stated. But the Bible does not do this. It merely states that whoever or whatever was the originating cause, that is God. Changing the name changes nothing.

Some naturalists claim to be able to trace the form or forms of matter, as we now see them, step by step, through an almost infinite series of changes, improving at every step, until they reach it in the simplest and most formless state; and they call this process, down through periods of almost endless ages, by the name of "evolution." To this I make no objection, for, whether true or not, the only answer it needs is, that, if so, then that was the divine mode of procedure. This does not question the fact of a divine Originator: it only claims to point out something as to the mode of administering matter.

And as to the origin of the human race, the same suggestions are applicable. The Bible says that man came into being by the agency of God; but how that agency was exercised we are wholly uninformed. The reason for this is, most likely, that we have no capacity to comprehend any mode of a direct divine action. Therefore, no possible explanation could explain it to us. Some naturalists claim to have discovered the many connecting processes by which previously existing forms of matter evolved finally into manhood. Very well—the theologian is not interested in the truth or falsity of these supposed discoveries. If true, then that was the divine method of introducing manhood to the world. If untrue, the error is scientific, not theological, for theology does not treat of the mode of human origination at all. It simply asserts the fact, knowing nothing of the method. But here some Christians interpose and join issue with the scientist on another point, viz: as to the length of time God was employed in making the first pair. They say the whole process, from beginning to end, was very short—at most, not beyond the limits of a single day. This raises a question, not between Bible-men and infidels, but among Christians themselves; and this is hardly the place to discuss questions of biblical exegesis. Nevertheless it is acknowledged that if we read these records of very ancient things as we would modern narrative—that is, by understanding a juxtaposition of historic words to imply a close or juxtaposition of events; then, and in that case, there is room to infer that the first two chapters refer to a brief period—say, a modern week. But most surely there is no proof of it. These early records must not be read that way and be so cramped in their meaning. And it is beyond question, right or wrong, that the best biblical critics (I might say, all the best) construe the word "day" in these places to mean a period of time without reference to its length. "And God called the light day." And Webster calls "day," "a specified time or period."

Again, some Christians insist that the first man emanated directly, immediately and suddenly from fine dry particles of earth or other material; that he had no childhood, but the dust changed at once, by a single bound, into mature manhood. This also raises a question, not with infidels, but among Christians. Other Christians do not pretend to know, nor to consider it at all needful to know, anything about the mode or process of the first man-making. They are content with the knowledge that God did it, the method being unrevealed. They hold that God used in the making some kind of pre-existing material, without any knowledge as to what or how. So when the skeptic claims to have discovered the kind of material and the mode of process, the only needful reply is, Very well; if so, then that was the divine method. Of course, they can not or need not deny any particular, supposed method, however incredible such method might be, for then they are under obligation to supply the true method; and here they find their Bible utterly silent.

While my business here is with the infidel, I find it needful to remind my Christian brother of a few things. If Adam was a man, his body was composed of carbon and water, with a few other small chemical ingredients. Secondly, in arguing with an infidel, it is not best to assert more than enough to protect the Bible against clear invasion. Scores of things may be stated which we are under no obligation to either affirm or deny. The most dangerous place in all the Bible to insist on extreme literalism is in these early teachings about the origin of Adam and Eve. Make it a literal history of outward, visible purposes, and you run square. Mow deep into anthropomorphism irretrievably. The language describing the facts, but not the facts, must be allegorical. Literal language, if there could be any, would be meaningless to you and me. Neither Adam nor Eve were manipulated. God, being a spirit, does not manipulate. Here is where anthropomorphism, one of the worst and most dangerous of all heresies, takes its rise. We must steer clear of that at all hazards.

So this great controversy between the polemical theologians and the skeptical scientists dwindles down into this question: not whether God created the heaven and the earth, not whether he made man, but how he did it: or, if anybody pleases—how it was done. In that controversy the mere Bible Christian is not a participant. He neither knows nor cares how either of these things were done. He rests his case upon the simple fact that God did it, leaving the mode, manner or how to others.

It is said above, or at least, intimated, that the infidel geologist has not contradicted any biblical fact. This point must be made clear. That the man himself has denied God and the Bible a thousand times by a flippant say-so, is well known. It is very easy to say: "I don't believe." "I believe this or that." That is very cheap logic. But I speak of his argument, of his scientific deductions, of his logical reasonings. Where in these is the Bible contradicted? A logical denial is not to be found. On supposition that origination, either of matter or man, came about in some particular way, or by some particular processes, then, and in that case, a denial of these particular processes would virtually and logically deny divine agency; but no mode of divine action being either revealed or revealable, there can be no dispute on that point. It is very easy to say, "I don't believe God made man," but impossible to give a reason therefor, because, whatever mode of origination you may suppose, or imagine, that, for aught you can possibly know, may have been the very course pursued. So that if your facts are true, you are merely explaining the divine process.

Prof. Haeckel is one of the first German infidels to espouse Darwinian evolution. He is, by good authority, quoted as saying that, "Creation is an unthinkable dogma." How the learned German came to blunder on a truth so vitally important and so completely destructive of his whole arguments on that subject is not easy to imagine. Of course, primary creation is unthinkable, and all we know about it is a dogmatic assertion given to us without a reason or the least attempt at proof. And, being "unthinkable," how can the Professor deny it? Surely you can not deny that which you can not understand—that about which you can not think. So I reply to my skeptical friend—I have no need to deny your doctrine. It looks to me exceedingly incredible. I see no support for it either in Scripture or in nature; the former says nothing about it, and the latter contains many things with which I am not familiar. Your doctrine is either true or untrue. If true, then that was God's method of procedure; and if untrue, it falls harmlessly into the great waste-basket of nothingness. I am content with either. Who cares?

No two things are more dissimilar than evolution and Darwinian evolution. The former is seen everywhere by everybody. Material substance is constantly changing its form by evolving into other forms. Darwinism supposes the absurdity of accounting for origin. However high it may conduct us in antiquity, in the nature of things it is still dealing in history, and not in origin. Growth is progress, not origin. No man can think of origin; so there can be no dispute about it. Any conjecture, however wild or incredible, can not be denied for the best of all reasons—that it is incapable of proof. To prove it you must necessarily find testimony anterior to the origin, which is absurd. Nothing can not prove something.

Topisaw Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: The Topisaw Camp Meeting closed on the morning of August 16, with glorious results. There were twenty-two accessions to our church (some will join the Baptist), and fully fifty conversions. The power of the Spirit was with us from the beginning, and continued to increase until Tuesday night, when he came in convicting and converting power, continuing with us from then until the close.

We had a very affecting scene on Tuesday evening. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. M. Weems, gave us a farewell address. It was very affecting. We regret to give him up, but our Father knows what is best, and we humbly submit to his will, and promise to support him and his beloved companion with our means and prayers, while he goes to prosecute the Master's claims among the heathen. One of Topisaw's fair daughters has volunteered to go with them. May God bless and sanctify her for his service! At each of the last three services I believe every penitent was converted who came to the altar. The oldest members say that they never saw such a revival. Just as soon as a penitent was converted he went to work, and it may truly be said, there were few idlers.

At the closing service our pastor, Bro. Sibley, asked how many would erect family altars, and as a result, I believe every male member, the head of a family, pledged themselves to hold family prayers daily. And many of their wives and daughters pledged themselves to assist them, and in their absence hold prayers themselves. The preaching of the Word was in simplicity and with power. We had with us Bros. Weems, Lewis, Gale and Linfield, of the itinerancy, and a number of our worthy local brethren who labored faithfully during the entire meeting. We intend to organize at an early day a Young Men's Christian Association. Have organized a Woman's Missionary Society with eleven members.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age. Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. REV. C. FIGH.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 20d:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a node by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

"Life is more than environment. It is the power to draw strength and sweetness, flower and fruit from environment. It is the innate and inalienable endowment of powers which enable us to be what we choose to be."

Joseph Cook says this ought to be the law for every Christian in the world: "For every $5 I expend upon myself I will give $1 to the spread of the gospel." Were this rule observed by all professed Christians, how the missionary money boxes would swell out within a twelvemonth!

"It is easy to take the word 'life,' in the false sense of the circumstances or accidents of life, to picture these as uniformly unfortunate, and then say that life is misery. Misfortune may produce that fruit in some lives, but in others it brings forth love and joy and gentleness and peace that passeth understanding, which the world can not give and can not take away."

"The fern, which we call maiden-hair, has a vital core, and sheds its outer leaves when frost or heat has blighted them only to leave the greater power of life to nourish fresh, new fronds that spring up from the heart, tender and green, and delicately tinted on the edge as they unroll themselves to meet the sun and dew—so some lives unfold themselves, always fresh and beautiful."

According to the Evangelist, the Presbyterian Church, North, containing 722,471 members, contributed last year $844,695 for home missions, and $743,495 for foreign missions, making for one year contributed to missionary purposes $1,588,190, which is over $2 per member. If we paid at the same rate, how much would we have raised? And why can't we pay as much? We are poor—in the grace of liberality.

"The coming of God in Christ, reconciling sinners to himself, sets forth the fundamental law of the universe: the higher is to go down to the lower to help and strengthen it to rise. This is the law of love disclosed in Christ, who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many; who requires of his followers greatness for service, and assures them of greatness by service. He himself descended, and, therefore, ascended. This is the law of love, the fundamental law of the moral system."

"And he said unto them, Take heed, and keep yourselves from all covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully: and he reasoned within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have not where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my corn and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry. But God said unto him, Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee; and the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."

Lilies and Sparrows.

One of the commonest arguments which unbelief uses against the redemption scheme, as it is unfolded in the Scriptures, is founded upon the vastness of the universe in contrast with the supposed insignificance of the earth and its inhabitant, man. Every advance that physical science has made has broadened the domain of the universe, and, at the same time, seemingly contracted the earth and minified man and his capacities and possibilities. And this has been done to such a degree that the unbeliever stands in confidence under the illimitable dome of an all-comprehending universe, and proclaims his objection to redemption with an air that defies contradiction. He says: "The earth is a mere speck in the immensity of space; it is only a rolling pebble amid innumerable planets and suns and systems. It is unreasonable to suppose that God would have done so great a work to redeem from sin men on this earth, and, as far as we know, has left greater worlds untouched by redeeming grace. The thing is absurd on its very face." When we contemplate the vastness of the physical system which science now lays open to our view, and then look upon ourselves as physical organizations connected with that system, our littleness and insignificance come so prominently before us that we are almost overwhelmed with the strength of the argument.

If we consider man as connected only and solely with the material system, the argument is impregnable. That consideration, however, sweeps away all morality, spirituality, rationality and every personal being; and redemption is an invention of man. That there is a rational and spiritual system is a fact of consciousness, and that man belongs to it as well as to the material system is also a fact of consciousness. Man belongs not only to nature, but to the supernatural also, and is "at home in both realms." Considered as a part of nature, he is belittled by the thought and fact of nature's greatness. Considered as belonging to the rational and spiritual system, the very greatness and grandeur of the system teaches him his own greatness and worth. The argument that it is unbecoming in the great God to plan such a scheme as redemption for the salvation of so insignificant a being as man not only overlooks man's true position in the universe, but it is radically defective in its conception of the being and character of God. While the argument, unintentionally, pays a deserved compliment to redemption, it disparages its Author in a very marked way. Now, whatever God does, he must do it as God. "My ways are not your ways; my thoughts are not as your thoughts." Whatever God does must of necessity show his riches and his resources. Every fact in nature, if we study it long enough, brings us face to face with God, and discloses during our study of it an actual overflow of the divine resources. And in the study of any fact in nature we will spring questions that science can not answer. We come everywhere upon mystery; and that is simply "the finger-print" of the divine hand.

One or two illustrations will show the weakness of the argument, that man is too small and insignificant to engage so much of the divine mind as is represented as operating for his redemption and salvation. Jesus says that God clothes the lily. Now, what does science say about the lily? It says this:

Every agency in nature is laid under contribution to promote a lily's growth. The sun quickens it by his beams; the earth and atmosphere contribute material for its structure; the ocean gives water which the winds bear to the growing flower; all chemical and organic forces are energizing in it; gravitation bends its gracefully drooping head. The lily as it grows is a center to all the physical powers.

This, to some, may look like a waste of energy, but it is really an exhibition of the overflowing fullness of the resources and power of God. And though a lily may appear a small thing, yet the accumulation of so much power upon its production is the best evidence that it is not small in any legitimate sense of that word. God must work as God; hence all cosmic forces concentrate their energies in developing the lily.

Jesus says that God cares for the sparrows, and takes notice of every one that falls. Surely if man is too insignificant for God to expend so much care and grace upon him, in the eye of unbelief, a little sparrow must be beneath the notice of the Infinite One. But what says science about the sparrow? It very distinctly utters these words:

To know this little bird, there must be a knowledge of mechanics to understand the leverage of its wings and the flow of its blood; of chemistry to know the composition of its body; of terrestrial physics to explain its weight and its relation to the air when flying; of anatomy and physiology to know its organs and their functions; of zoology to know its place and relations in the animal system; of physical geography to know its distribution over the earth; of paleontology to know when it first appeared; and of some of the profoundest questions of metaphysics to learn what its life is, what is the instinct by which it builds its nest, and wherein its intelligence differs, if at all, from human reason.

Here we see all of science exemplified in a sparrow, and yet unbelief says: "God is too great to notice sparrows." A sparrow is small only in bulk, but that small bulk reveals God; and, therefore, in that revelation the little bird flits about before the eye of an awe-struck science as an exhibition of an inexhaustible fullness of resources and power. When God works, he works as God, and all his works, when properly understood, reveal his "infinite power and Godhead."

Now, Jesus says: "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." The same physical powers and forces have combined to make the physical part of man. To understand the physical man, one must be acquainted with the whole cyclopedia of knowledge and science. In the study of him science corroborates and justifies the statement of Scripture, that man "is fearfully and wonderfully made." And if God clothes the lily and feeds the sparrow, will not his care be extended to his creature, man? But when we remember that man belongs to the supernatural as well as to the natural; that he is a part of the rational and spiritual system as well as a part of the material system; and that this fact lifts him into the same realm with God, we can reasonably believe, what the Scriptures emphatically declare, that all the mightiest agencies of the spiritual world are combined to effect his redemption and regeneration. In the spiritual realm God must work as God. If a lily or a sparrow is the center of all cosmic energies; if it requires a combination of them all to produce a lily or a sparrow, who shall say that it does not require all the divine energies of the spiritual realm to make one Christian? That such is the astounding fact is a plain teaching of Scripture. But in this concentration of spiritual forces upon one person, is there any waste of power? On the contrary, it is evidence of divine love pouring out its exhaustless fullness. John says: "And of his fullness have all we received it." Paul prayed that the Ephesians "might be filled with all the fullness of God." This is wonderful—it is astounding; but we must remember that in producing a Christian, God must work as God. "O, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counselor? For of him and through him and to him are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen!"

The Uses of Education.

The Picayune, after quoting several paragraphs from our recent editorial, on "Collegiate Training," says:

This is all quite true, but there are men who do not desire an education, and, to use a common expression, will not take one. Often a youth of vigorous body and energetic temperament longs to engage in the active business of life, and will not endure the restraints of the quiet and contemplative existence that student life entails on the real student. Unfortunately too many a bright boy who would shine in the ranks of the cultured is forced by stress of circumstances to commence life with daily toil, and often with fatiguing bodily labor; and so he is cut off from the education which to him might have been an instrument for the attainment of greatness for himself and for the conferring of benefits upon his fellows. If education could be bestowed with a wise discrimination upon those properly adapted to receive and profit by it, then the best results would be obtained. As matters now stand, it would be well to give to everyone the best culture attainable, and leave with him the responsibility of using it to the best advantage. There are learned men who were never inside a college, as there are ignorant ones who have enjoyed at least opportunities to study in worthy academies.

After all, learning is but a tool to work with, an equipment for the business of life, a capital on which to trade. It may be easily misused or not used. All depends on the possessor. Intellectual training does not necessarily elevate the moral nature, and the separate functions of mind and morals should not be confounded. It is rather a narrow view of learning that it is to be used only to give pleasure and benefit to its possessor. This is a sort of miserly and selfish notion, the light hidden under a bushel. The man who spends his time in reading or in study exclusively for his own entertainment does not wholly waste it, but he renders no service to his fellows. Man's mission in life is to improve the talents intrusted to him for the general good, and he is under obligations to use his mental gifts to that end.

All of which is "quite true" also. We happened to know of men who, with abundant means, are denying their children the benefit of "an education higher than can be derived from the common schools;" and for them we penned the article, on "Collegiate Training." To give the boy a money-start in life, they are withholding that which, when properly used, can never be anything else than a blessing. The drift of our article is in entire accord with what the Picayune says above: "As matters now stand, it would be well to give everyone the best culture attainable, and leave with him the responsibility of using it to the best advantage." The parent who is able to do this and does not do it, is very far from discharging the plainest obligation, and may surely expect to meet its retribution some time in the future.

One of the saddest things we think about is just the case the Picayune puts in these words: "Unfortunately too many a bright boy who would shine in the ranks of the cultured is forced by stress of circumstances to commence life with daily toil, and often with fatiguing bodily labor; and so is cut off from the education which to him might have been an instrument for the attainment of greatness for himself and for the conferring of benefits upon his fellows." While that sentence brings a sigh for the unfortunate class spoken of, it is the most powerful argument we have seen lately on the side for which we plead. We ask our readers to study that sentence, specially the last clause.

With the last paragraph quoted from the Picayune we agree most heartily. We fear sometimes that our educators, while they impart learning to our children, do not impart the knowledge of the use of learning. If it is a "tool," an "equipment," a "capital," the knowledge of how to use it in life ought surely to be given with it. At this point many schoolmasters fail.

The Great Change.

There is no change so great, so radical, so thorough as that which passes upon a man when he goes through the processes of regeneration by the Holy Spirit. As illustrative of this, we are permitted to publish a few extracts from a private letter from a brother to a sister. The brother says:

Ever since the passage of my darling child into the spirit land I have directed my thoughts more and more to the subject of the future life, for to this have always tended my studies for many years. In philosophy I had adopted the Platonic ideas, culminating in Cousin and Jauffry, and can not tolerate in my excursions into literature or science any authors who hold the doctrine in disrepute or had any tendency to materialism. All these theories shocked my spiritual sense. I feel myself now in my declining years more earnestly drawn to search the Scriptures, and see if I can not find in them stronger assurances than those which may come through philosophical speculations. There is a strange fascination, which I never felt before, in the character of Jesus—the evidences of his divinity crowd upon my soul; and when I lay down the book, my recourse is to him in earnest prayer for light and consolation. I have no doubt of the authenticity of the Scriptures, of the honesty and truth of the apostles; and the doctrines of Jesus would be incomplete without the miracles. There is a mystery about everything in this life, but the greatest of all mysteries would be the absence of the divinity of Christ. I profess myself a Christian. If I could only have seen things years ago in the light in which I now see them, perhaps my whole career would have been different. I have, however, come slowly, but I hope and pray with all my heart that I have come surely into the right path now.

The mysteries of this life can only have a rational solution in the supposition of its future continuance. If you could only adopt my views, my dear sister, you would turn from the disappointments and sorrows of this life to the brighter living which awaits us upon the conclusion of it. The impenetrable vail is slowly lifting, and the doctrine of the resurrection—the bare mention of which by St. Paul in the presence of the great philosophers excited laughter—will become intelligent to all.

GLORIFY GOD.—Simeon b. Shetach, relates the Talmud, bought a horse from a heathen and found a gem in the animal's mane, which he at once sent to the heathen, saying that he bought the horse only and not the jewel. While yet his disciples express their amazement at the action of the rabbi, who, by keeping the gem, would have warded off all wants, the heathen approached them and asked: "Who of you is Simeon b. Shetach?" The rabbi being pointed out to him, he exclaimed: "Blessed be thy God! Great and holy must he be whom thou worshipest!" "See you," said the master, turning to his disciples, "see you the jewel I have obtained? It is the precious gem to see the Lord sanctified through me!"

The local option election in Pike county, Miss., on the twenty-third instant, resulted in favor of the prohibitionists, the election passing off very quietly.

Notes.

It would seem after all that the old adage, "Where there's a will, there's a way," is true, as witness the following, which we find in an exchange:

A colored woman, born a slave, but made free, and having no resources except her labor, handed her pastor forty dollars. Two dollars was for her sent in the church, eighteen dollars for foreign missions, and the remaining twenty dollars he was to divide among benevolent societies as he pleased.

This is the way the London Methodist Times talks of John and Charles Wesley:

It really is time that we allowed the human institutions of Methodism to be adapted to the age in which we live as thoroughly as John Wesley adapted them to the social circumstances of the eighteenth century. If we imitate timidly, the prejudices, and the narrowness of Charles Wesley, the hopes of our worst enemies will be fulfilled. But if we tread fearlessly in the footsteps of John Wesley, adapting, reforming, inventing, we shall yet see such days of divine prosperity as neither we nor our fathers have ever anticipated even in our most sanguine moments.

The writer of "Holston Notes," in the Nashville Advocate, was this most extraordinary piece of intelligence and short comment:

I know of one or two charges from which, judging by the ordinary tokens, the reports might be made at Conference: "Spiritual condition not good; assessments all overpaid." And I should judge that such a charge would very properly go down from this Conference "justified rather than the other."

The same writer estimates that there have been at least 5,000 conversions and as many accessions to the church in the Holston Conference this year.

In the course of our reading we came upon this passage, which we transfer to this column for the benefit of the readers of the ADVOCATE:

The fancies and fables of early cosmogonies belong to the science of their time quite as much as to the religion. That all things came from water or from fire, that the flat earth is surrounded by a river of fire, that the sun toils through the foundations of the earth every night, that there can not be antipodes, these are fancies and fables of primitive science quite as much as of primitive religion. And from these beginnings science has floundered on through as many errors and as many fantastic conceptions as have appeared in the history of religion. Let anyone read the medical prescriptions used in England two hundred years ago.

The modern tendency to multiply organizations within the church is thus antagonized by a writer in the Evangelist:

We do really think that the church is suffering more than she herself may be aware of suffering, from a plague of organizations—organizations that swarm within her own great and all-sufficient organization, and prey upon her proper life. There are some people who seem incapable of going about any charitable or religious work in a quiet and informal manner. For everything they attempt they must have a "chairman," and a "secretary," and a machinery of rules and committees; and there must be a periodical blare of reports, which are often nothing better than a form of boasting.

The idea of these organizations "preying upon the proper life of the church," sets them before us as microbes, bacilli, spores, etc. The matter will bear looking into.

We commend the following clipping to the careful consideration of our readers. It strikes us that much good may come from it:

At a meeting some months ago of the Boston Life Underwriters' Association, the idea was advanced by Mr. Calef, of the New York Life, that men of means having no dependents might insure for the benefit of charitable, religious or educational institutions at comparatively small expense, thus securing to the beneficiary a handsome gift without burdening the giver, and do away with vexatious quarrels over a dead man's leavings. The idea is certainly a good one, and unencumbered gentlemen could adopt it to the great benefit of their kind. The idea has already taken root abroad, and Mr. Frank X. Pippert, of Saugerberg, Germany, has had his life insured for ten thousand florins, the proceeds of which are to be used in twenty-five years, or at the previous death of the insured, to create a students' endowment fund. It is pleasant to see American ideas taking hold abroad, and especially those of this class.

The Richmond Advocate has this, which will do to think over:

We have some knowledge of politics. Candidates are not fools. They know on which side their bread is buttered. The influence of the bar-rooms count more than the churches in a close canvass. The liquor-seller is loquacious and "electioneering," day in and day out, for his friend. The deacons, stewards, elders and vestrymen do nothing to help forward a candidate from the church, not even taxing their time and attention to go to the next street to vote. And yet these proper people set up a wail that the fellows of low degree run our government. Why should not a candidate court and consort with the class that work for him? Politics is a matter-of-fact and a practical affair. It is not æsthetic. Let the men of godly lives and convictions take off their coats and carry out their convictions or hush. The "primary" settles the question of candidates. The saloon and the hoodlum are on hand. The class-leader and church warden are at home smoking their evening cigar.

Personals.

Bro. Hamilnick, of Rolling Fork, Miss., writes: "This has been a happy and successful year so far, and we are hoping for much larger results. I shall put in some strong efforts for the ADVOCATE during the fall." Strong efforts generally succeed. We like that kind of talk.

Two don'ts: Don't send us rolled manuscript. Don't abbreviate your words. Printers have no idea what is meant by V—M—C—K—R.

President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., has favored us with a "Special Announcement" of his school. The college is more thoroughly organized than ever. The literary and scientific, the music, the school of art, and the boarding departments are all supervised by specialists in each department. There are fourteen teachers, all of whom are unsurpassed; the curriculum is the best. The school opens September 19.

Bro. Manly, our pastor at Lafayette, La., writes: "The good Lord is reviving his work among us. We are now in the midst of a protracted meeting and the results promise to be glorious." Such words encourage all God's people.

The correspondent who wishes to know the name of the missionary who was sent out by the ADVOCATE fund, raised last year, is informed that it is Rev. J. C. C. Newton, of the Baltimore Conference.

Dr. W. G. Andrews, after a few weeks' sojourn at Seashore Camp Ground, gave us a call on his way back to Jackson, Miss., last week. He reports having had a delightful time, and himself and family recuperated by the salt breezes, and the wallets which surrendered to the superior skill of the Doctor's cast-net.

Hiram Sibley, of Rochester, recently deceased, bequeathed $30,000 to Cornell University to endow a professorship of mechanic arts.

Miss May A. Green graduated this summer from Boston University as Bachelor of Laws, and has been admitted to the Suffolk County Bar and will begin practice in Boston this autumn.

Dr. R. A. Young, after reading Dr. Fitzgerald's Life of McFerrin, says that "henceforward Fitzgerald must be ranked with Froude and Boswell—the two great English biographers!"

A few days ago there arrived here a party of distinguished visitors from China, Messrs. Y. L. Fu and S. H. R. Li, accompanied by their interpreter, L. P. Sawamura. These gentlemen are the secretaries of the Boards of War and Punishment in the Chinese Empire. They compose a commission sent out for the purpose of studying the institutions of our country, with a view of introducing reforms in China. They bore letters of introduction to some of our citizens, among which was one from our senior missionary in Japan, Rev. J. W. Lambuth, to Hon. Edward Booth, a prominent layman of Felicity Street congregation. The "Celestials" expressed themselves much pleased with their visit to our city, and departed for Washington City, promising to come again.

Bishops Wilson and Fowler sailed for Japan from San Francisco in the same steamer.

Bro. R. F. Phillips, of Columbus, Miss., writes: "I have been having some splendid meetings; have held two protracted meetings in my work since July 2. Result: forty-four accessions to the church and the membership greatly revived." News like that is always refreshing.

Rev. Sam Small is to lecture in Virginia and North Carolina during September in the interest of the "Virginia Assembly," a summer school, to be located at Emory and Henry College, the first session of which will be held next summer.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided that selling soda-water as a beverage on Sunday in connection with drugs is a violation of the act prohibiting worldly employment on Sunday.

A wag has defined a "literary man," as "one who writes for the waste-baskets of some of the leading newspapers and magazines of the day."

Dr. Candler, of Emory College, has our sympathy in the loss, by whooping cough, of his little son, Warren. We know just exactly that bereavement.

Dr. Rivers, of Louisville, has been quite ill—nigh unto death. He says the feeling during the critical period was: "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain." He is now improving.

Rev. R. P. Mitchell, presiding elder of Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference, writes, under date of August 24: "I am somewhat improved in health by my rest, but not well by a great deal. Hope to be able to resume work by the first of September." We trust the fall breezes will set our brother up again in his usual robust health.

Our preachers' meeting, last Monday, exhibited signs of life in a new direction, and we came near settling a question which is almost as old as American Methodism. We had up for discussion the question, "Shall our presiding elders be appointed by the Bishop or elected by the Conference?" Arguments were made on both sides: some assertive, some tentative, some illustrative, some anecdotal, some logical, and so on. It was concluded at last that to introduce such a radical change as elective presiding elders in our economy "is not good at this time." And the question is at rest once more.

Judge Holmes, of Kansas City, recently deceased, left the following legacies: Central College, Mo., $10,000; Parent Board of Missions, $5,000; church extension, Marvin Loan Fund, $1,000.

A writer in the Western Christian Advocate proposes two new words. They are "typogram" and "typographist." "Typogram" is what has been written by means of the type-writer, and "typographist" is the person by whom the writing was done.

A private note from Bro. Record, of Vicksburg, August 24, says that "Bro. Ransom Jones is very sick—was a little better last evening." We trust that Bro. Jones will not be long confined to his bed.

A private note from Dr. Cottrell says: "My health is better now than ever since I have been a preacher; but my wife has been bed-ridden for months." We extend our sympathy to the Doctor and his good wife.

We see by the Lake Charles Echo, that Bro. Daves has "been presented by some of the members of his church and Sunday-school with a handsome rocking and reclining chair as a birthday present." While we congratulate our brother, we would remind him that there is still in the Discipline the old rule which prohibits "softness or needless self-indulgence."

It takes "line upon line, line upon line," to get it into some people's heads that we will not publish anonymous articles. This applies to all communications. An article received, headed "A Word to the Young Ladies," is the occasion for this note.

Postal Card Reports.

—W. S. Shipman, writing from Shannon, Miss., August 24, says: "McNutt and Sunnyside are true to their pastor, caring for him well. Each of the appointments lately enjoyed refreshings from the presence of the Lord. The traveling Bishop interests us. Some of our best men I learn are giving way physically. Are we, as the members of the North Mississippi Conference, doing our duty to prepare young men to take their places?"

—G. W. Gordon, from Fulton and Smithville circuit, North Mississippi, says: "We closed a meeting at Greenbrier, Sunday, 19, resulting in twenty-two accessions, and membership wonderfully revived. Our Fulton women have organized a missionary society with seventeen members."

—H. C. Pacrott writes from Newtonville circuit, North Mississippi, August 20: "The revival at Borrie Church resulted in ten accessions and as many conversions. Fifteen members entered into a covenant to fast and pray once a week for twelve months. The church is steadily growing every year."

—The same brother, writing from Ethel, Miss., under date of August 21, says: "Bro. Fullilove has had a revival on the Starkville circuit, resulting in fifteen adult accessions, and the entire church aroused to action. The people are delighted with the many happy effects and are now organized as a band of Christian workers, determined to carry on the good work begun."

—Under date of August 24, Bro. John A. Ellis says: "Good meeting at Sam Jones Camp Ground notwithstanding the storm, and still going on."

—August 25, Bro. Bowen, of Greenville, Miss., writes: "Our presiding elder, Bro. J. W. Hommell, held our third quarterly meeting one week ago. All the interests of the church improving. Congregations, prayer meetings and Sunday-school very good all summer. Missionary societies and temperance school doing a great work. Conversions and accessions are frequent. Ninety accessions to our church since Christmas, and more to follow. All the churches are preparing for a great union meeting in October, sure. My health is better than usual. Health of Greenville good."

—Rev. J. V. Penn, writing from Jackson, La., August 27, says: "The storm ruined our work at Gloster last Monday night. Sunday eve we were good for $1,000 for Centenary, and Monday morning we were not good for so many cents. However, I send two names."

BOOKS.

JUDGE BURNHAM'S DAUGHTERS. By "Pansy" (Mrs. G. R. Alden). Boston: D. Lothrop Co. Price $1 50.

The multitude of readers of Mrs. Alden's stories will remember Ruth Erskine's Crosses, and will be glad to meet its principal character once more in her new character of wife and mother, ripened by experience and strengthened by trial. The story with its later incidents is a sad one, but its darkness is lighted by the surprise which awaits the reader at the close. It is written in Mrs. Alden's usual fascinating style, and, like all her books, is translixed with a purpose.

LETTERS TO A KING. By Albion W. Tourgee, LL.D. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati. Price $1 25.

These letters "to the son of an old comrade, on his twenty-first birthday," first appeared in the Western Advocates, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They are twenty-four in number and discuss in Judge Tourgee's trenchant style the most important subjects bearing upon the life and character of a young man. Larger space than usual is given to the "individual responsibility of the citizen," and it is well to impress this deeply in the minds of the rising generation, and this book seeks to do just that thing.

THE MINISTRY CALLED OF GOD. By Rev. J. C. Simmons, D. D., of the Pacific Conference. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price 10 cents.

This is an interesting presentation of an important subject. Perhaps too little is said on this subject these days, and we are glad that Dr. Simmons has spoken.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. Some of the concert saloon proprietors of this city, having kept open in violation of the Sunday Law and an order from court, were found guilty of contempt of court, and sentenced to ten days in the Parish Prison. Upon this they appealed to the Supreme Court, and the chief justice has sustained the lower court, and the lawless gentlemen are now enjoying their leisure in the parish jail.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Our Young People.

THE CHILDHOOD OF JESUS.

In the green fields of Palestine,
By its fountains and its rills,
And by the sacred Jordan's stream,
And o'er the vine-clad hills,

Once lived and roved the fairest Child
That ever blessed the earth;
The happiest, the holiest,
That e'er had human birth.

How beautiful his childhood was!
Harmless and undefiled;
Oh! dear to his young mother's heart
Was this pure, sinless Child.

Kindly in all his deeds and word,
And gentle as the dove;
Obedient, affectionate,
His very soul was love.

Oh! is it not a blessed thought,
Children of human birth,
That once the Savior was a child,
And lived upon the earth?

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. I have five brothers living, and one brother and two sisters dead. My father and mother are living. Brother Will Linfield is our preacher. We all love him very much. I will answer Ella Burnhill's question: The word "grapes" is found in St. Luke vi, 44. I will close by asking a question: Where, when, and how was John the Baptist baptized?

A. LINFIELD SMITH.

Nannie's Gift.

Nannie Dane is a sweet little girl, just six years old. She is not a pretty child, for her face is very thin and freckled; but her heart is so good and loving that those who know her best love her dearly.

Her father is a big, silent man, and her mother is always tired and busy; so Nannie does not have so many kisses and fond words as she would like. Her two little brothers are rather rough, and only the baby seems to be as loving as Nannie herself. She is one of the best little girls in the school, and learns very fast; not because she is so quick, but because she tries so hard, and wants to do just what her teacher says.

One day, just before Christmas, when all the children were talking about stockings, and trees, and Santa Claus, Miss Hart said to her class, "The principal is coming in to-day to hear you read and spell, and to-morrow to see how well you can add. I want you all to try hard, and to the five best I will give a Christmas present the last day of school."

Nannie's eyes opened wide. She had never had a Christmas present in her life, for her father was poor, and it took all his money to buy bread and clothes and pay rent. He had given her five cents the day she was six, and that was the only present she had ever had. She had never spent it, though she had often been teased to do so by her brothers; and she passed a candy store every day as she went to school.

When Miss Hart spoke about the Christmas present, a delightful idea came into Nannie's mind, and she resolved to be one of the five best; and so she was, though her heart beat so hard she could hardly see to read when the principal called her name.

The next day Miss Hart brought a basket to school with her, and just before the children went home she took off the cover and gave to the three girls and two boys each a fine large, red apple. They all ate them on the way home, except Nannie. She did not even show it to her mother, but hid it away in the closet so quietly that nobody knew anything about it. Her little brothers twitted her for not being one of the five best, but she did not say a word.

On Christmas morning, while Mrs. Dane was out of the room, she put her apple and five cents on her mother's plate. Then she looked with eyes full of love to say, "Merry Christmas!" when she came in. I think angels looked with eyes of love on Nannie then.—Our Little Ones.

A Right Start.

A young man was recently graduated from a scientific school. His home had been a religious one. He was a member of a Christian church, had pious parents, brothers and sisters; his family was one in Christ.

On graduating he determined upon a Western life among the miners. Full of courage and hope, he started on his journey to strike out for himself in a new world.

The home prayer followed him. As he went he fell into company with older men. They liked him for his frank manners and his manly independence. As they journeyed together they stopped for a Sabbath in a border town. On the morning of the Sabbath one of his fellow-travelers said to him, "Come, let us be off for a drive and the sights."

"No," said the young man, "I am going to church. I have been brought up to keep the Sabbath, and I have promised my mother to keep on in that way."

His road acquaintance looked at him for a moment, and then, slapping him on the shoulder, said, "Right, my boy. I began in that way. I wish I had kept on. Young man, you will do. Stick to your bringing up and your mother's words, and you will win."

The boy went to church; all honor to him in that far-away place, and among such men. His companions had their drive, but the boy gained their confidence and won their respect by his manly avowal of sacred obligations. Already success is smiling upon the young man. There is no lack of places for him.

KIND WORDS.—A very touching incident came to my knowledge a few days ago, and to show the power a good man or woman may have over those with whom they come in contact, even with the little children, I will relate it here:

An old clergyman, over eighty years of age, who had spent fifty years of his life in a parish of New England, met a little boy on the street who had never seen him before. "Good morning, my little child," he said, "what is your name?" As he spoke, he laid his reverend hand upon the little fellow's head. The boy told his name, and the gentleman said, "Oh, I am so glad to see you! I hoped to meet you; I have been looking for you. I knew your dear mother, who is now in heaven." The child ran home, and, entering the room, almost breathlessly exclaimed, "Oh, auntie, dear, I met an angel from heaven, and he knows my dear mamma up there, and stopped me on the street to tell me!" The long, silvery hair of the aged messenger of God, and his saintly face, with those kindly words spoken, made this beautiful impression upon the mind of the motherless child.

PUSSY.—Did you ever think why we call the cat "puss?"

A great many years ago, the people of Egypt, who have many idol gods, worshiped the cat. They thought she was like the moon, because her eyes changed just as the moon changes, which is sometimes full and sometimes only the bright crescent, or half-moon, as we say. Did you ever notice your pussy's eyes, to see how they change?

So, these people made an idol with the cat's head and named it Pasht, the same name they gave to the moon; for the word means the "face of the moon."

That word has been changed to "pas" or "pus," and has come at last to be "puss," the name which almost everyone gives to the cat. Puss and pussy-cat are pet names for Kitty everywhere. Who ever thought of it as given to her thousands of years ago, and that then people bowed down and prayed to her?—Sunbeam.

"There is nothing you require of your agents but what is just and reasonable and strictly in accordance with business principles." That's the sort of testimony any house can be proud of, and it is the testimony of hundreds of men who are profitably employed by B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va. Write for full particulars.

He who shall introduce into public affairs the principles of primitive Christianity will revolutionize the world.—Franklin.

HOME.

A man can build a mansion,
And furnish it throughout;
A man can build a palace,
With lofty walls and stout;
A man can build a temple,
With high and spacious dome;
But no man in the world can build
That precious thing called Home.

So 'tis a happy family
Of women far and wide
To turn a cot or palace
Into something else beside,
Where brothers, sons and husbands tired
With willing footsteps come,
A place of rest, where love abounds,
A perfect kingdom, Home.

Household Balance Sheet.

Many of life's burdens would be lifted if we would establish with ourselves a sort of balance sheet, canceling the unpleasant with the pleasant, and not omitting to credit the surplus pleasantness. Such accuracy of account would invariably show the gain in large excess of the loss, and prove that many a soul avows bankruptcy when there is no excuse for it, for which fraudulent insolvency as stringent laws are needed as might restrain the evil. We could not many days keep a true account with life, even the most common, without convincing ourselves of the fact that there is much more of good than bad. Suppose Mrs. Somebody kept her record. One day might run like this:

BAD SIDE.	GOOD SIDE.
Baby cross and creeping into everything.	Baby alive and able to be cross and creep.
Breakfast late.	Had a breakfast.
Bread sour.	Ninety-nine times out of one hundred bread good.
Hired girl gadog.	Great possibilities of a new girl.
Too much sewing; backache, cross, tired; no good living.	Home to keep, husband and children to love; dear friends, lovely world, pleasant times, people to help.
Fire out in dining-room.	Lovely opportunity to prove myself superior to circumstances.
Corn aches.	Lovely lesson to teach me common sense in shoes.
Mrs. Lolly has a carriage.	I have feet. How much better than horses!

The line might stretch out infinitely, and at last there could be no balance struck, because most evils at which people complain are so trifling as not possible to compare with the beautiful blessings of life. In plain words, let us all join the "Look-up Club."—Advance.

Household Notes.

"All things work together for good," is the silver lining to many a cloud.

If home duties were shared by all, each member bearing a part, there would not be so many tired mothers.

Ten minutes will fill and polish a lamp; ten more will sweep a room. Who can afford to have dingy lamps or untidy rooms?

There is a train of every-day duties for each to perform; if we allow the disappointments we meet to cast a shadow, we are not qualified for them.

If there are a number of things to be done in an hour, always choose those you would prefer having done in case of sudden company; sweeping should be among the first duties, as you can neither sweep in the presence of your friends nor look tidy without it.

EATING LEMONS.—A good deal has been said through the papers about the healthfulness of lemons. The latest advice is how to use them so that they will do the most good, as follows: Most people know the benefit of lemon before breakfast, but few know that it is more than doubled by taking another at night also. The way to get the better of the bilious system without blue pills or quinine is to take the juice of one, two or three lemons, as appetite craves, in as much ice-water as is pleasant to drink without sugar before going to bed. In the morning, on rising, at least a half-hour before breakfast, take the juice of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clear the system of humor and bile with efficiency, without any of the weakening effects of calomel or Congress water. People should not irritate the stomach by eating lemons clear; the powerful acid of the juice, which is almost always corrosive, invariably produces inflammation after a while, but, properly diluted, so that it does not burn or draw the throat, it does its medical work without harm, and when the stomach is clear of food, has abundant opportunity to work over the system thoroughly, says a medical authority.—Scientific American.

Cough Medicine

to every one afflicted."—Robert Horton, Foreman Headlight, Morrilton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Ballard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an incessant cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Mrs. E. Coburn, 19 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, also, invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lovejoy, 1257 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

SMITH—Miss MARY H. SMITH died suddenly in Jackson, La., on August 12, 1888, in the seventeenth year of her age.

The death of this rare and radiant girl is one of those sad events which can not be fully realized until we are awakened by the cold blank, the withered waste which it has left along our pathway, and we have sought in vain for the last vision which illuminated our own world and our own being. The soul of summer sunshine, gleeful and golden, streamed around her social circle, in which all the bright features of her exalted nature bounded with a sublime and inspiring impulse. The opening buds of a pure and perfect womanhood harmoniously blossomed and blended in her character, and love, hope and piety were her crowning virtues. In her bosom Christianity dwelt in a perfect light and robed itself in living charms around her. She had been a member of the Methodist Church since her twelfth year, and was greatly loved by a large circle of friends for her many deeds of Christian charity.

But a few months before her death she had lost her mother, and upon her young shoulders fell the maternal mantle with all its cares and duties. These her filial fidelity and sincere nature prompted her to fulfill, no doubt, with an ardor too severe for her tender years and her strength, and many loving friends will long remember her social charm and flowing hospitality. But she lived in a bright-beaming world of her own, illumined by the lights which glowed in her own bosom, and it may be well that she died in the morning of life, when its cares, with all their new darkness, and its pleasures, with their new luster, had just begun. Were we less mortal, we might not mourn for loved ones whom the veil of the tomb has thus suddenly hid from our eyes ere sin has cast a blight over the spirit or the coarse and rude jostlings of the world have profaned it; but rather rejoice that death has chilled the fountain ere it was stained by the sorrows of life, but we are too mortal for this; and when we see youth, love and beauty with all their purity thus passing away from us, we naturally dash away every cup of pleasure and turn to the cold, dark-flowing urn of grief. It is then that our affections hold full sway and we feel a depth of tenderness and sorrow and piety which we could never have known but for our affliction. But amid all this comes the "still, small voice," whispering to our wounded hearts the soothing words, "We shall meet again."

When the devoted young Greek was about to offer himself as a sacrifice upon the altar of his country, his friends, on bidding him farewell, asked, "Shall we meet again?"—to which he replied: "I have asked that dread question of the green hills that look eternal, of the clear streams that seem to flow forever, of the stars amid those azure fields my raised spirit has often soared, and all, all were silent: but when I gaze into your living face, and behold the love and hope and beauty that mantle there, something tells me that these can never, never perish. We shall meet again, Telemantha."

Farewell! thou art now enjoying the companionship of blessed angels who forever syllable their sweetest songs around the throne of God. Thou art now in possession of the immemorable riches that a bountiful Savior has laid up for thee.

JIM J. SMYLIE.

LYLE—Died, in Lauderdale, Miss., on Sunday morning, August 5, 1888, LIZZIE P., daughter of T. C. and Josephine Lyle, aged thirteen years and five months. All that loving hearts and medical skill could do was done for her to stay the afflicting hand of a kind Providence, who is too wise to err and too good to do wrong. That fluttering pulse that seemed so long to waver on the eve of an eternal separation, creating in turn hopes and disappointments, finally quivered away into that calm that wafted the gentle spirit of Lizzie into the bright realms of eternal day. Our heavenly Father had need of her, and he rendered that decree not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, so beautiful to her that he seemed eager to depart, and often would say to her parents, "God wants me." To her parents, sisters and only brother she spoke words of comfort and bade them meet her in heaven. We know that she is gone from us. We miss her cheerful voice and sweet smiles, and, oh! how lonely it is without her when the family meet around the fireside. Her death was the first in the family. By her death a dutiful daughter, a loving sister, a faithful Sunday-school scholar has been lost to us. We will, by the grace of God, meet her in heaven.

H. P. LEWIS.

WINDON—Mrs. MOLENDA WINDON, wife of L. W. Windon, was born in Newton county, Miss., January 21, 1847. At the age of sixteen she joined the Campbellite Church, in Enterprise, Miss., and lived in that church until her marriage, and then united with her husband in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she lived a consistent member until her death, which took place June 20, 1888. This writer visited her a few days before her death, and talked on the subject of religion. She expressed her willingness to die. A few hours before her death she called her children around her and talked to them and told them to meet her in heaven. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss. May God bless and save them in heaven!

HER PASTOR.

CROW—Died, July 9, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. M. E. Girard, in Lafayette, La., Mrs. MAXIM BRASHIER, relict of the late Basil C. Crow, aged eighty-four years and five months. She was born in Prince George county, Maryland, whence she removed at an early age to Louisiana.

In the death of Sister Crow the church has lost a consistent and valuable member, whose place in every particular would be difficult to fill. For several years, owing to physical decrepitude, the necessary resultant of senility, she has been deprived of attendance upon the public ministry and worship of the sanctuary, in which she took great delight and derived much pleasure and comfort. Her Christian character was beautiful, because symmetrical. Proportionally balanced between the experimental and practical; the former sufficiently clear and powerful as to stir the sensibilities, move the affections to a temperate glow, thus kindling zeal, inspiring devotion, rendering religious duty pleasant and spiritual endeavor delightful. The latter displayed itself to the cultivation of Christian duty, especially in systematic munificence. She was a cheerful giver, and liberal supporter of the Methodist itinerant who chanced to minister to her in spiritual things, giving a practical recognition of the truth of the apostolic declaration, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Sister Crow's intellectual endowments were of a high order, embellished by education, strengthened by discipline and so utilized that as wife she was faithful and loving; as mother, attractive and charming, which made her the centre of domestic attachment and drew upon her the lavished affections of her husband and almost idolatrous devotion of children, which fact made her influence as a wife, potent, and as a mother, irresistible. Hence, though environed by Romanism, and forced by educational necessities to seek in jesuitical schools mental training and cultivation for her daughters, her Christian sentiments were so pronounced that she was enabled to successfully parry off the insidious assaults, dangerous tendency and pernicious subtilities of Catholicism, both as regards creed and culture. So that in coming forth from convent life, belief in Protestantism was undisturbed, and confidence in mother's faith beautifully strengthened and symmetrized.

Happy are the children whom Providence has given such a mother, and thrice happy that husband whose destiny is united by matrimonial alliance with such a woman! The vigorous, discriminating intellect possessed, and highly cultivated by academical acquirements, made her association elevating and profitable, which gave her influence power for good, and which was wielded for the advantage of society, promotion of religion and advancement of denominational Christianity. While she was eminently free from religious bigotry in doctrine and usage, she was a pronounced Methodist. Sister Crow, though of such advanced age, exhibited no signs of mental decadence up to the conclusion of her earthly pilgrimage. During her last illness, when near the closing scene, she gave with uncommon composure an intelligent direction relative to medicinal remedies, thought to be beneficial in the relief of pain and alleviation of nervous paroxysms. When the power of speech was no longer at command her daughter, Mrs. Erwin, desirous to ascertain if her intellectual faculties were undisturbed, asked her if she knew her, to which she promptly responded by signs in the affirmative. And if she was afraid to die, to which she responded negatively. Sister Crow died as she lived—a happy, consistent Christian. Therefore, we sorrow not for her as those who have no hope, believing those who sleep in Jesus, when the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall pour the jubilant notes of the resurrection along the dusty vaults of death's dread realm, the corruptible body shall be changed by the working of his mighty power and made like unto his glorious body, and our sister shall come forth to meet the Lord, and so shall ever be with him. Therefore, daughters, be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, that when Christ shall come ye may be ready to join his triumphant host.

Sleep on, mother and friend, the narrow stream of death separates now; but we, by the grace of God, will soon pass over the mystic river and join you on the beatific shores of immortality.

M. C. M.

RICHEY—HARVEY S. RICHEY, son of William and Lucie Richey, was born in Lowndes county, Miss., November 8, 1866, and died July 12, 1888. Hal (as he was familiarly known) was only sick a short while, and, although one of the stoutest young men in the neighborhood, he has been cut down by the ruthless hand of death just as his young manhood gave promise to his loved ones of much to cheer them in future years. Truly "in the midst of life we are in death." Only a short while back the angels came for Hal's sainted mother, and now so soon, and so young, he has gone to join her, never more to part. Hal was not a member of the church at his death, but gave every evidence to his bereaved father and loved ones that he was prepared for the great change, and no cloud settled over him at his departure. May the God of all grace come in the still watches of the night to Bro. Richey, who has so recently been bereaved, first of a loving wife and now of his youngest boy! May the divine grace be given to enable him to meet them on the shores of everlasting deliverance, is the prayer of

If you are suffering from Malaria, ask your druggist for Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria. If he don't have it, and tells you he has something just as good, don't believe him, but send one dollar to Dr. A. T. Shallenberger, Rochester, Penn'a, and get the Antidote by mail. A few doses will restore you to perfect health. The Medicine is in the form of pills, but is not a purgative. It not only destroys Malaria, but is an excellent tonic.

Electrical Phenomena.

Dr. Lafferty, in the Richmond Advocate, gives this account of electrical phenomena in Accomac recently:

That Sunday night will be ever memorable in Accomac for the phenomenal display of electricity. About eleven the heavens became an inky dome, and for two hours, barely intermitting for a minute, sometimes every second, the crest of Sinai could not have blazed with fiercer fury or thundered with louder voice. No living man in that section had ever seen such a demonstration of ethereal fires. Some fled from their trembling houses. Some were too terrified to lift a limb out of bed, and were carried to other apartments. To add to the horror, the flames from burning homes kindled by the lightning at times lit up the horizon. The clouds stood still overhead, motionless, banked up, sooty and scowling as the wrinkled roof of "Erebus and Old Night." The electric currents darted in hideous and serpentine tracks across the sky. Ever and anon torrents of the fiery fluid fell with stunning report to the earth. The perpendicular and dashing river of foaming flame that tore a pathway in the mass of clouds, plunging through a canyon in the heavens, gave hideous hint of a volcano upset on a star and emptying its lava upon this planet. At intervals the lightning had the appearance of falling in vast sluices, as if the ladle of the Cyclops had been tilted or the furnace of these Vulcans had fallen apart.

At the camp ground the horses set up a wild neighing, and the fowls gave signs of fear by screams as if pursued by a hawk. Houses were struck, barns burned and stock killed. The air was so charged with electricity that the fingers of delicate persons tingled. There were many remarkable escapes from death. How impotent is man in the presence of Jehovah! "Power belongeth unto God."

MISSIONS AND SCIENCE.—The scientific advantages of missions are well set forth in the following paragraph from the pen of Rev. George E. Post, in the New York Evangelist: "It would take a long list to exhaust the religious, literary and scientific contributions to the Arabic language from the missionaries in Syria. They include the translation of the Scriptures, and the stereotyping of the same in numerous styles; the preparation of a Scripture guide, commentaries, a concordance, and a complete hymn and tune-book; text-books in history, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, logarithms, astronomy, meteorology, botany, zoology, physics, chemistry, anatomy, physiology, hygiene, materia medica, practice of physic, surgery and a periodical literature which has proven the stimulus to a very extensive native journalism. The Protestant converts of the mission, educated by the missionaries, have written elaborate works on history, poetry, grammar, arithmetic, natural science, and the standard dictionary of the language, and a cyclopedia which will make a library by itself, consisting of about twenty volumes of from six to eight hundered pages each."

ELECTRICAL PROGRESS.—Statistics recently published by the Electrical World afford a striking example of the rapidity with which new industries are taken up and developed in the United States. We learn from the above source that at the beginning of 1885 there had been established 450 local electric lighting companies, while at the present time the number has increased to 1,000. There are companies running central stations for the supply of arc and incandescent lighting to subscribers. In addition to these stations there are said to be 3,000 isolated plants at work. The total number of arc lamps in use throughout the United States is roughly estimated at 200,000, while about 1,250,000 incandescent lamps are nightly in use. The greater part of the arc lighting is done from the central stations, while the larger share of the incandescent lighting falls to isolated plants. It is estimated that 150,000 arc lamps are supplied from the 1,000 central stations, while only 500,000 incandescent lamps are supplied by them. If we estimate the life of incandescent lamps at one year, the lamp renewals alone would amount to 1,250,000 lamps.

The Pulpit.

What of our pulpit?—is it changing, does it need improving? One of our most successful ministers gives something of an answer to the first part of this question by saying: "The days of the rhetorician in the pulpit are past." In the sense in which he used the term the remark is true. The orator who devotes his attention to the art of making and delivering fine sentences, is no longer in demand, in the pulpit or out. The literature of the day is not so much marked by elegance and beauty as by pungency and power. To use an expression applied elsewhere, it means business. And literature has made a great impression upon the platform and the pulpit. But another man who ought to go, still lingers before the public, the man of platitudes. He may not be numerous in the country at large, but he has been somewhat prominent on several notable occasions in this city during the last few months. What people want in these days is, not glittering generalities, but particular applications. "Come down to facts," is the cry. General truths have but little meaning until brought home and made to fit the case. A little tack hammer falling upon a man's toe impresses him more than the whole broad idea of the force of gravity.

The man of many, varied, beautiful and glowing illustrations also holds on, and holds hard to the treasures which he has been gathering for years. These, when used as a means of impressing a truth upon the mind or putting a sentiment in the heart, are invaluable, but as pictures to dazzle the eye, they ought to be laid aside. The essayist, fine and dry as ever, is another man who is still with us. And so are the men who preach to the newspapers, or for the volume at the end of the year. It is sometimes astonishing to turn to the Year Book and see how little the volume of sermons which you hold in your hand accomplished in the church where they were preached. Here is one man whose sermons are regularly published; in a whole year half a dozen were added to his church on confession of faith. Another, whose sermons volumize, seems to have converted only half as many. Such sermons are good models for the man who wants to know "how not to do it."

The other question, Does the pulpit need improving? is in part answered by what has been already said. It may also be remarked that in view of the large number of ministers who have a college training, wide opportunities and all the time for their work, a rather small proportion become able speakers or writers. And, perhaps, while many of them think they are hindered from success in this direction by a pressure of duty, the real truth is, that they are not under pressure enough. It is the tax or strain of a profession which makes its members eminent. The ministry has the disadvantage of not holding its members sternly to their work. The lawyer can not go to the college commencement because he has an important case in court; the minister can go, because he can use an old sermon, or give his people a light talk the next Sunday. Physicians and merchants can not take an outing of six weeks in the woods, because their business would suffer, but ministers do take it, and matters go on after a fashion. The disadvantage is with the latter. "If you were a poor man, you would make a great painter," said Turner to a rich young amateur. The men of the pulpit are generally poor enough, but they need pressure either from without or from within—circumstances or selfdetermination. Paul undoubtedly had this in mind when he exhorted Timothy not to neglect his gift, and when in his next Epistle he puts it still stronger by saying, "Stir up the gift that is in thee."—Advance.

"Weak and weary" describes the condition of many people debilitated by the warm weather, by disease or overwork. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed to build up and strengthen the body, purify and quicken the sluggish blood, and restore the lost appetite.

If I am faithful to the duties of the present, God will provide for the future.—Bedell.

Children Starving to Death

On account of their inability to digest food, will find a most marvelous food and remedy in Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. Very palatable and easily digested. Dr. S. W. COHEN, of Waco, Texas, says: "I have used your Emulsion in infantile wasting with good results. It not only restores wasted tissues, but gives strength and increases the appetite. I am glad to use such a reliable article."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Senator Chandler made a speech, in the United States Senate, on August 23, referring to the elections in Louisiana, particularly the last one, which he declared was fraudulent and dishonest.

An executive message was sent to Congress, on August 23, reviewing the situation established by the rejection of the fisheries treaty. The President is determined to protect the rights of American citizens, and states that a policy of national retaliation is the only course open to the administration.

Pike county, Miss., on the twenty-third instant, went dry by 300 majority.

The City Council of New Orleans appropriated $5,000 for the relief of citizens made destitute by the recent overflow.

Judge Thurman made a speech at a grand Democratic barbecue at Cheltenham Beach, near Chicago, on August 25. The fisheries treaty, the tariff and the surplus were discussed at length.

At Jacksonville, Fla., on August 26, there were nine new cases of yellow fever, and seventy-five under treatment.

Twenty-four saloon keepers were arrested in Cleveland, O., last week, for violating the State Sunday law.

The President's foreign policy, as communicated in the newspapers of the other day, has electrified the country and delighted the Democrats. The responses of the press and of the people in every quarter all show that the President has struck the key-note.

The proposed exposition of the products of East Mississippi and West Alabama, to be held in Meridian, Miss., this winter, opening at about the time the National Farmers' Alliance of Wheelers and Grangers meet here in October, is under fair headway.

Mr. James G. Blaine, speaking at Lewiston, Me., August 25, criticised the President's recent message from a Republican standpoint, and declared it a device to divert attention from his free trade policy.

The debate on the Jackson (Miss.) election case was reopened in the United States Senate, on the twenty-seventh instant, by Senator Wilson, of Iowa, who made a laborious and brutal attack on the people of Mississippi. A manly reply was made by Gen. Walthall, of Mississippi.

The action of the Conference Committee on the Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill is to give the full appropriation of $50,000 for the building at Opelousas. There is $167,959 for the New Orleans Customhouse, and $20,000 for the Marine Hospital.

Henry George held a Cleveland and Thurman ratification meeting in New York City, on August 27.

Archbishop Ryan stigmatizes as absolutely false a paragraph from Dorchester's, "Christianity in the United States," which is going the rounds of the press, in which the Archbishop is quoted as advocating the persecution of heretics as soon as Catholics in the country shall have become numerous enough to do so. He states that he never wrote or thought it, and absolutely repudiates the statement.

FOREIGN.

The Emperor William has promised Prof. Neumayer, director of the marine observatory at Hamburg, that the government will supply him with naval material for his proposed expedition to investigate physical and meteorological phenomena in the Antarctic regions.

Queen Victoria visited Paisley, August 23. Replying to an address of welcome, she congratulated the town upon its prosperity in spite of the general depression. The town was illuminated in the evening.

The arrival at Yokohama of an English steamer with a cargo of Russian kerosine from Batoni, has caused a decline in the price of American petroleum there.

One thousand houses have been burned at Orenburg, Russia. Ten thousand factory operatives are made homeless by the fire.

Despite the attitude of the Vatican, Emperor William personally desires to see the Pope. Arrangements have been made at the Vatican to receive the Emperor with the usual ceremonies. It is known that Prince Bismarck has had trouble in persuading Emperor William to submit to the papal ceremonial.

The interview between Count Kalnoky, the Austrian foreign minister, and Signor Crispi, Italian prime minister, at Ager, does away with the necessity of a conference between the three statesmen at Friederichsruhe. In an interview they stated that there would be no change in the positions of their governments and that the alliance would be maintained.

After reflecting upon the first overtures made to him for his acceptance of the throne of Bulgaria, further developments have induced the Duke of Cumberland to reconsider his determination, and it is probable that if assured of the support of the great powers combined, and the extension of the Bulgarian kingdom to the Ægean sea, according to the treaty of San Stefano, he will accept.

King Oscar of Sweden, accompanied by Count Loerberg, commandant of Stockholm, Cabinet Secretary Bildt and Marshal Froelich, will come to Berlin on August 30. The party will be received by the court with honest heartiness.

The Shah of Persia intends to reach Baku on September 20, and thence to make a tour of Europe.

Mr. Gladstone has presented to a church in Flintshire the money he received for his reply to Robert Ingersoll.

Memorial services for the late Bishop Harris, of Michigan, were held in Westminster Abbey, August 26. The Bishop of Minnesota preached the funeral sermon.

Gray hairs prevented, dandruff removed, the scalp cleaned, and the hair made to grow thick by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

ALONE.

BY E. G. CHEVERTON.

Athirst and weary lies the strand,
Mocked by the sunny, salty sea;
The waves come dancing hand in hand,
And leap and laugh, in childish glee,
Among the barren dunes of sand.

There, leaning wistful to the land—
As once in fear it sought to flee,
And, paralyzed by God's command,
Was chained to duty—stands a tree,
Sore buffeted by blast and brand.

It leans, in longing, to the land—
And laughter seems in all the sea,
And wrinkled laughter in the sand;
Seems laughter in the breeze to be,
That only fevered when it fanned.

But nightly, nearer, bends the sky,
And near the sympathetic moon;
God's robes of cloud go trailing by Inviting touch, assuring boon:
So far the land, but heaven so nigh.

Soul, leaning willful to the land,
Whom God hath set by his salt sea—
'Tis hard for thee to understand
The larger world that stoops to thee,
Above thy barren dunes of sand.

A Bishop on His Travels.

MR. EDITOR: My last letter gave account of sights and insights in Montana. Leaving Missoula, Mon., on the morning of August 4, I reached Spokane Falls, Washington Territory, the same evening at eight o'clock. Not far from Missoula we passed the Flathead Indian Reservation, which is located along the Jocko and Pend d'Oreille rivers, and contains 1,500,000 acres. The Flatheads claim the distinction of never having killed a white man. It will be remembered that this tribe occasioned the first Protestant missionary going to the West. The long journey on foot of the three chiefs to St. Louis from Oregon, resulting in the death of two, their earnest appeal for missionaries, the stirring exhortation of Dr. Wilbur Fisk, and the going out of Jason Lee, are facts known and read by all well-informed Methodists. The Flathead's Agency now, however, is in charge of the Roman Catholics, which supports thereon a Jesuit mission.

Farther westward, by the junction of the Jocko and Missoula rivers, Clark's Fork of the Columbia is formed, along which beautiful stream the roads run for many miles. More magnificent scenery I had not noted than greeted me on both sides that river. Towering mountains, wooded canyons, wild gorges and lovely vistas presented an ever-varying picture of the sublime in God's own handiwork. Within the pan-handle of Idaho the river passes through Lake Pend d'Oreille, a charming body of water sixty miles long, and at one point fifteen miles wide. The mountains form the shores of this lake, and they are covered with a wealth of fir and other growth. This is destined to be a popular summer resort for those fond of hunting and angling. From the car window I noticed vast flocks of wild geese and ducks, and was told that fish abound, and the mountains are full of elk, antelope, deer and bear. About fifteen miles beyond the western shore of the lake we entered Washington Territory, and soon reached Spokane Falls, a city born almost in a day. I found Pastor Swift at the depot to greet and conduct me to a hospitable home.

The Sabbath was delightfully spent in preaching and communing with the saints. The spacious church building of our Northern Methodist brethren had been cordially tendered us for the day, and the large-hearted pastor was genuinely and generously fraternal. And such has been his unvarying course toward our little flock. He made some remarks by way of introduction I would be glad for all ears in the Northern parallels to hear and emulate. A handsome frame church is being erected by our people on an eligible lot, and in a few weeks will be ready for occupancy. We may then expect rapid and substantial growth.

Spokane Falls is a magic city. A few years ago it had no place on the maps, was unknown to the commercial world, and boasted of no inhabitants save the wild game of the woods and their Indian hunters. Now it contains fifteen thousand souls, solid business blocks of three-story brick, large flouring mills, two lines of railway and another under construction, and all the appointments of a modern city of wealth and progress. The Spokane is a beautiful river, and its descent within the city limits is about one hundred and fifty feet. The main falls are strikingly picturesque, the leap of the whole river being sixty feet or more. It is said to rival Minneapolis for water power. Not many years ago the Rev. Mr. Havermail, a local Methodist preacher, homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, including the falls. He is now a millionaire. Out of poverty he has become rich.

Spokane Falls is progressive, ecclesiastically, also in having a female pastor among her clergy. The Rev. (Mrs.) May C. Jones is the regularly installed pastor of the Baptist Church in the city. She is said to have gifts and grace, and to be diligent in business. What effect the recent decision of the Territorial Supreme Court, declaring the woman's suffrage act unconstitutional, will have upon the public sentiment that approves or condones this wideaing (?) of woman's sphere, I have not heard. Having traveled somewhat extensively through Washington Territory, with special facilities for observation, I can say this, however, that a comparatively small number of ladies have exercised the privilege of the elective franchise.

West of the Rocky Mountains the climate is milder, being softened by the "Japan current." At Tacoma and Seattle the thermometer never descends to zero, and rarely reaches ninety in midsummer. The valleys are fertile, producing the smaller grains in abundance, and many varieties of fruits. It rains all winter between the Cascade and Coast Ranges, and in summer the dust clouds are dense and immense. There is more soil above ground than in any section I ever saw. The nights are delightfully cool, and the days never unpleasantly warm. The farmers seem contented and fairly prosperous. Real estate dealers are voluble and extravagant—exhausting the dictionary of superlatives in describing the beauty, fertility and expanding glory of the land they want to sell. But this applies to all the West. A measure of such enthusiasm I commend to the people of Mississippi and Louisiana.

The Columbia Conference met in Pendleton, Oregon, August 8. It was in all respects harmonious and signally profitable. The difficulties and discouragements which culminated a few years ago have quite passed away, and a new era of hope has dawned. A forward movement was made last year, and now everything betokens large prosperity. The Conference was hospitably entertained, largely attended and publicly thanked for visiting the city. There was quite an accession to our preaching force, and if a few more men can be secured for places left to be supplied, and for which provision has been made, the number of pastoral charges will be just doubled. I had a delightful home with a rising young lawyer of the place, Hon. Eugene R. Skipworth, son of a former member of the Louisiana Conference.

Of a trip down the Columbia river in a steamer, a run up Puget Sound, and two weeks in the Willamette Valley, I may write at another time. The days are so occupied with work I have little time for correspondence. Next week I go to California. Fraternally,

P. S.—I learn with great sorrow of the death of your indefatigable and successful Moreau Street pastor, Bro. Kimball. The zeal of the Lord's house consumed him. He was in labors too abundant for human strength. His works will follow him. C. B. G.

Other Problems.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

The very general—not to say, universal—attention which the "Problem of Methodism," by Rev. J. M. Boland, is receiving, and the numerous criticisms favoring and opposing the theory it advances, suggest many questions as regards criteria by which churches are to test the orthodoxy of their public teachers. In 1880, at the session of the Louisville Conference, Bishop Kavanaugh, in his sermon, took the position which Boland argues for, viz: that sanctification is wrought in the nature at the time of regeneration: that holiness is growth in grace, and perfection the final outcome—the maturity of Christian character or being. Rev. I. W. Emerson, whom the Bishop declined to appoint to the presiding eldership of another district (his fourth year having closed on the Russellville district) because of some views the Bishop deemed erroneous, which Emerson had advanced, tentatively, in Sledd's Homiletic Review, propounded the question to me, as one of the (then) editors of the Central Methodist, whether the Bishop was orthodox. The reply given, editorially, was that he was in perpendicular opposition to our standards, and, according to them, he was heterodox. This reply called forth a communication from Bro. T. C. Peters, of the Louisville Conference, protesting against such a characterization of the Bishop. He deemed it unfair, because "we have no standard doctrine by which a man may be adjudged as heterodox, except the Twenty-five Articles." In the Articles nothing is affirmed or denied regarding sanctification. If it be, as Bro. Peters declares, that one may only be adjudged heterodox as he contravenes one or more of the Twenty-five Articles, then could one of our preachers deny the personality—the very being—of the devil; he could deny the witnessing office of the Spirit, and he could teach the ultimate salvation of all the human family, and escape arrest—there being nothing in the Articles on these points. I've read Boland's book with much profit and pleasure. I would, were I to essay a review of it, raise a question as to whether there is a clearly defined idea, in any mind, of what is sought to be declared by the phrase, "the nature of man." I have humbly to acknowledge that it is all nebulus to me. The Seventh Article affirms somewhat "of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam." That somewhat is "corruption," and this corruption is denominated "original sin." The Article is headed, "Original, or Birth-Sin," though in the Article itself it is not called "birth-sin." With the profoundest deference to all, and certainly in no spirit of captiousness, I express the belief that there is no possibility of a clear analysis of this Article, so as to have a satisfactory concept of what is aimed at. Richard Watson affirms that "guilt is a concomitant of sin." That corruption whereof all children, "naturally engendered of the offspring of Adam," partake, being sin, guilt is concomitant thereto, or therewith, so that infants are guilty of having come into the world corrupt. In order to righteousness of purpose and of conduct on their part, from without must come, by operation of the divine Spirit, enablement and inducement, so that creatures with bad nature—corrupt nature, sinful nature—may choose to be regenerated and sanctified. Such are "new creatures in Christ Jesus." The old man is slain—the carnal nature is substituted by a spiritual nature. Two persons—man and wife—thus reconditioned, voided of original sin, and being renewed in the image of Him who is one in nature with the Father and the Holy Spirit, must, by the divine decree, or by a fatal necessity, transmit, not the new, but the old nature, to their offspring. That is, the children must go aback of all this glorious work of renovation which their parents have experienced, and get to themselves that other nature which, at the time they are conceived, their parents are wholly free from! How may one impart to an offspring other than the nature he has at the time of generating said offspring? In regeneration and sanctification we come into possession of a new nature. "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature," etc. The only escape that I can imagine from the incongruities that must, if formulated logically, ultimate in a reductio ad absurdum, is to claim that the nature of each of those who are seminally in the regenerated and sanctified, is not reached by the regenerative and sanctifying power which reconditions the parents; that each holds his nature from Adam, as corrupted, aback of all changes of re-creation, regeneration and sanctification the parents may experience. Let it be stated clearly, so that it may become the rallying point—the central salient—whence the orthodox may defend the citadel of our faith. It is this: In Adam all seminally were created. Every seed had, in him, a distinctive individual, actual and real subsistence. Adam was the federal, personal seminary of all the race, and each, by Adam's transgression, became depraved. Subsequent to this reconditioning of each germ, no change in Adam himself, wrought by the power of the divine Spirit in him on condition of his faith, repentance and obedience, effected any second reconditioning of these germal individuals, advantageously; for such operation in their nature—in their condition of being—would rob them of "total depravity." What thus holds in respect of our relation to Adam, warding us off from any benefits through the gracious reconditionings of his nature, continues along down the line of mortal generation, so that the offspring of the most thoroughly regenerated, sanctified and perfected parents are under the fatality of "original sin," so as to answer the orthodox requirement. If the question be raised as to the human nature of Christ, and how that escaped from the infection, I reply that Christ was the seed of the woman, not of the man. It was through Adam, not Eve, our corruption came. Had Adam held off from the forbidden fruit, his posterity, despite what Eve had done—well, I'll not just now say how the matter would have worked. Brother Paul, who looked after the woman question somewhat, says that the "woman, being deceived, was in the transgression." Adam sinned under no delusion—no deception. He had a holy nature—"created in righteousness and true holiness"—and is, therefore, one case, at least, wherein "original sin" or "total depravity" does not account for transgression. "Original sin" accounts for the disobedience of each of his posterity; but it doesn't account for his, for he didn't have any, and there didn't any have him.

Bro. Boland's book does not essay to go aback of "our article on original or birth-sin." He does, as Mr. Wesley did when he was an obedient son in the orthodoxy of the Church of England; he works off from the dogmatic point. Mr. Wesley, in his sermon on sin in believers, conformed himself to what was declared in the Ninth Article of the Thirty-nine of his church, viz: that after regeneration there is a residue of sin to be purged out upon condition of faith and repentance afterward. When Wesley went aback of the dogmata of his church, and became "a wandering star," "a crank," etc., the truth gathered upon him in such force as to loosen him off and out of the old hull of Calvinistic orthodoxy. I've never met in any Methodist or other literature a claim that Mr. Wesley was either criminal or weak in abiding in the church, whose Articles of Faith he so materially qualified. He was not a schismatic. There was, through him and his coadjutors, a development of Christian doctrine. The world of mind made an advance movement, carrying all the churches forward and upward, so that there is not to-day a church in Christendom that is not, proximately, Methodist. In respect of dogmatic formulation of the doctrine of Christ, the future is to become in comparison of the present as the present is in comparison of the past. The debris of successive orthodoxies are strewn along the highway of church history. Successive formulations transpire, inevitably, even as nuts form hulls in their growth. To undertake to generate by dogma what can alone come of doctrine, is as if we sought to raise hickory trees from planting hickory nut-hulls.

In Answer to Rev. J. W. Honnoll.

BY REV. J. M. WYATT.

Bro. J. W. Honnoll is a man of our Conference whom we all love very much. He declares himself in favor of Christian education, and we really think he is; yet his article in your last issue will largely be placed against it. His article is a strong argument for a college in our own State. Now, take the facts. He is opposed to State schools. He advocates that Methodist people should educate their own boys and girls at their own schools. This we are not doing, according to the demands upon us and in comparison with other States. He tells us that we have two hundred boys and young men out of the State at Methodist schools. He reminds us that there are thirty at the Vanderbilt University. We find that twenty of these are in the schools of engineering, law, dentistry, pharmacy and medicine. You see, in the first place, you can not credit Methodists for sending all these twenty there, and, secondly, they would be forced to leave our State if we had such a college as we contemplate. So we have ten at the Vanderbilt University. Again, it is a humiliating fact that our sister State, Alabama, with about the membership of our State, with her Southern University at Greensboro, with two hundred and thirty boys and young men, and expecting three hundred, or near it, this fall, and boys and young men elsewhere at colleges—I think more than we have—and then fifty-nine at the Vanderbilt University. Tennessee Methodism has two hundred and twenty-six at the Vanderbilt University, and about the same number at her Hiwassee, and a hundred or more at her McTyeire Institute, with several high schools for boys and young men. Then I am confident that Tennessee Methodism has about as many in other States at colleges as our State has. We know that we ought to be far ahead of Arkansas; yet she leads us with her sixty thousand Methodists—to seventy-five in our State—with school facilities for boys and young men in her own State—sending them off to colleges in other States—with thirty-three of these to our thirty at the Vanderbilt University. Let us all who can, read from the Arkansas Methodist, of August 25, from the pens of Bishops Galloway (who is consistent), Granbery and Wilson. Bishop Granbery, with his extensive observation and long experience, says: "Arkansas colleges should be provided for Arkansas youths. Her sons should not be compelled to go beyond her borders for a collegiate education. The policy which I advance is not narrow. Parents should have every encouragement to send their sons to college; young men should have every encouragement to go. One inducement is to offer them a good school in their own State. Parents calculate closely the expense. They are reluctant to send their children far off. Besides, State love is strong, and ought to be fostered. To form a perfect Union, we do not need to blot out State lines. National patriotism will be only the more seated and potent, because of State patriotism. The development and greatness of each part of the country will be the development and grandeur of the whole. First-class colleges in every State should be our joy." Read it all. How appropriate for us Methodists of Mississippi! Let State pride and church responsibility move us all forward in this needed Christian work.

"His Love to Me."

To an invalid friend, who was a trembling, doubting believer, a clergyman once said: "When I leave you, I shall go to my own residence, if the Lord will; and when there, the first thing I expect to do is to call for a baby that is in the house. I expect to place her on my knee, and look down into her sweet eyes, and listen to her charming prattle, and, tired as I am, her presence will rest me, for I love that child with unutterable tenderness.

"But the fact is, she does not love me; or, to say the most for her, she loves me very little. If my heart were breaking under the burden of a crushing sorrow, it would not disturb her sleep. If my body were racked with excruciating pain, it would not interrupt her play with her toys. If I were dead, she would be amused in watching my pale face and closed eyes. If my friends came to remove the corpse to the place of burial, she would probably clap her hands in glee, and in two or three days totally forget her papa. Besides this, she has never brought me in a penny, but has been a constant expense on my hands ever since she was born. Yet, although I am not rich in the world's possessions, there is not money enough in this world to buy my baby. How is it? Does she love me, or do I love her? Do I withhold my love until I know she loves me? Am I waiting for her to do something worthy of my love before extending it to her?"

"O, I see it," said the sick man, while the tears ran down his cheeks, "I see it clearly; it is not my love to God, but God's love to me I ought to be thankful about; and I do love him now as I never loved him before." From that time his peace was like a river.

"Six things," says Hamilton, "are requisite to make a home. Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, and lighted with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere, and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting glory and canopy, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God."

GOOD IN EVERYTHING.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

I see in nature's open book,
What goodly things to us are sent,
And in my neighbor's friendly look
What room dispels my discontent.
These all awake a sense of good
That weans my heart from solitude.

We're not alone in this wide sphere,
We have companions who are just,
And friendly voices, far and near,
Whose gentle words we all may trust,
Yea! every flower and spreading tree
Doth whisper, "We are made for thee."

I see the good that lies around,
I feel the joy that makes me free,
Heaven sendeth forth a happy sound
That fills my soul with melody;
Beauty is spread o'er earth and sky
The air breathes naught but harmony.

There is no winter in the heart
O! him that doth a useful deed;
O! what he gives he hath a part,
And this supplieth all his need;
Like to the husbandman who knows
His wealth increases as he sows.

THE SMITTEN ROCK.

Numbers xx, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—They drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ.—1 Cor. x, 4.

TIME.—B. C. 1452, April.

PLACE.—Kadesh (Ayn Qades).

1. Into the desert of Zin in the first month—Commonly supposed to be the first month of the fortieth year, when the Israelites are thought to have arrived for the second time at Kadesh. Some, however, are of the opinion that the journey is the same as that which is mentioned in chapters xii, xvi, and in Deuteronomy i, 19, and that the arrival at Kadesh was on the first month of the third year—that is, the year which followed the departure from Sinai. People abode in Kadesh—After thirty-eight years of weary wanderings, during which the people spread themselves widely in search of pasture for their flocks, and the tabernacle moved from place to place among them, the pillar of the cloud once more brought the ark to Kadesh, and there was a general collection of the congregation to that locality. Miriam died there—Four months before Aaron. She is spoken of as sharing in the sacred mission of her brothers. When she leads off the song of triumph on the shore of the Red Sea, she is expressly called "Miriam, the prophetess;" and the ground on which she and Aaron rebelled against Moses implies their possession of the prophetic gift: "Hath Jehovah spoken by Moses? Hath he not also spoken by us?" The delay of the march till she was free from the defilement of her leprosy proves her high consideration. Lastly, she bore the name of the mother of our Lord. Tradition makes her the wife of Hur and grandmother of the artist Bezaleel. And was buried—It was the first loss from among his own kin, so far as we know, that Moses had suffered, the first break in the small family circle which had come with him out of Egypt. Miriam must have been an aged woman, a hundred and thirty years old or more.

2, 3. No water—The spring of Kadesh, near which they were probably encamped, was, no doubt, wholly insufficient for the wants of so great a concentrated multitude. Gathered themselves together against Moses ... Aaron—In the blind unreasonableness of their suffering they repeated the sin of their fathers, and blamed Moses and Aaron for their misery. People chode with Moses—So at Rephidim the people most unreasonably chode with Moses, as if he alone was responsible for bringing them out of Egypt and for the lack of water, and as if their sufferings were so great as altogether to eclipse all the blessings of that great deliverance. Would God we had died when our brethren died before the Lord—That is, suddenly, rather than to die such a lingering and painful death. The older portion of the congregation, who would naturally be the spokesmen, would speak of those who perished in the insurrection of Korah as their brethren.

4, 5. Why have ye brought up the congregation of the Lord into this wilderness—In the hardness of their hearts it now seemed to them as if the prospect before them were hopeless, and they destined to suffer the same fate as their fathers: something of this unbelieving despair appears in their cry. Wherefore ... made us to come up out of Egypt—With that perversity which seems always to have possessed them, and which led them to look backward rather than forward, they envied those who had died, and they complained that they had been brought out of Egypt upon false pretenses. Thus the same spirit of discontentment and unbelief which had been so severely punished in the parents seemed to be springing up in the children. No place of seed ... figs ... vines ... pomegranates—None of the luscious fruits with the promise of which they had been tantalized. Whose fault was it that they were not in the land of promise?

6-8. Moses and Aaron went ... unto the door of the tabernacle—The leaders fled to the precincts of the sanctuary, both as an asylum from the increasing fury of the highly excited rabble, and as their usual refuge in seasons of perplexity and danger, to implore the direction and aid of God. Fell upon their faces—As they did nearly thirty-eight years before. (Chapter xiv, 5.) The glory of the Lord appeared—In reply to their prostration and prayer. Take the rod—Not the budding rod, but that with which the miracles in Egypt had been wrought, and which had been used on a similar occasion at Rephidim. This rod, as the memorial of so many divine interpositions, was naturally laid up in the tabernacle, and is accordingly described now as taken by Moses "from before the Lord." Gather thou the assembly—The miracle was to be a public and convincing one. Speak ye unto the rock ... and it shall give forth his water—Which will sooner hear and obey my commands than these sottish and stubborn people. It has been shown that the waters from the rock in Horeb typified the sanctifying and comforting influences of the Holy Spirit, communicated to us through the atonement of Christ, when smitten for our sins. The smiting of the rock needed not to be repeated: for though it was not the same rock, it was the outward sign of the same spiritual benefit. It was, therefore, only requisite to speak to it. And thus Christ, having been once smitten "and wounded for our transgressions," needs not to be smitten any more; but only to be spoken to by the prayer of faith accompanying the preaching of the gospel, and the waters will flow forth.

9, 10. Hear now, ye rebels—Speaking to the people instead of to the rock. Must we fetch you water out of this rock—Words which, if they did not express any doubt in the help of the Lord, were certainly fitted to strengthen the people in their unbelief. In circumstances where man should be nothing and God all in all—man only a consciously unworthy instrument, and God the supreme and ever-to-be-honored power, it was one of the sad infirmities of the best of men to put himself so prominently forward and thrust the great God so ungratefully into the background.

11. Moses ... smote ... twice—As if it depended upon human exertion, and not upon the power of God alone, or as if the promise of God would not have been fulfilled without all the smiting on his part. He smote the rock with blows which manifested a spirit of vindictiveness strangely out of harmony with his later disposition, and calculated to bring dishonor on the name of the Master whom he served. Water came ... abundantly—The Lord did not rebuke him with failure, but despite of his bad spirit gave forth water abundantly. Congregation drank, and their beasts—Physically the water afforded the same kind of needful nourishment to both. But in a religious point of view this, which was only a common element to the cattle, was a sacrament to the people; it possessed a relative sanctity imparted to it by its divine origin and use. So that the elements in the sacraments have no inherent and inseparable holiness, but only a relative holiness with respect to their use, out of which they are unholy and common.

12. Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron—We read in Psalms cvi, 33, that the Israelites "provoked (literally, made to rebel) his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his lips." Whatever was the nature of the sin thus committed, it is clear that Aaron was a participator in it with Moses. Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me—Some have thought that the sin of Moses consisted in addressing the people as "rebels;" but this is the charge repeatedly brought against them in the book of Deuteronomy (see chaps. i, 2, 43; ix, 24; xxxi, 27), under circumstances in which it is impossible to suppose that Moses committed the same sin. It has also been thought that the sin of Moses and Aaron consisted in arrogating to themselves the honor which was due only to God. "Must we fetch you water?" but the personal pronoun does not occur in the Hebrew, as it might, and probably would, have occurred, if intended to be emphatic. His sin was unbelief in God; his petulance of temper and hastiness, alike of act and speech, grew out of his temporary distrust of God. I think we can easily understand the case. For eight-and-thirty years he had been looking forward to the time when he and the people should enter the land of the covenant; and now, after all that has happened, they manifest the same old mutinous spirit as their fathers had shown, and he sees nothing before them but a prolongation of the ban which had kept them so long in the wilderness. It seems to him useless to strive longer against their perversity; he gives up all expectation, for the time, at least, of ever settling them in their promised inheritance; God's covenant is forgotten in the presence of the people's disaffection, and even as he lifts his rod to strike the rock, he is thinking less of Jehovah than of them, and saying within himself, "If this is to be their spirit, then we may as well give up the hope of Canaan." Ye shall not bring this congregation into the land—They acted unworthily of their office. God punished them, therefore, by withdrawing their office from them before they had finished the work intrusted to them. If the Lord's rebuke of Moses seem severe, let it be considered that his sin was very great, because he had been admitted into so near communion with God—such communion as had never been granted to any other man. If the guilt of sin be as the light sinned against, we are not likely to overestimate the guilt of his. The Lord speaks of it as rebellion. And manifestly his sin was so public as well as so flagrant that it became vital to the honor of God's name and government to rebuke it unmistakably. It was a terrible disappointment to him; and again and again he appealed to God for a reversal of the sentence, until at length he was met with a peremptory command: "Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter."

13. Meribah—That is, strife. The place is called "Meribah in Kadesh," and "Meribah-Kadesh" (Deuteronomy xxxii, 51), to distinguish it from the "Meribah" of Exodus xvii, 2. It has been supposed that the place derived its name of Kadesh from the cognate verb, which is rendered sanctify in this and the preceding verse. It was in Kadesh that the sentence of exclusion had been pronounced upon the people generally, and upon Moses and Aaron in particular, and it was thus the Lord sanctified himself in dealing with the transgressors. He was sanctified in them—Or, among them, to wit, the children of Israel last mentioned, by the demonstration of his omnipotency, veracity, and clemency toward the Israelites, and of his impartial holiness and severity against sin even in his greatest friends and favorites, as Moses was.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Unbelief, impatience, rebellious feelings toward God, however, are chargeable upon no particular parentage or age; they belong to the race, to our fallen human nature, and are as frequently exhibited to-day as in the days of Moses.

Meekness and jealousy for God's honor were distinguishing traits of Moses, and yet at both these points he succumbed. Men fall repeatedly in the very qualities in which they feel themselves secure.

God's mercies are not withheld because of our unworthiness. God has no partiality. His sinning "friend" is dealt with as sharply as his open enemy.

Education—Especially Ministerial Education.

BY "ONESIPHORUS."

[MR. EDITOR: Allow me to put a P. S. at the top instead of at the bottom of what I have to say. A series, chapters, numbers and to be "continued" none of these are to my liking, but it will require more than one piece to free my mind on this subject. Next, I wish to deal in helps for young preachers, and how to do it while they are at their books without damage, or with least damage. Next—but time will tell. Whoever is not willing to read two other pieces as long as this need not read this. Pass on.

THE AUTHOR.]

Prof. Kern, of Randolph-Macon College, tells, in the Episcopal Methodist, of a way to preach the gospel, which is open to many people who yet have not thought of it:

Not by the delivery of sermons. Not by Christian example. Not by the private word sensonably spoken. All these, indeed, are a setting forth of the gospel; but we may easily find one more way. We may preach through others. If we put tools in the hands of a workman, are we not represented in his work? We are making Christ known to the world when we help anyone to declare his Word.

So those think who have contributed to the cause of ministerial education in our Conference. They hope by this means to preach Christ in many places and through countless coming years. Others, perhaps, have not seen this opportunity, or they have not felt that they could do anything.

On this principle the late Mrs. Garrett, whose gift founded a biblical institute in the Northwest, is not only preaching in America, but she is represented by some of the best workers in the foreign mission field of Northern Methodism. Nobody can forbid a woman's preaching in that way.

On this principle the late Mrs. Sarah E. Atkinson, of Memphis, who gave $10,000 for helping needy and worthy young ministers to an education in Vanderbilt University, is preaching to-day in several States, and has gone to China and Japan in the person of certain missionaries lately sent out.

Prof. Kern propounds a question and suggests the answer:

Would a good education make better preachers of young men?

Ask any Christian minister already engaged in his work without such preparation. Take the case of your own pastor. Would you rather he should be a well-informed man, trained to think and speak, familiar with the Scriptures; or untaught, untrained, illiterate? Can it be best that we should introduce men into the ministry year by year, set them before congregations to whom they must "cease not to teach and preach Jesus Christ," and charge them with the multiform and engrossing duties of pulpit and pastorate, when they have formed no habit of study, can not speak their own language correctly, and possess hardly an elementary acquaintance with the truths of the Bible?

The delegate of Southern Methodism, who did such honor to himself and us in his address last May before the General Conference in New York, has an experience that may be quoted for the benefit of young preachers who can't wait to get ready:

By hook and by crook, and dint of blows with ax and maul, and at length by the aid of generous friends, I kept at school awhile. But the strain was great. It was a slow business. There was an urgent call for young preachers to go West, and I began to think of giving up the plan of going to school, and join the Conference. A speech made by ——— gave me nights of sleepless torture. This sentiment was about the substance of the speech: "It is a waste of time to go to school. Souls are perishing, and the Lord calls you to get to work." To make the matter more serious still, he brought up the example of my hero, Bascom, to show what could be done in the regular work. His advice suited my case exactly. Instead of going to school and studying Latin, Greek and mathematics, on which all the school teachers insisted, I would quit and get a circuit, on which I could be "saving souls." I would be a "self-made" man. Alas! the sophistry that lurks in that idea! But the plan did not accord with my judgment. I saw no sign of talent in myself except a capacity for hard work. For every "self-made" man I saw there were a dozen self-marred. And besides, there was a secret suspicion in my mind that the only real reason for giving up the school idea was the difficulty I found in working it out. The problem was vexing me sorely, when Bishop Kavanaugh came along. By what I now believe was a special providence, he was the guest of the house where I boarded. I determined to ask his advice. I found myself alone with him in the room, and I felt that it was then or never. I got my courage up to the point of asking his advice. I briefly stated my circumstances, and told him I did not know what my duty was. He asked me how old I was. I told him nineteen. He laughed that odd little laugh of his—a sort of quaint cachinatory cross between a laugh and a grunt—and said: "I advise you to stay at school until you get through, and if the Lord lets you live as long as most people, you will have time enough to tell it all."

The cases of Winans, Bascom, McFerrin, Green, and some others of the last generation, may be and have been cited mischievously and misleadingly. Because there were a few giants in those days, shall we, therefore, neglect the means of making the most out of the average man of these days?

They may not like to have it told, but Methodists are slow in waking up to the wants of the present and the immediate future, in connection with ministerial education.

The Baptists—that other church of the people in this country—are getting ahead of us. They will take our crown if there is not a change. Says the editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate:

Richmond College and the Louisville Theological Seminary have well-nigh banished the old time-country Baptist preacher. The bright, cultured and polite pastors now abroad are lifting the rural churches out of the old ruts. You have to go to a "Kalmkee" Association to hear the genuine "harp of a thousand strings" whine in the pulpit. Thirty years ago on the "Lord's day," that nose-tone echoed in many a grove in Tidewater, Va. But better than the improvement in the usual notes is the charity and fraternity of the new generation.

Over a hundred young men are at the Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, from all over the South and West—"A. B.'s" and "A. M.'s," who have had their academic training in the various colleges of that denomination. What effect the sending out of a score or two of well-equipped preachers annually must have upon the whole Baptist Church and their relation to us is easy to be seen. In every Baptist Association and General Convention this Louisville Seminary is talked of and advocated, from Missouri to Texas, and patronage and funds are solicited for it. How is it with Southern Methodists who claim to be connectional? We have but one institution that may be called a theological seminary, and that about one hundred and fifty miles south of Louisville. Let the Vanderbilt school of the prophets be mentioned in many places, and the effect is like raising a red flag—preachers and professors go for it!

Our people are educating their children and building the churches. What are they doing for pastors and preachers to fill them? Talking about Bascom and such, and depending on extraordinary men to supply the lack of ordinary means.

It is heard on every side that the Bishops find increasing difficulty in filling the principal appointments. And yet the Conferences every year are taking in scores of young men who have brains and hearts, but no education. Do we expect miracles to be wrought to fit them for the varied and high duties of their vocation?

But some one will cry out: "O for grace, more grace!" That is always a good prayer. Let us add: "O for more sense, common sense!"

NUMBER TWO.

One of our old Bishops was heard to say: "Some presiding elders (some, mark you, not all of them) are the greatest enemies we have to ministerial education." That is a hard saying; but hear. A young man truly called to the ministry, and wishing to become a thoroughly furnished workman, one that needeth not to be ashamed, is arranging to go to college. "O! no use of that! I joined Conference with less learning than you've got. Come, I've a nice little circuit, a smug station—just suits you." And the young man's purpose is broken off. In a year or two some kind sister takes pity on him and marries him. The burden of a family follows. By and by the man, whom the strongest appointments would have been seeking, is struggling to barely live. He is useful, but finds—alas! too late—that his field of usefulness is limited—self-limited. Who can measure the penalty he pays and the church pays for following bad advice?

One of the best schoolmasters in America, and who donates tuition to consecrated youths looking to the ministry, and has the best men he can get to address his boys and preach to them, is a little uneasy when he sees certain "elders" mixing with his pupils. He has caught one or two of them in the act of trying to pull out the most promising young preacher from his school. "O! quit this foolishness, and go to saving souls. Here's a circuit to be supplied, and you wasting your time with hic, hoc."

Other presiding elders can tell you a secret on their colleague who is so forward to give bad advice. The cabinet has met, and they are consulting about the best distribution of the laborers. The name of a young preacher is called who has enjoyed opportunities for education, and has improved them. "Bishop," cries out the anti-college presiding elder, "I must have him. A railroad town in my district needs just such a man. It has doubled population in a year—merchants and capitalists moving in and building large houses and schools. The fact is, Bishop, the Presbyterians and Baptists are placing educated preachers there, and unless we can compete with them on that line, Methodism will be crowded out."

And this is the same presiding elder who dissuaded another young preacher from completing his mental outfit and training.

Some people expect a college to do everything. It must transform a mediocre into a genius, and make every stammering tongue eloquent. They are doomed to disappointment. Any farmer will tell you that cultivation makes ground more fruitful; it bears better crops; but must the hoe and the plow be pronounced useless because they do not turn poor upland into a rich river bottom? Culture sometimes deepens and enriches the soil; it always pays, it often works wonders, but it can not change the order of nature. Instead of faulting education because this or that educated preacher is not equal to one who has never been to college, it were better to inquire what the latter would have been with an education, and what the former would have been without it. Mental training makes the most of an ordinary mind, and it makes the most of an extraordinary mind. Both gain with it, and both lose without it; but the results in both cases must be conditioned by natural gifts. "Who," exclaims Solomon, "who can make that straight which God has made crooked?" To quote the wise man again: "Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." But the failure is not to be charged against the logical pestle or the theological mortar.

Far be the day when a diploma, either academic or theological, shall be required of everyone who is moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel. I would oppose that to the death. Reason and history are against it. Many a man may be and has been useful in calling sinners to repentance and in building up believers who goes on short notice, and works with such instruments as are at hand. Though not learned, he is, by natural parts or by zeal and experience, ahead of the mass of people who have not had better opportunities than himself. It will be found, on inquiring into the history of the best of such cases, that they availed themselves of every means within reach of improvement. A young preacher was being pressed for admission into the Conference, notwithstanding his defective preparation. His warm advocate averred that he was equal in that respect to Bishop Marvin when he was admitted on trial. The Bishop was present, though not presiding, and interposed: "Brother, please never cite my poor case in defense of ignorance or indolence. I was always a student."

The Methodist Church needs and must have a due proportion of thoroughly educated ministers. She has already fixed a minimum of literary qualification below which none may fall, and we must do what we can to raise the largest number to the maximum. One man's age, family, or social environments forbid him, while another has the opportunity, the possibility of the higher education.

The openings of Providence in this direction are the indications of duty. To the young man of to-day a call to preach is generally a call to get ready. There is no reflection on our Maker here.

At an official meeting in a Southern city the proposition was up of having the church—a fine building—insured. A member strenuously objected. "No; that is distrusting Providence." The presiding elder put an end to this fanaticism by one remark: "Brother, Providence has provided insurance companies." Three or four years afterward a flame broke out in the neighborhood. The firemen were slow in getting their hose in position; the steeple began to smoke, the costly house was burned down, and we had funds to rebuild.

On last analysis of some cases indolence, and not zeal, will be found at the bottom of this hurrying into the field of action without equipment. Studying is downright hard work. Brain-sweating and mental agonizing are a weariness to the flesh. In the midst or at the near prospect of them the brother flinches. The average congregation is less exacting than the faculty, and he is taken with a longing for "saving souls." Alas! how he deceives himself as to the motive which prematurely impels him into the wide fields of itinerancy! A Quarterly Conference west of the Mississippi had before it a candidate for recommendation to the Annual Conference. After his examination, and while he was out, the inquiry arose whether the young man could not be kept at school awhile with advantage to himself and the church. A generous layman, impressed with his spirit and the signs of undeveloped natural ability, offered to be at the charge of a preparatory school and of putting him through Central College. Then it came out that the young man did not desire an education—Hear Solomon again (Prov. xvii, 16), and passim.

Where is the young man like Samuel Wesley? Samuel, father of John, packed up his books and clothing one fine morning, took the burden on his back, and footed it to Oxford. George Whitefield, on learning that it was possible for him to go through the University, prepared himself and entered as a sizator student and went gloriously through, making his living by waiting on the fellows and students. Our Northern and Eastern hotels and watering places show scores of students to-day, standing high in their classes, and working their way through college by acting as hotel waiters during vacation.

May it not be so that some of our young men—aye, our young preachers, too—are waiting to have too many difficulties removed? Riding on Pullman cars, dressing well, and eating high was not the route Sam and George traveled at Oxford. And was it not worth while for them to get through? The church and the world have been the better for their going through.

To Treasurers of Parsonage Societies.

DEAR SISTERS: Let me urge upon you the vital importance of collecting all dues and remitting to your Conference treasurer the earliest day possible. We have pressing applications before us that should be granted; but it depends on your promptness whether the Board shall be able to do so at its next meeting in October—the last meeting before the middle of winter. Remember the cold blasts, rain, sleet and snow of winter are hard to stand when comfortably housed; but to meet them in a rented house the only one that can be secured—with a leaking roof that scarcely leaves a dry spot large enough for a bed, and walls and door that are no protection from the wind, is almost sure to bring into the household death or disease. Let those who are mothers look upon their children tenderly shielded from inclement weather, and remember the little ones who must pass the winter in such a house as I have described, because their father is giving his time to the work of God, and must go where he is sent. God requires it of us that not an one shall not suffer. Consider your personal responsibility in the matter, that it depends on you to see funds are collected and remitted in time. I have drawn no fancy picture. Well authenticated facts have drawn it in lines too deep to be effaced by the hand of indifference. Do your best to collect, and may God give you success. Promptness, always necessary, is vital at this time; any delay may become too late. The Conference treasurer must have the funds in time to remit; and we must have, by October 1, funds to grant the applications before us, or the applicant must suffer. May the blessed Savior who wept for the sorrows of others move the hearts of all who love him to aid in this work!

Enterprise, Miss.

We have just closed a series of meetings embracing three weeks. One at Spring Hill Church commenced on Saturday before the first Sunday in August, and closed on the following Wednesday. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. One of the oldest men in all that country composed one of the number out of eleven that joined the church. The church seems to have been awakened from a considerable long slumber; but her machinery is now in repair, and she is making rapid strides for glory.

We commenced at the next meeting on Saturday before the second Sunday in August, and closed on the following Wednesday night. The Lord manifested his presence there, and men were heard to pray in public that were never heard before, and shouts of hosannas were heard among the brethren, both in the day and night. Five were added to the church, and the church was greatly revived.

We commenced the Suckertower meeting on Saturday before the third Sunday in August. It began good, and grew better. There were six conversions and accessions to the church. God came down in his heart-cleansing power and cast the idols out of his temples; and our hearts were made to feel glad, and were only saddened by the absence of the venerable old superintendent, Bro. T. J. Blanks (he could not attend at night on account of his very critical state of health), and by our inability to reach the hearts of some of our young friends; nevertheless, there were men heard to pray there that were never heard to pray before. Old Suckertower has the sails of prayer stretched, and we hope she will ride triumphantly over the breakers of life, and make her happy entrance into the portals with all of her children.

I return he artfelt thanks to the good people of Meridian circuit, Mississippi Conference, for their warm hospitality, and to God for the wonderful manifestations of his blessed Spirit in our labors and our hearts.

Mansfield Female College.

AN APPEAL TO THE METHODISTS OF LOUISIANA.

The necessity for a united effort on the part of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of this State to support liberally the institutions of the Conference is very great. With such a large, influential membership, why should the institutions of the church languish? The Methodists of this State have it within their power to build up the grandest institutions of the land, both male and female.

The Baptists, especially of North Louisiana, are wide awake, active and united in support of their institutions, and are meeting with great success, drawing, too, to their mixed schools a considerable proportion of Methodist patronage on account of their cheap rates. Ought not this to arouse the members of our church to consider what ought to be done for our own schools. The only reason why our institutions have languished heretofore is the fact that the Methodists of this State waste their strength by scattering their patronage and sending their sons and daughters to other institutions out of the State. Could this money that goes abroad for education be bestowed on Centenary and Mansfield, these institutions would rise from their ashes into commanding influence and power, and the church would feel a quickened impulse to imbuild it to larger conquests. Then every Methodist would feel proud of his institutions, have a personal interest in them, talk about them, recommend them, secure patronage for them, and rally loudly to their continued support. Other denominations who have no special schools in the State are excusable for sending abroad; but the Methodist Church has within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference the best institutions of any denomination.

Give me at Mansfield the Methodist patronage that goes abroad, and this institution would flourish beyond any past record in its history, and afford advantages equal to any institutions of the land. The healthiest spot of Louisiana has been selected for its location, and a record of forty-five years has justified the wisdom of this location; for no institution of the South can boast such a record for health as this college possesses.

There is a campus noted for beauty, in the midst of which is a large, imposing building, with adjacent buildings, all admirably adapted for the successful management of a large school. No expense has been spared to equip the institution for the coming session. A very superior faculty has been engaged, and by the nineteenth of September the doors will be open for the reception of pupils.

Can not the Methodists of Louisiana be induced to fill its halls with their daughters? Loyalty to our own church demands that we patronize our own institutions. The Methodists of Louisiana send off more pupils to institutions out of the State than any other denomination. Methodists of Louisiana, let us change this state of affairs. There is a great battle to be fought in this State to maintain a regard for the Sabbath and to win in the movements of moral reform, and we need strong and influential institutions of learning. The only way to get them is to endow them and patronize them. A church with languishing educational institutions is a weak church. Build up your institutions, and you put life in the church. We want two grand colleges and a church high school in every district. Who will respond and send their daughters to Mansfield?

I would like to suggest the following plan for the increased support and enlargement of this institution: Let, at least, one hundred members of the Methodist Church, South, of Louisiana, who have daughters to educate, agree and pledge themselves to patronize Mansfield Female College, and I agree, on my part, to reduce the rates of tuition and board twenty per cent. This will bring expenses within the reach of those of moderate means. All of this hundred need not send now; but, at least, fifty or sixty must agree to send this year. Now, who will respond promptly? Is this institution not worthy of your patronage? By this plan the institution will do more for your daughters than any other, and you will build up your own college and educate your daughters in your own State, where they will form associations that will be of immense value to them in the future. By this method I can make this the greatest and best institution in the State. Write a card at once to the president, and join this educational syndicate, and state whether your daughter will come this year; and if the number in attendance from abroad reaches sixty, you will get the benefit of the great reduction. Some Jottings.

Here and there we read of a good work going on—sinners converted, backsliders reclaimed, sleepers awakened, preachers paid up and pounded, all good. In fact, we read it almost every week; but there is much of this sort of good work that never gets in the papers. It is done in a quiet nook of God's vineyard, and there may be no scribe to record it. There is an eye that sees and an ear that hears, and so every good deed done will not lose its power or reward. Yet it is a very good and right thing to do to let the people of one part of the vineyard know what the rest are doing.

"The times of refreshing" that we hoped would come to our little fold was under good headway when the storm came upon us. The winds blew, the rain poured, but the church did not fall. Trees fell all around, but did no harm. Bro. Crymes, our pastor, then went to his next appointment—Slidell—to hold a protracted meeting, and the storm was there also. So it was postponed. He expects to hold several meetings at other appointments before the Conference year closes.

This—Pearl River—is a new circuit, and it has not yet developed its possibilities. Time will prove all things, and great things of it may yet be chronicled. Our young pastor has worked with much zeal, and the work will tell in the future, if not now. The education of the boys must go on. The educated girls that have grown up and become mothers say that, and mean it, too. No matter where the college is, so it is a church college, and the boys are there, and the Bible with them. As long as the old-fashioned Bible lies at home on the stand, and the boy goes to a commercial, State or non-sectarian college to read Cicero and Homer, and learn to sneer at the mention of the Bible, so long will heart-broken mothers sing, "Where is my boy to-night?" it has always been a mystery to me why boys should be made to spend years over the Greek classics, and come home without knowing anything of the Greek Bible. Better, as Star King puts it, study "only the Bible and home history."

COVINGTON CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: Notwithstanding the dread of seeing this article chipped and hewn down to exactly fit your idea of things, and, perhaps, not seeing it any more, I will venture to write to let you and your many readers know what the good Lord is doing for us.

About the latter part of May, 1888, through the instrumentality of my unworthy self, a good brother and several good sisters, there was a very neat little church erected in what is known as the Long Branch neighborhood, six miles from Covington, La., with three members to start with. It now numbers twenty-eight, with very little doubt of its being swelled to fifty members before the close of this Conference year. At this church I have just closed a protracted meeting of great profit. The Lord was with us from first to last to bless and save; some deciding for heaven and joining the church at nearly every service. On Sunday night of the meeting the windows of heaven were thrown open, and our thirsty souls were permitted to drink a copious draught from the fountain of living waters. The scene at the last service was grand and affecting. Eight young men and ladies came forward and joined the church, among whom were two young men who had drunk deep of earth's pleasures, themselves being judges. The mother of one of these young men was present, and when the right hand of fellowship was extended she came forward, with tears of joy streaming down her cheeks, and fell on the neck of her once wayward son, imprinting kisses of maternal affection upon that cheek which in infancy she had pressed to her bosom, and for which she had so often prayed to that God who welcomes so cordially the prodigal returning from his way. This, with others weeping, young members taking up the cross and praying aloud, while others were exclaiming, "Glory to God!"—with an addition of twelve to the church, is, I imagine, a scene the angels would delight to look upon.

I am thankful to say that the Covington circuit is beginning to unfurl her banners, and has started on the grand march though "Immanuel's ground to fairer worlds on high." The blight of spiritual darkness is far spent, the day-star is sweeping up the horizon, the day-dawn is at hand, chasing away the darkness that overshadows our spiritual vision; we are already catching a glimpse of the Sun of Righteousness, arising above the hills of doubt and unbelief, illumining our spiritual sky, and may he rise higher and higher, and shine in full-orbed splendor, until there will be no cloud to intervene between us and the light of eternal day. May God bless you and the ADVOCATE! Pray for us.

EBENEZER CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my second meeting on this work, both of which resulted successfully. The first meeting was held at Ebenezer, which terminated in a good revival in the church, and eleven conversions, with six accessions by profession. The second was at Pleasant Grove, and we had a glorious revival in the church, and eleven accessions by faith, with three by letter, making in the two meetings twenty-three conversions and twenty accessions. At the close of the last meeting we had an old-fashioned love-feast, on Sunday morning, which crowned the services with signal success. Bro. Threadgill, a local preacher of Houston, Miss., was with me, and conducted the meetings with much efficiency. He is one of the most earnest workers I ever had the pleasure of having with me. His preaching was very forcible, accompanied with demonstration of the Spirit, and it reached the hearts of the people.

Raised by the two churches for ministerial education, $51 25; and $32 50 was paid Bro. F. F. Threadgill. The remainder is in good subscriptions. All my collections ordered by the Annual Conference from these two churches is in good subscription, except a little, which is all right.

AMERICA'S CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The third quarterly meeting for this work was held at Rosedale, embracing the second Sunday in August, and was protracted till the following Thursday night. Dr. West was present till Tuesday night, and did all the preaching while he stayed. Rosedale is a new church. I have been having an appointment at an old church near by for over a year, but there was no organization. There were a good many, however, that were near enough to attend service at that place who were not convenient to the churches where they held membership. So they concluded it would be best to build a new house, and organize a church there. They have now a very neat, well-finished chapel that does credit to all concerned, and have organized with about thirty members. Doubtless the hearts of those who have labored so faithfully were made glad on Sunday of the quarterly meeting, when Dr. West, after an appropriate discourse to a large congregation, set apart the church "from all unhallowed or common uses for the worship of Almighty God."

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

Briefs.

It is said that Mrs. Bishop Warren gives $100,000 to endow a theological school in connection with Denver University.

We are talking and writing and preaching and praying and groaning about our missionary work. Two things we don't seem to be doing: they are, giving and working on this line. Labor and liberality do not claim our attention. Here is an example of what can be done when people are in earnest. We clip from the Christian Intelligencer:

Fifty years ago seven shoemakers in a shop in the city of Hamburg said: "By the grace of God we will help to send the gospel to our destitute fellowmen." In twenty-five years they had established fifty self-supporting churches, had gathered out 10,000 converts, had distributed 400,000 Bibles and 8,000,000 tracts, and had carried the gospel to 50,000,000 of the race. It would only take 150 of such men to carry the gospel to the whole world in twenty-five years.

"For you must know, Mr. Lewis, it is a rule in our church that when one brother has been converted, he must go and fetch another brother; and when a sister has been converted, she must go and fetch another sister. That is the way 120 of us have been brought from atheism and from popery to simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ."

The above is said to be a part of the conversation between a member of the Baptist Church in Paris and an English clergyman. We copy it for the purpose of asking if the same thing can not be done among us? If the Baptists in ungodly Paris can do that among French atheists and Roman Catholics, why can't the Christians in this country do, at least, as much? It might be the best thing we ever did to adopt the rule of that little Baptist Church, that everyone who is converted must go and fetch another. It would be a very little to require of anybody. When everybody is working for the conversion of somebody, then the church will arise and shine.

From the Advance:

The eleventh Conference of Young Men's Christian Association of the world was held in Stockholm, Sweden, August 15-19. Four hundred delegates were in attendance, of whom two hundred were English speaking and some sixty Americans. The World's Committee report was very encouraging. The association has grown largely in Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Norway, Sweden and France. There are now 3,804 associations, a growth of nearly a thousand since the last report. The American report showed that the value of association property has increased since 1884 from three to seven million dollars, and the number of secretaries from 400 to 800. A telegram from King Oscar, who had made a handsome contribution to the expenses of the Conference, was read, in which he regretted his inability to be present. Addresses were made by distinguished members from all the countries represented, and in French, German and English, all being translated into Swedish. There was a spirit of great earnestness, and the cause of the association, especially on the Continent, will be greatly advanced by this strengthening of the "tie that binds," and the inspiration that comes of the freshening consciousness of so many other Christian young men engaged in working for the same ends.

Liberality.

All the churches are calling loudly for larger means to prosecute their great work of enlightening and evangelizing the world. There has never been a time when the church was engaged in greater enterprises, nor a time when she needed more money to carry forward those enterprises to success. Nor has the world ever witnessed such displays of liberality as Christian men and women have exhibited in recent times. And yet the work lags in its progress. The gifts of benevolence, which supply the demand in one quarter, open to view the necessities of some other quarter. The benevolences increase in the arithmetical proportion, but the necessities increase in the geometrical proportion; and thus the church finds herself continually hampered in her march by the lack of funds to meet the ever-enlarging needs.

The fact is patent that there are thousands of Christians possessing money who are not liberal in its use in the cause of God. These people may not be as much to blame as we are wont to think. We are apt to suppose that every Christian is liberal with his means; at least, we say he ought to be; and when by experience we find that many are not, we are too ready to conclude that they have no religion. The pastor hardly accuses himself of being the cause of a member's want of liberality, and yet such may be the fact. Religion, in its entirety, is a compound of many graces. Among these graces, liberality has special mention. The man who is not liberal with his money may have never had his attention called to this fact by his pastor. He may not know his own lack of this special grace. Paul deemed it of some importance to bring this subject prominently before his hearers and to exhort them to its attainment and to "abound" therein. And what the church needs now is a revival in this special grace. The necessities outgrowing the means to meet them are evidence enough on that point. Now, grace is ministered from on high. The disposition to be liberal can not come from anywhere else. When that disposition is received, it may be cultivated and enlarged by our own efforts; but it can not be created by us. Like the New Jerusalem, "it descends from God out of heaven." We have heard sermons, "straight from the shoulder," pounding men and women for their stinginess, and have done some of that pounding ourselves, but never have we heard a sermon pointing out the duty and the privilege of praying for the grace of liberality and encouraging the hearers to its cultivation and enlargement. The church needs more money to carry on her work, and that is evidence that she needs an enlargement in the grace of liberality. It devolves, then, upon the ministry to bring this subject before the people in a Scripture way, and lead them out into this beautiful region where the spirit of benevolence reigns. From the few examples we have seen of persons who live in this region, we have concluded that is the most delightful place this side of heaven. What if every preacher who reads these words should study up the subject under the guidance of the Holy Spirit and preach earnestly and lovingly to his people about it on the last Sunday in September? Wouldn't there be a "shaking of the dry bones"? Yea, verily.

Bro. T. L. Peeples, writing from Newton, Miss., August 28, says: "Our protracted meeting at Decatur closed last Sunday night. We were assisted by Bro. Irwin Miller, and Bro. Huddleston, of the Congregational Methodist Church. The meeting resulted in a number of conversions and 53 accessions to the church. In three years our membership here has grown from nineteen to one hundred and forty."

Fire in the Pulpit.

BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER.

There are in the ministry of to-day many men of great intellectual ability and thorough culture. There is logic, learning and polish, and there seems to be all necessary church machinery; and yet, whether we like it or not, it is a stubborn fact that our men and churches only here and there have any great success in destroying the devil's strongholds and in bringing sinners to sound conversion and godly living. Eloquent sermons by the thousands are being preached, and the best of instruments are made to fill our grand churches with exquisite music in liquid sweetness or solemn grandeur rolling forth under the skilled fingering of artistic performers. We have gifted, scholarly and devoted men as preachers, and in the pews sit those who are financially and socially solid; yet, withal, something more is sorely needed. There is evident lack of the true fire in many quarters. The Spirit of God is not as manifestly present as is the spirit of the world; and the pride of intellect, position and human power has driven away the spirit and power of godliness. We need more live men in the pulpits, and who can and do speak out of an actual experience of the things of God. Just let the ministry get on fire of the Holy Ghost, and the churches will soon be ablaze with the fire of Heaven, burning up the dross within them and "spreading scriptural holiness over these lands." A great New York daily has lately said, in substance, that "wherever there is a pulpit on fire, there the people will go to see it burn." The fire of God in the hearts of consecrated men and women will burn its way to and into the masses. It is scarcely possible to improve on Alex Knox's definition of preaching—"A cordial communication of vitalized truth."

Churches lapse into the sleep of death under the formal, faultless—in a literary and doctrinal sense—and yet icily cold sermons that eminent divines statedly deliver for large salaries to the congregated fashion and folly of the times. Where is the witness of such a minister—a professional rather than a man called of God; and where of a church that pays so liberally for such purely intellectual feasts? Of course, brains and culture are not to be despised; but heart-power, and the Holy Ghost in it, are of the essence of all truly successful preaching. The man of God should go before his dying audience with a heart full of love for God and souls, and put his whole heart into his preaching. Thus, heart-full and heart in it, the truth he proclaims should come forth instinct with his very being's life, having been first vitalized in his own experience. Men somehow can not rid themselves of the idea that preaching is to be helpful; and if spiritual good is received by the hearer, it is because the truth, as a living experience, has come straight from the preacher's heart and been delivered in a thoroughly cordial and hearty manner. That master-hand in this blessed work, the world's Spurgeon, says: "We need ministers who live only for Christ and desire nothing but opportunities for promoting his glory, for spreading his truth, for winning by power those whom Jesus has redeemed by his precious blood. Men of one idea—these are they that shall do exploits in the camp of Israel. We need red-hot, white-hot men, who glow with intense heat; whom you can not approach without feeling that your heart is growing warmer; who burn their way in all positions straight on to the desired work; men, like thunderbolts flung from Jehovah's hand, crushing through every opposing thing till they have reached the target they have aimed at; men impelled by Omnipotence. It will be a great day for the church when the members of all our churches arrive at such a glorious state of heat as that. You may depend upon it, that enthusiasm is a liberal education for a Christian; I mean nothing makes a man so quick-sighted and intelligent in the service of God." Of the same mind was the heathen, who said: "Send us to preach to us men with hot hearts."

If, as God's ministers, we were not so very careful to be exactly proper, and to move, write and speak according to certain arbitrary rules, but would give ourselves more fully to the Spirit's power, to be used of him as he stirs up the fires of God within us, we would reach more souls. This thing of "the fire in the bones" is descriptive of the thoroughly alive preacher. I was once asked by a minister of another denomination to attend his church during the week, as he had a brother from England with him, and they proposed to have a revival. I was on hand on Monday night. The stranger from England announced that his church was peculiarly adapted to revivals because it was so constituted as to be able to control matters and to repress any extravagances into which these meetings sometimes run with others. I thought, "Well, if they have a real revival, it will be born of and managed by the Holy Ghost, and he is not controllable by the clergy." A revival means that the Holy Ghost is at work saving souls; and he always does that in his own way. To be a soul-winner, one must, preacher or layman, be on fire of the Holy Ghost, or, as the exhortation reads, "filled with the Holy Ghost." What a disgrace that any should ever doubt the earnestness and sincerity of a minister who has been set of God for that most important and serious of all work, the winning of deathless souls; and yet a boy said to his friend: "Now, do you mean that, or are you only preaching?" The man who does not impress his audience that he is intensely in earnest, meaning every word he utters, falls below the true standard, and becomes a lecturer, declaimer or mere pulpit orator. Needed—sorely needed—in New York, St. Louis, New Orleans and elsewhere and everywhere are men with religiously hot hearts, whose every sermon shall be a "cordial communication of vitalized truth."

"How shall we reach the masses?" That is the question we have been hearing for a very long time, year in and year out. It is very much a question of heat, of fire in the pulpit, be that pulpit in the church-house or on a gospel-wagon, in city or country; and we do believe that when once our ministers and people get "red-hot, white-hot" for God and souls, the masses will be reached and saved by the old, old gospel that has ever been "the power of God and the wisdom of God."

The College Question.

BY W. T. J. SULLIVAN, D. D.

What ought the Methodists in Mississippi to do for the education of the boys for whom they are responsible? Is their duty discharged when they pay the imposed tax for supporting the State system of schools? Is the church to provide for nothing more than the theological training of her ministry? No Christian can see with a true eye any distance into the nature and results of education without discerning the imperative need of Christian elements and influences through the whole course of scholastic life, from the primary school to the university fellowship. "Feed my lambs," is a command of Christ, which all his people must accept as given to them to be fulfilled in every pasture where these lambs may be nourished for the real work of life.

Let us look at some facts concerning the subject within the limits of Mississippi. There are 70,000 members of our church in this State. Multiply this by three, and we have 210,000, the constituency of Methodism in the State. Calculating from figures obtained from an official source, we have, of this constituency, 123,761 under twenty-one years of age, 35,043 of whom are under five years, leaving 88,718 of public school age. Let 40,000 of these be boys (which is ample allowance for an excess of girls)—40,000 boys of school age under the nurture of Methodism in Mississippi! What schools has she or can she have for their Christian nurture? What a call is here for a scheme of correlated schools—the primary, the preparatory and the college!

Most likely 25,000 of these boys, possibly more, must stop within the limits of the common schools of the State. It is entirely impracticable for the church to have, under the existing state of things, a system of primary schools. A reasonable estimate leaves us, at least, 10,000 on the way to whatever higher schools we may have for them. Allow that three-fifths of these are yet in primary classes, and that two-thirds of the remaining 4,000 are in preparatory classes, there are then 1,300 left for college. Say that three hundred of these will go to colleges in other States, and four hundred more to other colleges in Mississippi, there are yet six hundred to be provided for. Give two hundred of these to Centenary, and there are still four hundred for the college which we ought to have for Methodism in Mississippi—four hundred who could go into this college if we had it, and who will drift away and come to nothing for the lack of it! Besides, here are more than 2,000 boys who ought to be in our training-schools becoming practically educated. But where are the training-schools? Where is a single competent one under Methodist control in the State? If there were one such, thoroughly equipped, with one or two hundred boys, it would be a long stride forward and a great blessing. But why may not each Conference in the State have several good preparatory schools under thorough masters, with from forty to eighty boys? That sort of work will quickly bring its fruit in the growth of our spirit and power for good. Then a college for these prepared boys. This is a necessity. It is not a matter of rivalry with other schools; it is to give the bread of scholastic life to those who will perish if we fail to give.

The figures presented above may have to undergo some modifications, but they present a valid basis for a demand which we must answer or suffer most serious consequences from our neglect. Let us emphasize the need of preparatory schools; there is equal need of the college. State lines have a power which can not be ignored in the operations of the Church. Centenary College commands a range of territory to the south and west of her; allow that she includes all South Mississippi. What, then, is North Mississippi to do? She must simply put her hands to the plow in the field God has given her, and not look back. I join Bro. Wyatt in his earnest cry. This cry is not a voice against any other school, but a recognition of what we must do while we rejoice in the great and good work done by the others. Each one is a factor in our connectional Methodism, and all members one of another—of one body. Let Centenary move rapidly to the aim of her able, energetic president. Let her constituents respond with hearty liberality to his call for $250,000 endowment. That is the right figure. Let doubt and hesitation be discarded, and the opportunity seized with resolute vigor to raise that sum. That ought to be done. It can be; will it be? Say it shall; and let us in North, if not in all, Mississippi move with equal resolution to cultivate the field waiting for our hand. We can have the schools if we will—the preparatories and the college. We have all the material; have we the eyes to see and wills to resolve

Notes.

A writer in Zion's Herald, speaking of preachers and people, makes this significant remark: "The little, crooked, near-sighted Paul could not get a first-class pulpit in New York, if put in competition with a tall, broad-chested, heavy-toned Boanerges."

Editors toiling through the Sahara of newspaperdom sometimes come unexpectedly, upon an oasis of refreshment. Witness the following from one of our most valued contributors:

I am greatly indebted to you for not publishing my comments upon ——. I was afraid they were too sharp: but my great-grandmother was of Irish extraction, and I labor under the transmitted tendencies of my maternal relatives. The spirit of Donnybrook gets the better of me sometimes, and I can't help letting fly when a good mark presents itself. I imagine it would be right hard to run even a church paper without an editor.

Science now-a days proposes to do almost everything. The following is the scientific recipe for improving the "grade of thought." We commend it to the preachers:

In order to improve the grade of thought, improve the quality and quantity of the food; increase the supply of oxygen by healthy residence; let the habitual muscular exertion be such as to strengthen and not impair the functions; abate as much as possible all excesses and irregularities, bodily and mental; add the enormous economy of an educated disposal of the forces, and you will develop a greater aggregate of power.

If this is true, we see how that the steward may be responsible for a poor sermon. If good preaching depends upon good thinking, and that depends upon "the quality and quantity of food," then the man who supplies the money for the food may take the credit for the poor sermons. The stewards who are complaining of the poor preaching of their pastor, may be really exhibiting their own remissness. Science says, If you feed your preacher well, he will give you good preaching. If you stint him, it will react on you in limiting your supply of spiritual food. If you don't feed your horse well, you can't expect him to give you full work. Treat your preacher, at least, as well as you treat your horse.

The Methodist Times, referring to the work of the recent Wesleyan Conference, has this paragraph. The addition to the old saying of Jabez Bunting is new to us, but it strikes us with mighty power:

This Conference will be memorable as one in which the pastoral session dealt as faithfully and thoroughly with ministerial incompetence as it has always dealt with ministerial immorality. An ancient and severe, but necessary custom was revived. Henceforth the Stationing Committee will report to the Conference the names of all ministers whose general incompetence or indolence has rendered it probable that their appointment to any circuit would be an injury to the work of God. In some of these cases the incompetence may be a physical misfortune, and not a moral fault. Nevertheless, it is now frankly admitted that the claims of the circuits must prevail over every personal consideration. The late Mr. Bunting once said that God buried the workmen and carried on the work, but that the Conference buried the work and carried on the workmen. That epigram was doubtless extorted from its witty author by some irritating instance of ministerial incompetence; but no session of the Conference ever deserved it less than the pastoral session just closed. There never was a time in the modern history of our church when the ministers, as a whole, were so devoted and so enthusiastic, or when they were so ready to declare that Methodism does not exist for the sake of the ministers, but the ministers for the sake of Methodism. The new spiritual movement has already exhibited many encouraging features, but not one of them is more promising than the steady rising of the standard of ministerial qualification, both intellectual and moral. It is unjust and misleading to say that the new difficulty in the Stationing Committee is due to the unkind refusal of circuits to accept senior ministers. Of course, the growing competition of the churches, and the demands for aggressive work, compel circuits to ask for superintendents with the necessary physical vigor. But the real difficulty is with respect to men who have grown indolent, or who are obstinately intolerant of modern methods. The mellow wisdom of genial old men is as highly prized as ever.

Personals.

Bishop Galloway dedicated four new churches while he was in Montana.

At the late session of the Montana Conference that veteran, Rev. L. B. Stateler, and his wife contributed $1,000 to the fund for the superannuates, widows and orphans.

A brother ends a letter to this office in this way: "I am a sanctified Methodist exhorter, from head to foot, from center to circumference, through and through, up and down, round and round, all over and all about." We should say that was pretty thorough work!

Rev. I. W. Cooper will preach the funeral sermon in memory of Rev. J. A. Newsom, on September 30, at Center Church, St. Helena circuit.

A Mrs. Beasley, of Philadelphia, has invented a machine for making barrels, which, worked by six men, will turn out as many barrels in a day as sixty men could turn out by the old process, and at one-quarter of the cost.

From the Alabama Advocate we learn that Dr. F. M. Grace, formerly president of Mansfield Female College, La., will transfer to the North Alabama Conference and enter again the itinerant ranks.

Robert R. Doherty, Ph. D., retires from the assistant editorship of the New York Christian Advocate, September 20, and Lucien Clark, D. D., of Erie, Penn., takes his place.

Dr. G. T. Dowling, of Cleveland, O., the Baptist pastor who recently advocated and practiced open communion, finding that the general consensus of his church is against him, has withdrawn from the Baptist Church.

Two bachelor brothers near Plainfield, N. J., recently deceased, bequeathed to the Scotch Plains Baptist Church property amounting in value to $250,000.

The Grand Lodge of Masons of Iowa has adopted the rule, that "the sale of intoxicating liquors is an intentional violation of the laws of Iowa, and the penalty of conviction, therefore, shall be expulsion." That's good.

We are indebted to W. P. Chandler for a pamphlet entitled: "Union Parish, La.: Its Agricultural and other Resources." It treats of the climate, health, water, soil, products, value of lands, stock raising, railroads, churches and schools, and other matters, and shows that Union parish must be a desirable place to which to emigrate.

We publish this week two articles, from the Nashville Christian Advocate, on "Ministerial Education," by "Onesiphorus," which we commend to all our readers. They will be followed by others from the same source.

The Columbia Conference was held last month by Bishop Galloway. The work of God seems to be advancing among our brethren in the far Northwest. The Conference reported 1,662 members of our church, and 37 local preachers. Twenty-five preachers were stationed.

The Supreme Court of Washington Territory has declared the Woman Suffrage Law unconstitutional it says the word, "citizen," means male citizen.

Bishop Key has changed the time of the meeting of the Arkansas Conference from October 31 to November 28.

Dr. J. D. Barbee has our deepest sympathy in the loss of a lovely daughter, recently deceased.

Literary Notes.

Sampson Low, a London publisher, announces that Dr. Mackenzie's answer to the German doctors will appear in both German and English in a few weeks.

The last of the "Authors Series," in The Critic, is a personal and biographical account of Richard Henry Stoddard, written by Joseph B. Gilder, one of the editors of the paper.

The diary of the late Emperor Frederick, which he left to his wife as her private property, is again in her possession. She has given some volumes of notes on purely military subjects to the State archives.

Chas. L. Webster & Co. say that Sheridan's Memoirs are now being sold through subscription canvassing agents, who exhibit selections from them by means of a prospectus, but the actual date of publication is fixed for December 1. But parties are offering to the public as the work of General Sheridan spurious books, cheaply prepared, and of no value, thus injuring the sale of the genuine memoirs.

Andrew Lang devotes four hours a day to "pure literature." He writes six articles a week for the Daily News, of London, four for the Saturday Review, and two humorous sketches for the St. James Gazette, besides contributing to a number of magazines. His work on the three journals mentioned brings him in $15,000 yearly.

What is announced as an "esoteric" series—a collection of reprints of old books dealing with astrology, alchemy, Free Masonry, magic, and Rosicrucian mysticism—is coming out in London. Redway is the publisher.

"Newspaper Libel" has just been published by Ticknor & Co., Boston. It is a practical treatise designed for popular use and the use of the newspaper profession. The author is Samuel Merrill, a newspaper man as well as a lawyer.

The relative popularity of some recent stories appears to be, from Cassell & Co.'s sales: "King Solomon's Mines," sixty-three thousand; "Treasure Island," twenty-four thousand; "Kidnapped," twenty-one thousand, and "Dead Man's Rock," seven thousand.

A literary executor is a trustee almost outside the control of any court except that of public opinion. His discretion is the widest, and he can scarcely commit a breach of trust. Talleyrand's executors still hold his manuscripts unpublished. They have remained shut up for fifty years. The prince himself directed that they should not go to the printers before thirty years after his death, and he died in May, 1838. When the thirty years were passed the world expected a revelation, but Napoleon the Third interfered. Two results, it was said, followed. One of the Talleyrand family got the title of Duc de Montmorency, and the gratification of the public curiosity was deferred for a decade. That was in 1868. In 1878 there were no signs of literary activity, but it is hoped that now, at last, the memoirs will be made public. In truth, in the lapse of time the reputation of the great diplomatist has gained rather than lost. Mme. de Stael and George Sand had both attacked him bitterly, but the appearance of a recent volume of his letters has shown him in a more amiable light. Till these memoirs are published—and it is hoped they will be published soon—the true history of the great Napoleon remains incomplete.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. A. T. Galloway, writing from Bellevue, La., August 24, says: "We have had recently twelve conversions, and fourteen accessions. As many as twelve others professed to believe in Christ for pardon and are determined to continue seeking until the witness is clear. One professed entire sanctification, and there is a general awakening on the subject. Ten new family altars have been erected."

—Bro. H. M. Nixon, Garfield, La., August 25, reports Bro. J. S. Sanders on the Mooringsport circuit, as having held a meeting near Frog-level, in which fifty-two persons were converted. Fifty-seven professed entire sanctification, and thirty-six joined the Methodist Church.

—Rev. J. E. Buck, writes, August 23: "As pastor of the Plattsburg circuit, North Mississippi Conference, I feel encouraged. Four protracted meetings held with an increase of fifteen members, all of whom, with two exceptions, were converted this season."

—Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, presiding elder of the Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, August 23: "The preachers of the district are going forward successfully in their work. We are hoping that we will close up well, though our Conference meets several weeks earlier than usual."

—Dr. White, from Homer, La., writes: "Having glorious revivals. Health pretty good. I praise God and move on."

—J. R. Roberson, of the Houston and Wesley circuit, North Mississippi, says: "I began my meeting at Honkey on the third Sunday in August, and continued until the fourth Sunday night, and the result was, fifty-five conversions and twenty-four accessions. Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists worked in harmony and 'the word was with power.'"

—W. S. Lagrone, writing from Valden, Miss., September 1, says: "I have just closed a meeting at Columbia, resulting in thirty conversions and thirty-two accessions to the church. A good meeting is in progress at Wesley Chapel on Zilphia circuit; eleven accessions."

—W. J. Porter, writes of Douglass circuit, Louisiana Conference: "Our meeting at Antioch continued seven days. We had twenty conversions and seventeen applicants for membership, and many pledged themselves to erect family altars."

—C. C. Campbell, from Paulding circuit, Mississippi Conference, writing August 31, says: "Last Friday we closed the third protracted meeting for this season. The membership has been greatly revived. Many family altars have been erected. There have been eighteen accessions to the church, and fifty conversions."

Notice.

By order of the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference, at its last session in Jackson, Miss., I am directed to call for the annual installment from every member of this association, to be paid by October 1, instead of at the Conference session, as heretofore. Two reasons induce this change: One is to secure uniformity in the annual collection, and the other is, to secure funds to meet the bills that fall due October 1. College opens in a few days, and we have four beneficiaries to provide for this session; therefore, brethren, let me urge you to remit promptly your dues to

BOOKS.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS AT HOME. Ill. Boston: D. Lothrop Co. Price $1.

In turning over the pages of this handsome illustrated quarto the reader instinctively wonders how so much valuable matter can be afforded for so little money. It is not a book simply to amuse or entertain the reader until it is finished, then to be cast aside and forgotten. It is full of purpose, and the boys or girls who give it a thoughtful reading will be much the wiser for it, and not only be better able to understand the world about them, but will be aided thereby to make their way successfully through it.

STUDIES IN CRITICISM. By Florence Trail. Worthington Co., New York. 1 vol. 12mo. 375pp., $1 50.

There are seven essays entitled, Pools Flied with Water, Glimpses into French Literature Genius and Religion, Genius and Morality, History in Literature, Skepticism of the Heart, the Decline in Art. It is a very remarkable book written by a new writer of great power. It makes enjoyable reading by its clearly defined ideas, the originality revealed in the unexpected relationship of certain ideas; the daring yet dogmatic expression of opinion, the vivid impression produced by an extraordinary command of the English language, and, above all, the author's inexhaustible enthusiasm and delight in study. It will afford a mental stimulus of lasting power and value, and is a noble vindication of the claims of philosophy in a liberal education.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Our Young People.

THE LITTLE PANTHEIST.

"And can you tell how good God is,
How large and strong and wise?"
The preacher kissed the earnest mouth
And sweet, untroubled eyes:

"Dear little girl, no one can know;
We only see a part.
God's greatness is in everything;
His love is in your heart.

"The sea and mountains speak to us
Of mighty strength and power;
We find God in the woods and brooks,
And in the tiniest flower.

"All things true, good, and beautiful,
Are parts which we may see,
With childish human hearts and eyes,
Of God's infinity."

Before the day had passed away,
There came a man whose face—
A benediction in itself—
Smiled at the child's fair grace.

"I'll go and tell papa you're here,"
The little maiden said
As lightly she ran up the stairs
Which to the study led.

And lest papa should fail to know
His entire unawares,
She softly whispered in his ear
"The whole of God's down stairs!"

—Babyhood.

Worth Describing.

BY "AUNT LORETTA."

Dear Girls and Boys: Did you ever try to write a discription of something you saw or heard that was a little uncommon? It is a very good way to exercise the mind, and then to read your own description of any thing or event would be very pleasing, if not edifying. Robert Louis Stevenson, who is the author of a great many very charming books, said when he was a boy and youth he was always trying to write a description of something, and that he always had two books in his pockets one to read, the other to write in. His thoughts went down on paper as fast as they came. He would note down the features of the scene before him or some halting stanza, and then study his own words. He said, "To anyone with sense there is always something worth describing." I could tell all of you boys and girls ever so much that would please you about this boy, but you will have to read and find out for yourselves. I can only say that he was called "an idler," but it was only because those who had the care and education of him did not understand him. He was never idle. He loved words, "lived with words." Engineering, law and theology had no charms for him. Parents may note this, with good effect. But, oh! me, if I go on about this boy, who is now a great man, I will never come to something I saw that was "worth describing."

The other day my attention was called by my daughter, to see an insect she had discovered in the act of eating a fly. It was what is commonly called the "devil's horse." Why this name I know not, unless it is because of its unsightliness. It had come in the window that was open and caught a fly. This it was holding like a monkey does a kitten, with its forearms. Upon being disturbed, it ran to the window-sill, holding on to the fly, then up on the facing turned slowly around, then with its head downward began its repast again. Holding the fly to its mouth like a squirrel does a nut, it began on the eyes of the fly, nibbling one out, holding it with one hand or claw. It ate all but the husk of the eye; dropped that, seized the other, ate that, then went on biting until it came to the legs; these were disposed of in the same manner, dropping only the foot or first joint of the leg. All the time it was working its curious square-shaped head from side to side, and once when a fly lit on its back it held its prey in one claw, and with the other reached as in the act of catching the other fly, but did not. It seemed to enjoy its repast with as much gusto as you little folks do the good things at a picnic. When it reached the body of the fly it nibbled around in a circle, then sucked the substance, and no motion I made could disturb it. I left it and went out and caught another fly; but it escaped, so I went back to watch my charmer. It was just finishing its supper when I was called away, and when I looked again it was gone. I had always, until very recently, had a dread of this particular insect because it had such a repulsive appearance, and hearing that its sting was very poisonous. But, learning that it was one of the most harmless and inoffensive of insects, I had not felt such a repugnance as formerly; so watched this one eating its supper with much enjoyment. The insect was one of the brown species, and must have been young from its size, as I have often seen much larger ones. I was sorry I did not put it in a box and feed it with flies to learn something more of its habits.

The Holy Book says that nothing was made in vain. It is hard to believe that all the ugly, troublesome, poisonous insects, bugs and reptiles have a mission to fulfill, but such is the case. God made them for a purpose. Some, perhaps, to try the patience of people: It is right to destroy those that are harmful, but a love that some have of destroying, just for the fun of the thing, every small living creature that God has given life to, is not manly or noble; better study their curious habits and learn some lessons in natural philosophy. Boys kill toads just for fun, when it is proven that they do a vast amount of good by preying on the harmful insects. Shakespeare says though the toad is "ugly and venomous," "it hath yet a precious jewel in its head." What is the toad's jewel?

MR. EDITOR: Here comes two little girls to join the young folks' column. We thought we would write and tell you about our Sunday-school. It is a little school-house named Mt. Carmel. We commenced our Sunday-school with only six scholars, and now we have thirty-seven on roll. Mr. W. P. Darnell is our superintendent, and we all love him very much. He has not been to Sunday-school for two or three Sundays, on account of his having a cancer cut off his neck. Dr. Fairly, of Brandon, cut it off. But he is improving very fast, and that he may soon be well is the prayers of the Mt. Carmel Sunday-school. During our superintendent's absence, Mr. Jim Williams and Mr. John Kersh superintended for us very nicely. We fear our Sunday-school will soon have to suspend for the winter. Won't some of the cousins write and tell us about their Sunday-schools? With many good wishes to you and the ADVOCATE, we are, Your true friends,

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to write a few lines in your valuable paper. Papa takes your paper, and I like to read it very much, especially the little cousins' page. I am a little boy nearly ten years old. I did not go to school to-day. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is the word "dove" found? I hope my letter will not reach the waste-basket. I remain,

THE TEACHER OUTWITTED.—A teacher in one of the public schools at the South End has recently been much annoyed by the persistency with which one of her scholars plays truant. She was on the point of reporting his case to the truant officer when she spoke of the matter to one of the woman supervisors. This woman believes in kindness rather than harsher measures, and told the teacher to send the offender to her house the next time he was troublesome. So one afternoon there appeared at the supervisor's home a boy. The supervisor was all smiles and attention. She treated him royally to a choice spread, a feast the like of which he probably never had enjoyed before. He was soon made to feel perfectly at home. Now, thought his benefactress, is the time to preach him my little sermon. So she unfolded to him the evils of truancy and besought him to be a model boy in the future. Imagine her surprise when he said to her: "I ain't the boy that runs away from school, marm! He gave me a cent to come here for him."—Boston Times.

Household.

FOR LOVE'S SAKE.

Sometimes I am tempted to murmur
That life is flitting away,
With only a round of trifles
Filling each busy day:
Dusting nooks and corners,
Making the home look fair,
And patiently taking on me
The burden of woman's care.

Comforting childish sorrows,
And charming the childish heart
With the simple song and story,
Told with a mother's art;
Setting the dear home table
And clearing the meal away,
And going on little errands
In the twilight of the day.

One day is just like another!
Sewing and piecing well
Little jackets and trousers
So neatly that none can tell
Where are the seams and joinings—
Ah! the seamy side of life
Is kept out of sight by the magic
Of many a mother and wife!

And oft when I'm ready to murmur
That life is flitting away,
With the self-same round of duties
Filling each busy day,
It comes to my spirit sweetly,
With the grace of a thought divine:
"You are living, toiling for love's sake
And the loving should never repine.

"You are guiding the little footsteps
In the way they ought to walk;
You are dropping a word for Jesus
In the midst of your household talk,
Living your life for love's sake
Till the homely cares grow sweet—
And sacred the self-denial
That is laid at the Master's feet."

Hints on Ventilators.

In ventilating—say a bed-room—by means of the window, what you principally want is an upward blowing current. Well, there are several methods of securing this without danger of a draught:

1. Holes may be bored in the lower part of the upper sash of the window, admitting the outside air.

2. Right across one foot of the lower sash, but attached to the immovable frame of the window, may be hung or tacked a piece of strong Willesden paper—prettily painted with flowers and birds if you please. The window may then be raised to the extent of the breadth of this paper, and the air rushes upwards between the two sashes.

3. The same effect is got from simply having a board about six inches wide, and the exact size of the sash's breadth. Use this to hold the window up.

4. This same board may have two bent or elbow tubes in it, opening upwards and into the room, so that the air coming through does not blow directly in. The inside openings may be protected by valves, and thus the amount of incoming current can be regulated. We thus get a circulating movement of the air, as, the window being raised, here is an opening between the sashes.

5. In summer a frame half as big as the lower sash may be made of perforated zinc or wire gauze and placed in so as to keep the window up. There is no draught; and if kept in position all night, then, as a rule, the inmate will enjoy refreshing sleep.

6. In addition to these plans, the door of every bed-room should possess at the top thereof a ventilating panel, the simplest of all being that formed of wire gauze.

In conclusion, let me again beg of you to value fresh air as you value life and health itself; and, while taking care not to sleep directly in an appreciable draught, to abjure curtains all round the bed. A curtained bed is only a stable for nightmares and a hotel for a hundred wandering ills and ailments.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

THE RIGHT KIND OF GIRL.—A pretty, talented girl, who has just completed her school-course with credit, and by reason of rather special talents, has received more attention and admiration than falls to the lot of most girls, was asked the other day how she was enjoying her vacation. "Oh, I'm enjoying it very much," she answered brightly. "I'm doing the housework now and letting mother have a little rest." "Your mother is away on a vacation, then?" was the natural question. "Oh, no, she's at home, but I'm giving her a chance to rest in the morning and to dress up and sit on the piazza when she feels like it. I think it will do her good to have a little change."—Springfield Homestead.

KING—On Saturday night, May 12, we were summoned to the bedside of Bro. WILLIAM H. KING. When we reached him this passage of Scripture came forcibly to our minds: "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." He had eaten a hearty supper and was feeling as well as usual. About midnight he had a paralytic stroke which proved fatal. He was unconscious and unable to speak after he was first attacked.

Bro. King was born in Cold Springs neighborhood, Wilkinson county, Miss., May 7, 1839, and died in Mars Hill neighborhood, Wilkinson county, Miss., May 15, 1888. He joined the Methodist Church at Cold Springs some twenty years ago. About two months before his death he identified himself with the Methodist Church at Mars Hill. He was a quiet, unassuming man. His statement to his family was very strong. He was a kind husband and affectionate father. He was honest and conscientious in all his dealings. His three sisters and one brother that he leaves behind are all members of the Methodist Church. His parents were both zealous members of the Methodist Church. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his loss. How mysterious are the ways of Providence. "His ways are not as our ways." May the Spirit of God prove indeed a comforter to them in this, their darkest of all hours! May they indeed realize that God is "a husband to the widow, and a father to the orphan!"

MCQUAIG—Miss JINNIE MCQUAIG, daughter of A. C. and Flora McQuaig, departed this life in great peace at her father's home, in Wayne county, Miss., June 30, 1888. She was born in San Jacinto county, Texas, February 10, 1861. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, August, 1886. For the last year she was a great sufferer, yet she bore her sufferings with that patience and fortitude which are the characteristics of a true Christian. Jinnie was a kind and devoted daughter, a loving sister and a devout Christian. She was a general favorite, not only of the family, but of the whole community in which she lived. Our loss is her gain. While we bow in sadness, we feel assured that the soul of our dear sister is in the realms of eternal bliss, feasting upon the heavenly joys which God has prepared for them that love him and do his will. PICKETT—Sister MOSURE PICKETT departed this life at her residence, near Sulphur Springs, Miss., August 8, 1888, after an illness of six weeks, which she bore with Christian patience. Sister Pickett was born in Louisiana, November 12, 1822; professed religion in 1854, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and remained a true member until she fell asleep in Jesus. She was the wife of Bro. B. F. Pickett. To them were born thirteen children—ten sons and three daughters—of which only six still live to mourn the loss of a true and affectionate mother. Sister Pickett was a dutiful wife and a devoted mother. May her children live so as they may say as their loving mother said: "I am willing to go to God who gave me breath to praise his holy name." I am a sister to the deceased, and I will say I never knew Sister Mosure to go against the rules of her church. A SISTER.

BURKHEAD—Prof. BURKHEAD, a well-known citizen and much-esteemed educator, died at his home, near Benton, Yazoo county, Miss., August 1, 1888. He was born in Randolph county, N. C., May 13, 1821; became a member of the Methodist Church early in life; continued as such for some length of time. But forfeiting his membership, he never joined again until a short time before his death. His belief in the Christian religion can be best expressed in his own words below. During his sickness, and at his own request, Bros. Holt, Lankford and Smith held a prayer meeting in his room—at the close of which he said: "I am one of you forever;" and in response to Scripture, he said, "I give up all, all, all." A preacher was called, and received him into the Methodist Church, from which he went to his eternal reward. H. L. SCARBOROUGH.

STROTHER—The following resolutions were adopted by The Bay Sunday-school Union, The Bay, La:

The Committee on Memorial of our deceased classmate, CAROLINE STROTHER, who departed this life on August 16, beg leave to report as follows:

Whereas, It has pleased the Great Giver of light and life to remove from our midst our beloved little sister and classmate by calling her to himself, we tender to the bereaved father, mother, brother and sister our most sincere condolence, commending them to the tenderest mercies of him who has said, "I'll never forsake."

Resolved, That while she will be sadly missed in her class, we realize that while we have less earth for which to live, more heaven have we for which to strive.

Resolved, That this memorial be placed on the minutes of the Sunday-school, and that the secretary be requested to forward copies of the same for publication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, The Baptist Chronicle, The Lake Charles Echo and the Alexandria Town Talk.

MAY LYLES, for Com.

JONES—MARGARET JONES, daughter of Randall and Catharine McDonald, was born in Marion district, S. C., January 16, 1808. She gave her hand in wedlock to Rev. Samuel Jones, January 23, 1827. During the same year she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. She moved, with her husband, to Wayne county, Miss., in 1836, where she lived a consistent Christian life, and died a most triumphant death, July 20, 1888, after an illness of twenty-three days. Sister Jones was the mother of six children, four of whom preceded her to the other shore. She said but little about her hopes beyond. Nothing was necessary; her life was sufficient. She died as she had lived—in great peace. "Aunt Peggy," as she was familiarly called, was indeed a kind neighbor, carrying out the injunction, "Live peaceably with all men." She, more than once, acted the part of a peacemaker between neighbors. She was a generous, warm-hearted friend, and a most worthy member of society. As a wife, she was loving and faithful; as a mother, gentle, patient and forbearing. She leaves a husband, two children and a host of grandchildren to mourn their loss.

The Bible Its Own Witness.

The Christian at Work gives an interesting illustration of the truth that the Bible is its own best witness and its own best defense, and that it would be secure against attack if men would but study and practice its teaching:

The Bible itself is its own best defender—provided you can get people to study it and attempt a practical trial of its heaven-born precepts. A thrilling illustration of this was afforded to Dr. Henry Martyn Scudder when he was laboring as a missionary in India. He found on one of his tours within the heart of heathenism a considerable society of believers who were Christians without knowing it, and who had been born again under the regenerative touch of the divine Spirit without any conscious knowledge of the personality and peculiar agency of the Spirit. This remarkable and unique society had been self-evolved, or, rather, let us say, created by God himself in the following way: A stray leaflet containing a portion of the Bible—the Ten Commandments, and some other texts had fallen by accident—here again we must correct ourselves and say, by providential direction, though to man it seemed by accident—into the hands of a Brahmin. His eye was arrested a moment, then his soul became interested. "How strange, how noble, how pure and exalted," he said to himself, "are these words! They must have come out from God. Surely they are the voice of God. It would be a grand thing to put such precepts into practice. If men could only be induced to regulate their thoughts and conduct by them, how honest, true, kind, benevolent; in short, what new and happy beings they would become!" And the more his mind ran on in this vein, the more he determined to organize a little society around these stray words of the living God. With this purpose in view, he showed them to others. They were startled into admiration and hope. They all joined hands and agreed to begin a new life according to what they had faith to accept as a kind of mysterious call from Heaven. When Dr. Scudder came a year or so later and preached the gospel in the streets of the town where these disciples lived, they were overjoyed as they were also amazed to discover in him and his message a representative of the new and higher God whom they had already found. Gathering around him, they hailed him as their teacher, evidently sent from above, told him their experiences, and were ready to receive baptism in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, whom they had really been worshiping under another name. Like the Athenians with their altar inscribed to the "Unknown God," they now heard Dr. Scudder saying, as Paul did to the Athenians, "Whom ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

The highest form of Christian life is self-denial for the good of others.

Oil on Troubled Seas.

INSTANCES OF THE WONDERFUL WAY IN WHICH IT DEMOLISHES A WAVE.

The pilot reports of the North Atlantic Ocean, for June, contained an unusual amount of interesting matter for the navigator and the student of the phenomena of the sea. Of the successful use of oil, the report gives three examples. Captain Sullivan, of the New York pilot-boat "Caprice," says that off Sandy Hook, the night of June 11, his vessel was boarded by combing seas, which threw her on her beam ends. He broke out oil-bags, stuffed them with oakum, rags and anything he could lay his hands on, poured in a mixture of one gallon lard oil, one gallon paint oil and three gallons petroleum (all he had on board) and punched them with a brad-awl. One of these he hung over the weather bow and the other over the side abreast the weather main rigging, so as to just clear the water when on an even keel. He also rigged out two drags over the weather bow, each composed of fifteen fathoms of chain on five fenders, held by seventy-five fathoms of hawser. After the oil was used, no more water came on board, although before using it the sea was making a clean breach over the vessel. A breaking wave would rush towards her, meet the oil slick, the crest would quiet down and the wave roll harmlessly past. He used the oil for thirty-six hours, and it saved his vessel.

Pilot Partridge, of the pilot-boat "Charles H. Marshall," was struck by the storm at half-past ten P. M. on June 11, ten miles east of Sandy Hook, wind W. N. W. Used three oil-bags, and except for them thinks the vessel would have gone down.

The eighty-eight-ton steel schooner yacht "Iroquois," owned by Mr. T. Jefferson Coolidge, of Boston, passed Sandy Hook at three P. M., March 10, bound south. The night of the eleventh she encountered the storm in all its fury east of Cape Henlopen. Her captain made three bags of No. 5 cotton, large enough to hold about two gallons apiece. Put two quarts in each and hung them over the weather bow, but the oil congealed and would not run out through the holes he had made with a sail-needle. Then tried the oil through the pipes of the closet in the forecastle, near the bow, putting a few tablespoonfuls in the bowl and then pumping it out. It was truly wonderful to see the effect it had on the sea. A huge comber would come down upon the vessel, threatening to bury her twenty feet deep. The comb would strike a patch of oil no larger than a common dining-table, and in an instant the top of the sea was smooth and round without even a wind ripple, and the little schooner would pop up on top of it as easy as a gull. The oil used in this case was a kind known as mineral sperm, a soft, greasy oil, which he thinks is the best. Used fifteen gallons of oil in thirty-six hours. Captain Norton has followed the sea for the past thirty years, seventeen of them as master, but never experienced a worse gale than this.—Boston Herald.

WHAT IS DYNAMITE?—This has become an article of such common and deadly use, especially in Europe, that many are asking for information in regard to it.

Nitro-glycerine is produced by the action of a mixture of strong nitric and sulphuric acids upon glycerine. By a blow or violent jar it explodes with tremendous force. Pound for pound, it will produce three or four times the effect of gunpowder. It is extremely poisonous and exceedingly dangerous to handle except when frozen.

Dynamite, sometimes called "giant powder," consists of nitro-glycerine absorbed by some porous solid. The best material is a kind of earth found in Hanover. It will absorb three times its weight of nitro-glycerine. Made from this earth, dynamite has the appearance and consistency of heavy brown sugar. It may be compressed into a solid so that four or five pounds of it—a tremendous force when exploded—can be carried about one's person without attracting notice. It will not explode spontaneously, and will stand much more of a shock than pure nitro-glycerine.

A Preacher's Question and His Parishioner's Reply.

A preacher who was about to leave his appointment at the close of his term once asked an intelligent gentleman who had sat under his ministrations in what his preaching was lacking. "Why is it," said he, "that so few of my hearers are won to the cross? Why is it that the church is so slightly quickened under my preaching? To sum up my inquiry, why in your opinion is my pulpit work no more fruitful?"

The substance of his friend's reply was expressed in its final sentence, to wit: "You are not self-magnetized by the truths you preach. Your words do not fuse your own feelings, therefore they do not awaken thought, kindle feeling and beget purpose in your hearers."

The pertinency of this plain response, if not the fitness of its terms, appears in the fact that the inquiring preacher, though a devout, spiritual man whose sermons were thoughtful, carefully studied, finely illustrated and earnestly enforced with faithful exhortation, was nevertheless cold in manner. He was earnest, but not warm; clear, but not tender; intellectually forceful, but not emotional. His words were not sparks from a hidden fire, but rays of light emanating from an atmosphere which, though not polar, was yet uncomfortably cool. No one, perhaps, questioned the sincerity of his utterances, yet it was obvious to all observers that they did not unseal the fountains of feeling in his own soul. As his parishioner, cited above, frankly told him, he was not "self-magnetized" by the truths he preached. Instead of losing himself in his theme, and being absorbed in his thoughts, his mind was directed to the form and language of his discourse, to the aspect of his congregation, and to the probable effect of his words on a certain class of his hearers. As a necessary consequence, his people listened with a coldness analogous to his own, since it rarely happens that the emotion of an audience rises above the level of feeling in the preacher. If, however, that same man had gone to his pulpit with the thoughts of his sermon held so close to his own heart as to swell it with feeling, his well-chosen words would have fallen with power on his listeners and moved them, as when the sounds of an aolian lyre swept by a gentle breeze falls on an enraptured ear. Then, instead of listening with a merely critical attention which was inconsequential, they would have been stirred and thrilled in every chord of feeling as by the touch of the Spirit of God.—Northern Christian Advocate.

"There is a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough hew them as we may."

No close observer of human affairs can gainsay the poet as above quoted. The close observer aforesaid must have noted, however, that there are many persons who seem to think that their ends will be shaped without any "rough hewing" on their part. How much nobler is it for young men to strike boldly out to build well their own characters under God's guidance. To all who aspire to do a good work and do it well, we say write to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va., who will give you helpful suggestions.

DECRYING DOCTRINE.—The decrying of dogma in the interest of life, of creed in the interest of conduct, is very natural, but very superficial. It is superficial, because, if it succeeded, it would make life and conduct blind and weak. But it is natural, because it is the crude, healthy outburst of human protest against the value of dogma for its own sake, of which the church has always been too full. Let us not join in it. Let us insist that it is good for a man to know everything he can know, and believe everything he can believe, of the truth of God. But while we will not pull down dogma, let us do all we can to build up life about dogma, and demand of dogma that service which it is the real joy of her heart to render to life. I will not hear men claim that the doctrine of the Trinity has no help or inspiration to give to the merchant or the statesman. It has great help, great inspiration. I will not hear men claim that it means nothing to the scholar or the bricklayer whether he believes in the atonement. It means very much to either.

General Secretary Litchman, of the Knights of Labor, who recently tendered his services to the Republican National Committee, has resigned his office.

The Tariff Bill, which is being prepared by the sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Finance, will be reported about September 15.

A water spout burst, on the first instant, along the line of the Cincinnati and Southern railway, between Flemingsburg, Ky., and Hillsboro, washing out trestling, bridges and fills, causing the discontinuance of trains and doing great damage to fencing.

A majority of the glass bottle houses throughout the country resumed September 1, after an eight weeks' shut down. Employment will be given to 2,500 men directly, and indirectly 4,700. The wage scale was settled at a conference in Pittsburg, July 26, at which slight advances were conceded the workmen.

A terrific fire broke out in Baltimore, on September 2, and destroyed a row of buildings in the business portion of the city. Seven firemen were imprisoned in the debris and roasted to death. The total loss is estimated at $1,500,000.

The general committe of the national encampment of the Grand Army, which opens in Columbus, O., September 11, announces everything in readiness for the accommodation of the masses.

A battle was fought in No Man's Land last week between eighteen horse thieves and a force of fifty settlers, and all the outlaws were killed, together with three of the vigilantes.

Semi-official advices from St. Petersburg express the belief that the imperial meeting will have little effect in changing the relations between Russia and Germany. The Russian government is said to be bitterly disappointed with Germany's attitude on the Bulgarian question. Russia wanted Germany's assistance to remove Prince Ferdinand.

A dispatch from Auckland says that an earthquake has done serious damage in New Zealand. Five shocks were felt during half an hour. The spire of the cathedral in the town of Christ Church was destroyed and many other buildings were damaged.

State and Church Schools.

BY "BARNABAS."

There is general agreement as to the fact that the church needs system in her educational work. The recognition of this need is a good first step towards supplying it. The proposed Nashville conference of educators indicated that many of our leading college men were prepared to take the initiative in the matter, and the indefinite postponement of the conference quite as plainly showed that the church at large is not yet ready for a movement that may be so far-reaching in its consequences.

The fact is, that our people are not generally well-informed as to the church's work in education. So long as they regard the Church and the State as competitors on equal terms for their patronage, it is not strange that they should often give preference to the State.

Among the reasons given for this preference, the following will most frequently be met:

1. State schools are already endowed. Having larger means, they can offer superior facilities in respect of buildings, apparatus, etc.

2. Tuition is free, and the expense of education, therefore, is less in a State than in a church school.

3. The higher salaries which the State pays must necessarily command a higher order of ability in her faculties of instruction.

4. A young man graduated at a State school begins life with a larger acquaintance among those who are in future to guide the destinies of the State and the nation—an acquaintance that is not limited to his classmates or contemporaries in college, but which may be easily extended to a large body of men, already prominent in affairs, who are alumni of the same institution.

5. As regards moral and religious culture, he finds in the faculty of his State institution men distinguished in their churches as laymen and ministers, one or more of whom may be Methodist preachers duly appointed by Conference, and, so far as appears in the manner of their appointment, equally responsible to the Conference with the clerical president or professor of a church school. For it is not easily seen how an Annual Conference can pass the character of one of its members on the simple ground that he has faithfully observed his quantities in the classics, or made no mistake in his mathematical formulas.

6. As a further guarantee that proper religious influence will surround his son—for reference here is to male schools only—our average church member reads among the names of the Board of Trust those of high dignitaries of his own and other churches. Such men, he is assured, will tolerate nothing hurtful in an institution which they in part control. If to this he can add—as is too frequently the case—the example of leading members of his church who pass by their own schools to patronize those of the State, it is not strange that he should do likewise.

Now, whatever may be said of the reasonableness of the considerations just stated, it can not be denied that they have great influence with many of our Methodist people, and must be squarely and successfully met before we can hope for a united and hearty movement in support of our institutions of learning. In doing this let us, as writers and readers and thinkers upon the subject, have the grace of repetition.

First, then, as to the matter of expense, let anyone interested compare the charges at Centenary, for example, with those at any one of our State Universities—everything included—and he will be surprised to see how slight the difference is. I know of one of these which offers the inducement of free tuition, where the special uniform required for commencement occasions costs nearly half as much as a year's tuition at Centenary.

2. As regards professional standing—admitting the difficulty of making comparisons in this respect—we can safely deny that the teachers employed by the State are men of more ability than those engaged in our church institutions.

3. It is questionable also whether any neighboring State provides superior buildings and apparatus to those of Greensboro and Centenary. The grounds and buildings at Centenary are certainly not inferior to those of the Universities of Mississippi or Louisiana, either in extent or in adaptation to academical purposes.

4. The fact that there are in State faculties and Boards of Trust laymen and ministers of high standing in their churches, and the argument derived therefrom, require delicate handling. If it is proper for the church to be officially represented at all in these bodies, the greater the dignity of her representatives the better it is for all concerned. The question of propriety is not so easily settled. But, in considering the fact and its bearings upon the question at issue, it is well to note the embarrassments under which ministers of the gospel, in these positions, must labor in all matters concerning the religious training of young men. This is especially true as regards the professors. All the tendencies of their positions are towards compromise. They are, for the most part, the appointees of politicians. The temptations to adopt the politician's arts in securing and holding their places are very great, and only men of the purest life, the greatest tact and the strongest character can, under such circumstances, be efficient as religious instructors.

That this spirit of compromise has its effect upon those who are trustees also is, at least, suggested by the fact that the annual hop, which, with other forms of dancing, our church condemns, is still a part of the closing exercises in most, if not all, of these institutions. How much the representatives of our church, and of other churches holding the same views, have done to suppress this pernicious custom, we do not know. That it costs something to oppose it, witness how severely a Methodist minister—a trustee of a neighboring State University—was handled by the secular press for publicly objecting to this part of the commencement programme.

If our space were sufficient, it might be shown that there is more or less of fallacy in the other claims made in favor of State schools. But were these all well founded except the one last mentioned, the church can equip and amply endow every college we have, provided only our people are taught to put a proper estimate upon religious culture. The point to be insisted upon, line upon line, precept upon precept, is that the grand function of the church in education is to bring the young to Christ. Upon no other ground can we justify the diversion of our patronage and means from the colleges of the State. Let our preachers, therefore, preach upon the subject; let our writers agitate it, and let our teachers make it prominent in all their discipline and instruction. Along with this let it be made known—for we are confident the facts will sustain the assertion—that a thousand dollars administered in the interest of a church college will accomplish more towards reducing the cost of education than twice that sum appropriated by a State Legislature, to say nothing of the better quality of education by the church.

Allusion was made in a former article to the recent resignation of teachers from our church colleges to enter certain State and secular schools. Without prejudice to them—though we think such action can only be hurtful to the church—it is pleasant to note the loyal bearing of those teachers in our schools, who, for Christ's sake and the church's, have endured hardness, living on meagre salaries and refusing to seek or accept more lucrative positions elsewhere. In these times of greed for gain, association for four years with such men is in itself a liberal education. Equally to be honored and equally valuable in their moral effect upon the college student are the lives and example of those noble men who, as patrons and trustees, have stood by the church college because of the grand idea it embodied, through all its days of adversity. Their names and virtues are a rich heritage of the church. They constitute an endowment more precious than dollars and cents. I never pass the Institute at Whitworth College, and read upon its corner-stone the inscription, "Founded * * * by H. F. Johnson," that I do not want to change the preposition and read it, "Founded on H. F. Johnson." Beneath that honored institution, as a pledge of God's blessing and the favor of the church, lies a noble, consecrated life, a life which, as the years pass by, and it comes to be better known and appreciated, will count far more a hundredfold than all the thousands he gave to the cause of Christian education.

By an easy gravitation the course of this article tends specially towards Centenary College. Every now and then some writer from one of the patronizing Conferences, awakening to the need of a home school for our boys, proposes the establishment of a college somewhere on one of our great thoroughfares, thus practically ignoring or abandoning Centenary. Let us not forget that more accessibility and money and beautiful buildings and learned faculties do not constitute a college. In building up a school there is a disability of newness which is quite a formidable an obstacle as the decrepitude of age. Vanderbilt could well afford to give half her grand endowment for a hundred years of past, consecrated by the labor and love of devout, large-minded men, and given to the work of Christian education for the church. England could not duplicate Rugby in a decade, though she were to exhaust the revenues of the empire in the attempt.

At another time the true relation of the church to State schools may be discussed. Suffice it to say for the present, that it is not one of antagonism. The church can never have a complete public school system. We are convinced that we can provide for the higher education of our young without the aid of the State, and that it is our duty to do it. But if the State continues to sustain colleges and universities, the best service the church can render them is to make her own schools so good that the State can not compete without adopting her methods.

The object of this paper is to correct certain erroneous impressions which prevail to some extent among our people, to plead for our church schools on the ground that they offer the best facilities for the education of the entire man, and to direct attention to what is likely to be forgotten by some of our enthusiastic founders of colleges on paper, that in such an undertaking sentiment is not to be despised.

The wisdom and devotion of the church in the past have given to us Centenary, Wofford, Emory, Greensboro, and other institutions for higher education. These schools come down to us from our fathers; they represent something; they have a history which, checkered as it is by the struggle with poverty, losses by the war, and the subsequent indifference of the church, is yet dear to many now living, who helped to make it, and consecrated by the hopes and prayers of godly men who have gone to their reward. Is it wise in the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana to abandon Centenary, which, in addition to this, is already located, and furnished with building, grounds, etc., which could not be replaced for more than $50,000, and start a new enterprise on the prospect that somebody will give something for the location of a male college somewhere else? Let us rather build on a foundation.

Pulpit Aids to Unbelief.

BY REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

The source and strength of the skepticism of the age is in the pulpit. Doubt of the truth, and opposition to it, is mainly created by those who are called "preachers of the gospel," by some of the very best of men who will read this paper, but who would never suppose for a moment that it applies to them. These are among the most diligent and effective sowers of tares.

"But of all men, these, dear sir, are most rigidly, suspiciously, unsparingly orthodox."

Precisely—so vehemently orthodox that they spend their whole time in dissecting and denouncing heresies, until simple people begin to sympathize with that which gets so much the worst of it, and so easily; and then they find themselves gradually led to a secret belief in and even an admiration for the error which is so contemptible and yet which takes so much killing. Whack! whack! whack! Well, if that thing is not dead yet it must be immortal, and then, of course, it must be true.

"But is not that a very perverse method to adopt?" Very—and therefore thoroughly human. It is the old, old story, so true to human nature, of the Spanish priest who earnestly desired the conversion of a very wealthy Jew and who thought within himself: If I can but take this worthy son of Abraham to Rome, all will be well; for then he should see our holy religion in its splendor and magnificence. At last the opportunity came and they set out together. But when the priest beheld all the abominations of Rome his heart sank in despair, and he dreaded to meet the Jew. But speedily it came to pass that the man of Judah sought the priest and hastened to tell the tidings of his conversion. Now he was a believer in Rome.

"What has led to this happy result?" cried the delighted priest.

"Father," said the Jew, "I have seen the iniquities of Rome—nothing but the truth could survive amid such sins."

So may our hearers of to-day argue within themselves—only that which is true could withstand such fierce and persistent cudgelings.

"How then shall the error of the times be met?"

Preach the gospel. Men give up preaching the gospel when they take to proving it. They leave it caged at home while they go out with their pop-gun proofs to fight its foes. Let Him go forth, and we need not fear for the Lion of the tribe of Judah. A gospel that needs so much proving must be either very mysterious or very doubtful, or both. If controversy rages in the congregation, St. Paul has taught us how to deal with it, not by making much of the controversy, but by making much of Christ. To make Jesus precious is both to furnish and to fortify the soul; but to be always treating the gospel as doubtful is to create doubt and to minister to doubt. If darkness fill the chamber, will beating the air mend matters in any wise? Will dissertations, however eloquent or philosophical, on the origin and perils of darkness, save any man's head from being broken or guide his steps into the day? Open the shutters. Let in the light, and the darkness may be left to itself then.

Besides, your proofs do not give me what I want. You may carve a stone into the very image of a loaf, but it is not bread. You may prove to me every clause of the creed, but I can not feed on your logic. God is not nearer to me because of your proofs of his being. For myself I can only say that you have put him farther off, up and away in the colder regions of the intellect, when I long to know him as my own in the sunny warmth of my love and trust. The infinite is not more to me, but infinitely less, because you have wrapped it evenly and neatly within your definition. There is a peril in proofs

> "That prove
> God's being so definitely that man's doubt
> Grows self-defined the other side the line,
> Made atheist by suggestion."

We may well doubt whether anything can be proved, except, indeed, a proposition in Euclid, which is only a puzzle put together for the purpose. Propositions in Euclid do not live and move and have any being. Life is gone when you begin to dissect it. The flower is spoiled when you begin to botanize. Truth is no more truth, but a proposition only, when you begin to prove it a thing dependent upon your logical skill and gifts of utterance. It is an awful thing assuredly to make God, heaven, hell, eternity, hang upon your proof.

Take the opinion of two men, representing the two extremes of modern thought, each entitled to speak with authority—Matthew Arnold and Cardinal Newman. In his book, "Essays in Criticism," Arnold commends this wisdom of Joubert: "State truths of sentiment, and do not try to prove them. There is danger in such proofs; for in arguing it is necessary to treat that which is in question as something problematic; now that which we accustom ourselves to treat as problematic ends by appearing to us as really doubtful. In things that are visible and palpable, never prove what is believed already; in things that are certain and mysterious—mysterious in their greatness and by their nature—make people believe them, and do not prove them; in things that are matters of practice and duty, command—do not explain. 'Fear God' has made many men pious; the proofs of the existence of God have made many men atheists. From the defense springs the attack; the advocate begets in the hearer a wish to pick holes; and men are almost always led on from a desire to contradict the doctor to the desire to contradict the doctrine. Make Truth lovely, and do not try to arm her."

"Make people believe them; and do not prove them." It is easily spoken; but how is it to be done? By your own conviction of them. The power of a man to convince is not in his power to argue, but in the force of his own convictions. The realm of these things is the spirit; and the authority in religion is that of the spiritual consciousness. A man can not prove much, but his power to preach is exactly according to the measure of the Christ that is in him. Anybody can preach about Christ; only he who has Christ in the heart can preach him.

But listen to the second extract. It is from Cardinal Newman: "To most men argument makes the point in hand more doubtful and considerably less impressive. After all, man is not a reasoning animal; he is a seeing, feeling, contemplating, acting animal."

"But both these are extreme," objects my reader. True; and because from each extreme the better able to testify. But take a man who stands midway 'twixt the two, and having authority to speak—Dr. Martineau—"Those who tell me too much about God; who speak as if they knew his motive and his plan in everything; who are never at a loss to name the reason of every structure, and show the tender mercy of every agent; who praise the cleverness of the eternal economy, and patronize it as a masterpiece of forensic ingenuity; who carry themselves through the solemn glades of Providence with the springy step and jaunty air of a familiar; do but drive me by the very definiteness of their assurance into an indefinite agony of doubt, and impel me to cry, 'Ask of me less, and I shall give you all.'"

But, you object, all this only applies to those who do their own thinking. Have we not to explain these difficulties for thousands of simple people who can not think them out for themselves? Of course, you do not quote Arnold and Newman and Martineau as representing the great mass of men.

No, and for these the mischief is infinitely greater—in explaining these difficulties you familiarize people with doubts that will come back to plague them again and again; and, worst still, you familiarize them with the thought of religion as a doubtful thing. Can anything be more foolish than to scatter tares in order to show off one's skill in picking them out again? and in the case of such poisonous tares, can anything be more perilous? All men have trouble enough to fight their own devils. Why should you collect a host of others to let loose on them?

Not long ago I was talking with a shrewd Scotchman, who had left the church of which he was a member, because the minister had followed the fashion, and was constantly setting forth the most subtle forms of unbelief. The minister called to see after the missing sheep, and inquired as to the reason of his absence. "Well," explained the wanderer, "I don't go to church for controversy, but for communion with God. When you preach you put me up to tricks of argument and difficulties that I am all the better for not knowing. You give me on Sunday what I have to get rid of for myself, and it takes me the whole week to do it. It reminds me of an ostler who went to confession. He had gone satisfactorily through the list of questions touching frailties common to humanity; then the priest came to those special to the man's calling. 'Do you butter the horses' teeth that they may not eat their corn?' The simple ostler expressed his indignant horror. 'Sure and your reverence, such a thing I never heard of in my life.' The next time the man came to confession this sin came out. He had buttered the horses' teeth, etc., etc. The priest was indignant now. The ostler explained: 'Well, your reverence, ever since you put me up to it, I have not been able to get it out of my head.'"

If you don't want to drive false notions out of your hearers' heads, take care not to put them there.—Methodist Times.

SLEEP—A SONNET.

We sleep and dream. Who has not seen and met
His heart's desire in Rio charmed palace—sleep,
And hugged the happiness he could not keep,
Or kissed an ideal he could never set
In place of waking facts? Thus from the fret
And toil of life we enter, wandering deep
Through the long corridors, where dreams, that steep
Our souls with gladness, wile us to forget
That they are dreams. Here in the sleeping-place
We come like the presence, face to face,
Of longings realized; here stretch our hands
To touch some well-remembered form of yore,
And speak the words we should have spoke before
Our friends passed from us into distant lands.

DEATH AND BURIAL OF MOSES.

Deuteronomy xxxiv; 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.—Prov. iv. 18.

TIME.—B. C. 1451, according to William Smith; or B. C. 1453, according to Keil and Edersheim.

PLACE.—The plains of Moab, east of the Jordan and the northern part of the Dead Sea.

1. Moses went up from the plains of Moab—Not many months ago he had climbed to the summit of the castellated Hor, and seen his brother, Aaron, calmly "unclothed," that he might be "clothed upon with his house which was from heaven." The Israelites were encamped on the desert plains of Moab, in the valley of the Jordan, near its mouth, on the eastern side of the river, and between the river and Mount Pisgah. Josephus, though writing from imagination, could not be in material error when he says of Moses that "he withdrew among the tears of the people; the women beating their breasts, and the children giving way to uncontrollable wailing. At a certain point in his ascent he made a sign to the weeping multitude to advance no farther, taking with him only the elders, the high-priest, Eleazar, and the general, Joshua. At the top of the mountain he dismissed the elders, and then, as he was embracing Eleazar and Joshua, and still speaking to them, a cloud suddenly stood over him and he vanished in a deep valley." Unto the mountain of Nebo ... Pisgah—The name "Nebo" was the name of an idol of the Chaldeans and Assyrians, supposed to be the god who presided over learning, the same as the Latin Mercurius, or the Greek Hermes. Perhaps, the name was applied to the mountain because of some sanctuary where the god was worshiped. Over against Jericho—Beneath him lay the tents of Israel ready for the march; and, over against them, distinctly visible in its grove of palm trees, the stately Jericho, key of the land of promise. The Lord showed him all ... Gilead unto Dan—That pastoral region was discernible at the northern extremity of the mountain-line on which it stood, till it ended, far beyond his sight, in Dan. He might not go over Jordan, but he might "lift up his eyes," and look "westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward," and behold "the good land that was beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon."

4. This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, etc.—He would see and comprehend how fair and "goodly" was the tract, how fitted to teem with corn, and wine, and honey, and oil olive, and fig trees, and pomegranates, where his people might be sure to "eat bread without scarceness," and have "no lack of anything." Have caused thee to see it—"With thine eyes," excludes every ecstatic vision, still more any magical influence, but also, it seems clear, any miraculously elevated power of bodily vision for the purpose. It was even a proof of his unimpaired strength of vision, which the soaring flight of winged faith rendered more penetrating. Then, not in sternness, nor in anger, but in utmost love, like a mother lifting her boy into her arms, the Lord added: "But thou shalt not go over thither;" and in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the soul of Moses had passed within the veil, and was at home with God.

5. So Moses, the servant of the Lord—As Abraham receives in Scripture, as his special designation, the title of "the friend of God," so Moses bears the title of "the servant of the Lord." The special quality which this epithet marks is his unswerving faithfulness—that absolutely unshaken fidelity to God which characterized him throughout his entire career. Died there—The actual manner of Moses' death must remain forever a mystery. No eye saw it. None knew the exact moment of it. In silence and solitude, at the top of Pisgah, alone with God, the great law giver, prophet, leader, passed away. He sank to rest—he "was not, for God took him." According to the Word of the Lord—Or, as the word literally is, "by the mouth of the Lord;" and we do not wonder that the Jewish rabbis understood it to mean "by the kiss of the Lord." As the father kisses his boy when he lifts him to his knee, so death came to Moses as a token of his Lord's affection. But the sense of the phrase is clear. It denotes that Moses died, not because his vital powers were exhausted, but at the sentence of God, and as a punishment for his sin.

6. He buried him—And buried also his grave. The bones of Joseph were carried into Canaan to be interred; but the Lord himself buried the body of Moses. Valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor—In front of the very sanctuary of "the abomination of the Moabites." The allusion of St. Jude seems to imply that the fallen angel, who was really worshiped there, disputed this invasion of his sanctuary with the "divine prince, the chief of the angels" (Michael, the archangel), who rebuked him with the same calm authority which he used on the mount of the temptation. The burial of Moses by the hand of Jehovah was not intended to conceal his grave for the purpose of guarding against a superstitious and idolatrous reverence for his grave, for with the opinion held by the Israelites, that corpses and graves defiled, there was but little fear of this; but as we may infer from the account of the transfiguration of Jesus, the intention was to place him in the same category with Enoch and Elijah. As Kurtz observes: "The purpose of God was to prepare for him a condition, both of body and soul, resembling that of these two men of God. Men bury a corpse that it may pass into corruption. If Jehovah, therefore, would not suffer the body of Moses to be buried by men, it is but natural to seek for the reason in the fact that he did not intend to leave him to corruption, but, when burying it with his own hand, imparted a power to it which preserved it from corruption, and prepared the way for it to pass into the same form of existence to which Enoch and Elijah were taken, without either death or burial." The passage in Jude, which every reader feels to be so singular in its reference to a dispute between Michael and the devil over the body of Moses, may really allude to the resurrection of Moses, in order that, with Elijah, he might stand in glorified humanity beside Jesus on the mountain of transfiguration. And if this be so, it is interesting to note that thus, not through Jordan, but over it by way of heaven, he actually at length did pass into Canaan, and stood upon the dewy Hermon. No man knoweth of his sepulcher unto this day—He had no funeral rites, no obsequies, no monument, and hence there could be no after-growth of loving pilgrimages, no superstitious reverence of a holy spot, no local commemorative ceremonies. The grave on Mount Nebo was, as is the grave of Golgotha, shrouded in thick darkness, to after ages an unknown locality.

7, 8. Moses was a hundred and twenty years old—The life of Moses was remarkably divided into three periods, each consisting of forty years. During the first he sustained the rank of a courtier, during the second he was a shepherd in the wilderness, and during the third he filled the important station of a law giver and "king in Jeshurun." Eye ... not dim, nor his natural force abated—The Hebrew word suggests, instead of "natural force," the idea of freshness, youthful vigor. How wonderfully were his powers of both mind and body preserved till his great work was done! Wept ... thirty days—Seven days was the usual period of mourning, but for persons of high rank or official eminence it was extended to thirty. Nor could they forget that, if they had not provoked him to anger by their murmuring, they might have had him still among them. There are few tears so scalding as those which disobedient sons drop upon a father's grave; and there might be not a little of similar poignancy in the grief of the Israelites over Moses' death. It was a fitting tribute to such a man that Israel publicly lamented his loss for thirty days. They naturally felt themselves like orphans. He had not only raised them from a horde of slaves to a nation, but had given them a creed and institutions which would forever secure for them a distinct national existence. As the prophet of God he had made them the depositaries of truths unknown to the world besides, the possession of which would make them the benefactors of all ages. His laws and morals were destined to mold them to an ideal only to be surpassed by the revelations of Christianity. His sympathy with his charge had been sublime. He could say of himself that he had borne them as a nurse bears a child. His patience and hopefulness with them had been wonderful. His gentleness and self-oblivion had given him supreme authority and reverence. He could boast before them that he had taken nothing from anyone, and that he had injured none. His utter freedom from all littleness of soul had been shown by his wishing that all Israelites were prophets like himself. In all respects, indeed, he had been a man apart from his fellows, and immeasurably above them, and the remembrance that such a one had stood at the cradle of their infant nation gave all its following generations a grand impulse to a noble life.

9. Joshua ... full of the spirit of wisdom—And other gifts and graces, too, as appears from the history: but wisdom is mentioned as being most necessary for the government, to which he was now called. For Moses had laid his hands upon him—Joshua was endowed by God with the requisite spiritual qualifications for the office. Moses, however, had laid his hands upon him, both in order to confer formal and public appointment, and also to confirm and strengthen the spiritual gifts already bestowed. The previous reception of the inner grace did not dispense with that of the outward sign.

10. There arose not a prophet since ... like unto Moses—Moses was the founder and mediator of the old covenant. As long as this covenant was to last, no prophet could arise in Israel like unto Moses. There is but One who is worthy of greater honor than Moses, namely, the Apostle and High-priest of our profession, who is placed as the Son over all the house of God, in which Moses was found faithful as a servant, Jesus Christ, the founder and mediator of the new and everlasting covenant. Whom the Lord knew face to face—That is, whom God did so freely, and familiarly, and frequently converse with.

11. In all the signs and ... wonders ... in Egypt, to Pharaoh—Words like these can only have been written some time, but not necessarily a long time, after the death of Moses. They refer more particularly to the wonders wrought by the hand of Moses at the Exodus and in the desert; and do but echo the declaration of God himself. They may naturally enough be attributed to one of Moses' successors, writing, perhaps, soon after the settlement of the people in Canaan. Into the catalogue of Old Testament saints set forth as examples to Christians by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, Moses enters by reason of his faith.

12. In all that mighty hand—To lead forth a mob of slaves, debased as only slavery can debase humanity, sunk below the dead level of pagan Egyptian civilization; to form them into a darling army, a free commonwealth, and a believing church; to be exposed to all the ready and violent vicissitudes of their desires, and hopes, and fears, and so to have to suffer their murmurs in the wilderness; to have them upbraid him for their very deliverance when their sensual natures lusted after the flesh-pots of Egypt; to have them talk of stoning him when the wells were dry; to have them dispute with him for his command, and rebel against his rule; to have them forsake their covenant with Jehovah, and turn to the sacred calf of their old Egyptian oppressors—all this was such a burden as was never laid on another. In all the great terror which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel—Moses, though scantly regarded during his life-time, was to his people after his death "the man of God;" "the servant of the Lord;" "the prophet like to whom none ever after arose;" the "chosen one" of God.

Education—Especially Ministerial Education.

BY "ONESIPHORUS."

NUMBER THREE.

Few passages of the Scriptures are more misapplied than that in the fourth chapter of Acts, wherein Peter and John are characterized as "unlearned and ignorant men." Who was it that so stigmatized them? The rulers and the scribes who had them on trial and could not answer them. The two apostles were not only bold, but they quoted the Psalms and prophets aptly, and they argued their case in a ready and forcible way that was too much for their adversaries.

"Unlearned and ignorant men," indeed! They were not loaded down with rabbinical sayings, and quotations from the Targum, and so they seemed inelegant and unrhetorical to those worshipers of dry-as-dust literature and accumulated traditions. Peter and John had learned a fresh and direct style from their Master; they taught with authority and not as the scribes. But in no true sense could they be called unlearned and ignorant. They had been taken, as their successors generally are, from the masses—plowmen, tradesmen, and fishermen; but the apostles had had the best schooling in the universe, even personal contact with and oral instruction from the Lord Jesus, for the space of two or three years. Ignorant and unlearned? Read Peter's grand sermons, extemporaneous, but argumentative and full of Scripture. And read his epistles. To say nothing of John's three epistles and the Revelation, his gospel (the celebrated "fourth") has stood the test of subtlest and fiercest criticism, ancient and modern. Half the Greek scholars who read the lines I am now writing began their acquaintance with the Greek language by studying John's gospel.

The fastidious stoics of Athens turned up their noses at Paul, and called him a "babbler." Shall we accept their estimate of him? I trow not. Paul's little discourse before them on natural religion had more learning and logic in it than Plato was master of. The "babbler" knew more than they all, and his writings have outlived the tomes of Athens. The study of New Testament Greek constitutes a chair in the theological schools to-day—Paul's Greek and John's Greek. They present a striking illustration of the use God has for sanctified learning in his heralds: learning, I say, by some got in one way, by others, in another way.

Peter and John can not, any more than Paul the "babbler," be made the examples and patrons of ignorance in the ministry. And this leads me to another class of men much misrepresented, in connection with our subject—I mean the early Methodist preachers.

Said an aged and thoughtful Methodist layman ten years ago: "Our Methodist ministry forty years back was more in advance, and better fitted to be leaders of the people than the body of our ministry to-day." And he cited names and facts. The statement startled me. I have since been thinking on it. Has the ministry advanced in proportion with the people? Has it kept the position held, relatively, by the fathers thirty or forty years ago? Look at their book-shelves, and see what sort of books they read, and how they studied them.

Great men many of them were, and useful. Their success was seen in raising things to a higher plane and making improved qualifications for the pulpit and pastorate necessary. They gave an uplift and an onward movement, and we feel it. Wise men and having understanding of the times, they knew what Israel ought to do, and they did it. They made beginnings for schools and colleges, affording education such as they had never enjoyed. They did more. Persistently misquoted as "unlearned and ignorant men," and their very success in the ministry perverted into an argument against ministerial education, they took care to have their children educated, who now enrich and adorn our itinerant ranks. They left not the sons to the disabilities under which the fathers labored. This was their conspicuous act, their verdict, their judgment on the subject.

Taking the General Minutes, let us see what sort of successors the great, but not college-bred preachers provided for themselves in their sons.

In Virginia and North Carolina: Norval Wilson and his son, Bishop Alpheus W.; John E. Edwards and his son, William E.; John Starr and his son, W. G.; Numa F. Reid and his son, F. L., editor of Raleigh Christian Advocate. That well-balanced and able man, N. H. D. Wilson, has been made to do service on the wrong side of this question. "See," they say, "what he has done; and he is no college-bred man." But he put his preacher-boy through Trinity and the University of North Carolina, and then sent him on to the Theological School of Vanderbilt University, where, with the best advantages, he has taken that course of systematic divinity represented by Dr. Summer's two volumes lately published, and from Hebrew was passing to Arabic and Syriac, when he was called to the death-bed of his lamented father.

In South Carolina and Georgia: Henry Bass and his son, Wm. C., president of our oldest female college, at Macon; John Mood and his son, Francis A., who did for Methodism in Texas so great a work; W. C. Kirkland and his son, W. D., the editor of our oldest Christian Advocate; H. A. C. Walker and his son, George W. As for Lovick Pierce, he left Tinker's Creek, in Barnwell, with such literary outfit as a lad might pick up at an intermittent old field school. Perhaps in the coming biography Dr. Haygood and Gilman Smith may tell us how and where he mastered that powerful style and accurate knowledge, whether he absorbed it or evolved it. He gave three sons to the ministry, and put each one through college; Bishop George F., through the University at Athens (then there was no church college), James L., through Randolph-Macon, and Thomas F., through Emory. To continue: there was the old man eloquent, Thomas Samford, and his son, Wm. F.; W. J. Parks and his son, Harwell H.; John W. Yarbrough and his son, George W.; J. W. Glean and his son, Wilbur F.; Joseph Lewis and his son, Walker, and another, a polished shaft, who is not; Caleb W. Key and his son, Bishop Joseph S.

In Alabama and Mississippi: Wm. Murrah and his son, W. B.; Wm. Wier and his son, Thomas C.; B. M. Drake and his two sons; John Starr and his son, John W., who died of yellow fever while pastor in Mobile; John G. Jones and his son, John A. B.; John Lambuth and his son, John W., the missionary to Japan. Persons who used to attend the delightful commencements at Centenary College—an institution to which both Church and State are greatly indebted for their best servants—will recall a dear little old man who had seen hard missionary service from Concenh to Catahoula in early days—Thomas Clinton. He owed nothing to schools; but he put his son, George, through them, and the congregations of Vicksburg and St. Louis will not forget that brief, but brilliant ministry. "Uncle Tommy" considered it no reflection on himself or his colleagues or his times or his church that the son was a more acceptable preacher than the father, and filled a class of appointments to which he himself had never been assigned.

In Tennessee and Kentucky: George W. D. Harris and his son, Wm. T.; Thomas L. Boswell, and his son, John W., lately called from Arkansas to be assistant editor of the central church organ; James Atkins and his son, James A., president of Asheville Female College; B. W. S. Bishop and his two sons, one in Holston and one in Texas; Wm. Hicks and his son, W. W.; George R. Browder and his son, Robt. W.; Stephen Vaught and his son, J. O. A.; John W. Kelley, that sturdy thinker and worker of West Virginia, and his son, Gilby C.; Jesse Cunningham and his son, Wm. G. E., our Sunday-school editor.

These, and many more living, and others dead might be mentioned. The father of Ephraim E. Wiley (long time at the head of Emory and Henry College) was a worthy contemporary with George Pickering, Enoch Mudge, and other glorious foundation-layers and builders of eastern Methodism, and so-called "unlearned and ignorant men;" but he put his son through the Wesleyan, at Middletown, and what a boon and enrichment has thence resulted to Southern Methodism and to all this land!

What self-denial, what downright hardships most of these itinerants and their families had to submit to, in order to give to the church in their measure an educated ministry! They felt the need of it. They saw the demand for it. They themselves (all honor to them) had helped to create that demand. It is too bad that their names should be made to do service on the wrong side of ministerial education.

Our revolutionary sires were brave and strong. They achieved American independence: they wrought out an empire by their heroism. But they knew nothing of rifled cannons, of breech-loaders, of repeaters and revolvers and of minie-balls. It is no reflection to them to say that the soldiers who won Saratoga and Yorktown and King's Mountain, could not, with the same tactics and arms, have won the battles of the Wilderness, of Manassas, and of Cold Harbor. Bedford Forrest could have chased George Washington out of the country, even though the latter had been at the head of double his troops, equipped with powder-horns, flint-locks, and smooth-bore muskets.

"We are suffering here," sadly remarked an eminent Mississippian, "from the effect of speeches made by Rev. Dr. ——— many years ago." In the same way, and from a similar cause, they are suffering in Missouri, in Kentucky and Tennessee. Some of our old Conferences have so long neglected ministerial education that to-day it is very difficult for them to hold their principal cities. They could not do it without a liberal use of the transfer system.

How long will it be before our people and their leaders wake up on this subject! When I think on these things sleep departs from my eyes.

NUMBER FOUR.

I never heard but one unanswerable argument against ministerial education. It was on this wise: Passing through the country where the Upper Cumberland flows out of Kentucky into Tennessee, I fell in at a largely attended meeting. It is that same vigorous region of country that, sixty years ago, sent out Thomas Joyner, and later Young Ewing, into the itinerancy. Many preachers were present, among them a youth whose manner and speech gave token of talent above the ordinary. I coveted him for the Master's difficult and hardest service; approached and felt of him. Yes, he was more than willing; but there were difficulties in the way of his higher education. His mother was a widow, and her younger children needed all the little patrimony for their support. He could sell his horse, but that wouldn't go far. Before he could advantageously undertake theological studies a year, at least, must be put in at an institution nearer home. I thought the case might be managed, and told him to hold on.

Next day I interviewed a well-to-do layman of the neighborhood, who seemed to be a pillar, and mentioned the young preacher's case. "Yes," he said; "he's the best preacher in these parts. Though raised here, he can get as big a congregation as a presiding elder any time. Sharp, quick; he goes off as clear as the crack of a rifle."

I remarked that he had confirmed my own impression concerning the brother, and added that if he and those who had a like appreciation of him would help a little toward his liberal education, we could thereby introduce him to a wider field of usefulness.

"Wider field!" He caught at that. "No, sir; that's just the thing we don't want. We need some good preaching up here in the hills and hollows as well as other people. He's got learning enough for us, and is satisfied with the little salary we can pay him. But put him through college, and then the strong, rich churches of Lexington and Louisville and Frankfort will be after him, and we shall lose him."

I left off there, but have felt ever since that there was a flaw in that argument, looked at from a Christian standpoint.

It was an anniversary occasion, and there was a large, inspiring congregation. The speaker held the audience with the agreeable grip that comes when spiritual and mental forces are united, mind and soul mutually feeding and inflaming each other. My pleased attention was interrupted by a hand laid on my shoulder, and a gray-haired superannuate whispered: "I dug him up." Subsequently he explained: "I was presiding elder on ——— district, and one of my homes was his father's house—plain, honest people, neither poor nor rich. That son of theirs was as rough as a plue-burr, for all you see him looking so elegant now. A jean suit on Sunday, made by his mother and sisters, was his highest ambition. But he used to hang round and listen when we were talking. He read the church paper, and had his mind made up as to this writer and that, and who got the best of it in a controversy. He was exercised about preaching, too. One day I said to the old man: "Give that boy a chance." Now, going to college was as much beyond their thoughts as going to Russia—a thing quite out of reach; might be possible for others, but not for such as them. I showed them it was possible. Well, to make a long story short, the old brother sold a few cattle, and collected some small notes he had out at interest, and put the boy through college; and you see the man that he is. I dug him up."

And he is a man filling to-day an important station. I never see him or hear him or read him without, in my heart, blessing the presiding elder that "dug him up."

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest: for the harvest is plentiful, and the laborers are few." Crowded and in each other's way, perhaps, in certain localities; but O how scant and scattered and disproportionate if the wants of the whole field be considered! Laborers well fitted for every kind of work that is to be done. How few! how few!

Pray; yes, and pay too.—Praying and paying go together.

We are not Antinomians; we are not Solidians; we are not Fatalists. The Lord requires us, so far as we can, to answer our own prayers. This holds good concerning a competent ministry as well as in making a crop. A farmer prays for fruitful seasons and Heaven's blessing, without which nothing can prosper; but he does not expect a crop of ripe corn to be landed in his crib by Providence while he is doing nothing else but praying.

In this serious, weighty, pressing, all-important matter of a ministry suited to the times are our people willing to pay as well as pray?

"O yes," say the district stewards, who are calling for a man to magnify quarterly meetings; "send us such a one, and we are ready to pay him all he needs."

"O yes," say the Official Board, trying to impress the Bishop with the crisis that is upon a great circuit or a growing station, "we'll pay a suitable preacher $1,000, or $1,500, or $2,500, or $3,000, and give him a house to live in. All we want is a man to fill the bill. No matter, Bishop, where you find him; send him to us, and we'll support him. No trouble about raising money in the pews if you can meet the wants of our pastorate and pulpit."

True; and that sounds well until you push the inquiry a step farther. Whence are these well-qualified preachers to come? Whence may we expect these holy and educated men, able to stand before any congregation, and to teach them? You are willing to pay for their services when they are furnished to your hand, but who is to furnish them? Possibly you are doing nothing at all in that line. You are prayerfully waiting for some widow—the mother of a consecrated son—to lift him out at her cost; or waiting for some poor father of a smart boy to be at the outlay of preparing a preacher for you; or waiting for some itinerant on scant allowance to fix up his son for your future edification and delectation. Waiting, waiting! What district among all those clamoring for a crowd-drawing, doctrine-preaching and law-expounding presiding elder is to-day running an academy, or paying preacher who may fill their bill? What strong circuit is beginning at the foundation and bringing forward the man to meet its wants? What station, complaining that with all its ready money it can not get the right man, is paying the board and tuition of one theological student, year by year?

A few godly men and women (alas! few; I could count them on my fingers) have laid down a sum of money, here and there, to help deserving and needy young preachers to obtain an education; and I see a hundred cities, with their big, rich, cultivated congregations and tall steeples, sitting down idly, and waiting to be supplied with suitable pastors.

Go back a step or two, brethren, with your money, if you really are in earnest. Not more colleges are wanted, but more academies and district high schools, and better support for the colleges we have. Who among you has endowed an academy or a professorship? Who is extending a timely, helping hand, that the boy may go to the academy, and then go on to the college or university or theological seminary? Politicians know that to get a congressman or governor elected they must attend to the "primaries." Find your boy or man, "dig him up," and start him on his career. This willingness to pay well after he can preach well is not far removed from enlightened selfishness. You then get value received; you and your family are directly benefited. But making the first investment, and taking all the risks of failure, is left for widows and poor farmers and mechanics and half-paid itinerants, who get no return, except in the sense of duty performed.

Would it not be a right reasonable thing and Christian, for you to build a Helping Hall (of four rooms—brick—or, better, of eight—costing about $2,000), and put it as a free gift on the grounds of Randolph-Macon, or Trinity, or Wofford, or Emory, or Emory and Henry, or Southern, or Southwestern, or Central, or Centenary, or Pacific College—free quarters for the sons of the prophets who need them, and are pursuing their studies there? Couldn't you go a step farther, and provide that a table of plain, but substantial fare be set three times a day (ten months in the year) for those eight or sixteen? Couldn't you go a step farther? Why should the hard-worked academy teacher or the half-paid college professor be at charges for the tuition of a class of persons in whose future labors the church is so greatly interested? Endow a chair. Then you might pray and look for laborers to make their appearance with systematic regularity—laborers suited to every demand of the times.

D. W. was the first treasurer of Vanderbilt University—a man of modest, but solid fortune. He saw that $10,000 was annually paid out to furnish varied and free tuition to young men studying for the ministry. He saw that $100,000 had been invested to furnish such students free lodgings and other accommodations. He saw that well-to-do men could and did readily pay their board and get the full benefit of this large benefaction. But, being a practical man—one of the people, and not a stranger to the struggles of a poor young man—he saw that all this affluence of opportunity would be unavailable to those who could not reach it. So he picked out of his funds five of the best (of $1,000 each), and put them in the treasury to pay the way of three divinity students forever. Being dead, he yet speaks. The presiding elder of N——— district laid down $2,000, the interest of which pays perpetually the necessary expenses of one student of divinity. He knows the want, and he prays and pays.

Aunt Patsy Seahury loved her Lord and his church. She had worked hard, lived plain, and saved up a little. She had never been particular about her pastor, so he was good; perhaps, remembered some good ones that might have been better with a little more knowledge. Aunt Patsy, out of her humble estate, gave a small lot and the tenement on it to this cause. It was not a brown-stone front, on a fashionable street, unless in the estimation of her Master. Her family did not contest the humble bequest, as the millionaires do. They knew her wish, and, though poor, were willing for her wish to be fulfilled. She is in paradise, but is represented on the campus by a perpetual provision for the modest support of one preacher-student. Some who are educated on Aunt Patsy's "foundation" may turn out dull and inefficient: the majority, let us hope, will be "good middling;" but ever, and anon, in the course of time, a star of the first magnitude will roll out from under that Methodist bonnet. She hath done what she could; but Aunt Patsy can't provide educated preachers for all those who stand waiting—and doing nothing to help themselves.

A million members at home, and four or five foreign mission fields call for guides, helps, and spiritual rulers and teachers, preachers and translators. Are we meeting this call?

I never saw an anti-college Methodist (preacher or layman) who was not proud of the learning of John Wesley. The connection between his great learning and his great usefulness is easy to see. How came the son of the Epworth parsonage by his learning? There was a "foundation" for sustenance and tuition at the Charter House, and his parents, through the offices of a friend, got their beloved Jackey in, where upon hard fare during several years' residence the boy was prepared for the university. Did he stop there? A scholarship in Oxford was open, and the Charter House student obtained it, and in four years graduated. Nor did he stop there. A fellowship in Lincoln College became vacant; he stood for it, and by competitive examination won it. Here he deepened and broadened his culture, and took rank with the foremost. His father, with his narrow parish income, and his debts, and his nineteen children, could do little for him beyond helping to pay degree fees and installation expenses. The existence of foundations—endowed scholarships and fellowships—did it. So his younger brother, Charles, was indebted to a like provision for his going through Oxford via Westminster School. But for these helps John might have risen to the dignity of an obscure parish priest, and Charles' classic hymns had been unwritten and unsung.

What do we owe to "foundations?" O that the Methodists of this day were wise! O that they understood this! Then would more of them seek, by well doing along this line, for glory and honor and immortality.

Random Notes.

MR. EDITOR: The camp meeting at Scottsville, Texas, for the promotion of holiness as a specialty, was a blessed time. Only two days and three nights afforded me and several of our Louisiana preachers the happy privilege to witness and hear from many excellent laymen and preachers the doctrine and experience of "perfect love" emphasized as never before. Everything was neatness, earnestness and love. The spirit of the meeting was excellent, the arrangements most perfect, excelling in some respects any camp meeting ever attended. Many passed into a new and higher life. A number were justified. What hospitality, good order, fraternity—a reign of love! A death and burial on the grounds, of a consecrated good woman, the widow of a venerable and much loved minister, took place the day after our arrival. It was solemn, impressive. I was reminded of a New Testament burial while good men bore the casket containing the sacred dust from the tabernacle to the adjacent cemetery. "And devout men carried Stephen to his burial."

I had just read Boland's "Problem," and, later, excerpts from Wesley's journals, sermons and letters—a compiled volume of intrinsic worth, touching the cardinal question of holiness. Now the sermons, prayers, songs, experiences and testimonies all on that line made the doctrine, experience and life quite apparent, and the longing soul panted for the "fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." I am so glad I went to that meeting! While to many the fervor and mingled vocal prayers of the worshipers at the same time, and the responses so emphatic and vociferous, and the ejaculations of praise now and then, and seeming interruptions by parenthetic phrases through the sermons, would be confusing and objectionable, yet who can question its genuineness, and that the "Holy Spirit, with groanings which can not be uttered," gave them utterance. Melted into tears, or transports, or songs, or shoutings, and often all these manifestations at the same time, and this among people of known and approved Christian character and conduct, how could it be thought otherwise than that they were overshadowed by the Divine Spirit, and that they were made "perfect in love." A cold-hearted, cynical, philosophizing professor could have criticized to his heart's content, while others would have been melted, subdued, wooed.

Boland's book I regard in some of its chapters as fatal to this distinctive doctrine of Methodism, as well as the teachings of the Old and New Testament, and I fear will do much harm. I am glad the ready pen and logical mind of Dr. Rush, in the Nashville Christian Advocate, has given a just and righteous review of it and fearlessly and fully vindicated the Scripture doctrine. Why so much discussion about theory? The "second blessing," "residue theory," "completeness of regeneration," "power and force of temptation." Why, facts and experience are worth more than all. It is of God. Its mysterious, unfathomable depths indicate its divine character, and where reason falters faith apprehends. Let all claim the blessing of "perfect love that casteth out all fear." Let all "perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord" "follow peace with all men and holiness, without which none can see the Lord," "be partakers of his holiness," and then let us "walk after the same rule," "having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind; let nothing be done through strife or vainglory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem the other better than themselves," and our "peace will be as a river and righteousness as the waves of the sea."

We had a glorious meeting of more than a week's duration at Lisbon. A spiritual feast, building up and strengthening and comforting. Meeting at Arizona of a week was a thorough, searching revival, reaching almost every member of that church and quite a number of Baptists. The standard and tone of piety is raised to the Scriptural basis. A number professed conversion and were added to the church of God in these meetings. Finances healthy.

Of the District Conference at Minden (a precious time), Bro. Purvin's camp meeting, and a meeting by Bro. Wright, at Athens, you have likely been apprised. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men!" And let it be sounded from every hill-top and valley. Amen!

Holly Springs District Conference, North Mississippi Conference.

Bishop Keener was to have held the Holly Springs District Conference last week, at Victoria. The storms along the coast delayed the good Bishop's starting, and a wreck on the Illinois Central railroad severely shocked him, and sent him back home after he had started; so that we were all denied the privilege of having him at all. However, it is generally agreed that we had an excellent District Conference. A number of revivals was reported; three new parsonages secured and occupied since Conference, all free from debt. The Conference resolved itself into a Ministerial Educational Aid Society, and a liberal collection was taken on the spot. The spirit of the Conference was most excellent: the preaching, pointed; the love-feast, glorious. E. J. McKinney, T. B. Winston, T. A. Bottom and B. C. Gray, L. P., were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; W. G. Gibson, Dr. G. E. Kelsey, W. W. Bott, L. P., alternates.

Next District Conference goes to Early Grove.

I write this notice at the request of the secretary, Capt. T. B. Winston.

From the Work.

DOWNSVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Closed our Downsville Camp Meeting amid shouts of great victory. Eternity only can reveal the amount of good accomplished. Fifty is a very low estimate of the number of souls converted; and almost all Christian hearts gathered new inspiration from rich baptism—season after season. The work began with the first service. Wonderful demonstrations of power attended each day's labor. By Tuesday morning the audience was scarcely controllable, and by Wednesday morning wholly so. Three conversions, I believe, at half-past eight Tuesday morning; seven at eleven; eight at half-past three; near fifteen conversions and reclamations at night, and after the altar exercises closed, from fifteen to thirty in the grove—no one knows.

A young man, under deep conviction, retiring with some friends to the spot where the men held their grove meetings (each evening witnessed grove meetings—ladies to the left, men to right of the encampment), came upon four young men down before the Lord in prayer. All prayed together; those unconverted, soon converted; all rejoiced together. The shouting drew others, who alike requested prayer; were blessed; and others and others again, until by one o'clock at night a vast crowd had congregated at the grove. Ladies, led by brethren, regardless of boundary lines, lights or obstacles of any kind, ran for sons, brothers, husbands, fathers; and at half-past one, or before, the very heavens were being rent with mingled shouts of victory, songs of gladness and cries for mercy. At 1:25 at night, penetrating the grove to the battle-ground, and with no light, save Luna's rays, I gave an opportunity to those desiring church membership. Some happy converts came; when, lo! by many it was said twenty-five had been converted there. Glory to God on high! Old-time religion is coming back, with sin-killing and soul-saving power. Bless God! Hallelujah! Amen!

MOORINGSPORT, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The good Lord is visiting his people in this part of his vineyard with great power. We began a meeting August 11, and ran several days. The meeting was near the line of Arkansas. We had no preacher to assist us. The Lord came down with mighty power. During the seven days 52 were converted, and many of them with great power; some old men and women that were thought to be hopeless cases. Fifty-four entered the experience of entire sanctification. The Lord gave many of them great power, and they did rejoice, indeed, with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Glory to Jesus for the precious privilege of entering into the holiest by the blood of Jesus! (Hebrews x, 19.) Oh! such mighty power that fell upon us! Men would fall under the power like dead men, and cry for mercy; others would run out of the house and fall, get religion and return praising God. Sometimes the cries were heard from different parts of the house, and the people rushing to their friends here and there, some praising God; some crying for mercy, till one would imagine himself to be in the midst of a battlefield. Glory to Jesus for his saving power!

We received 36 into the church. Fourteen gave their hands under promise to join other churches, and there are others to join when we go back. We baptized 19 adults and 10 infants during the meeting. We have received during the year 49 members, had 62 conversions that we know of, and about as many have entered the experience of perfect love. All honor and glory be to Jesus. Finances will be up when we go to Conference.

BAYOU SCIE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: "The good work still continues to go on." We have held two meetings since our meeting at Bayou Scie. The meeting at Red Land lasted eight days, resulting in a glorious revival and twenty additions to the church. Our meeting at Pisgah continued four days, resulting in the church being greatly revived and ten accessions to the church. I have been preaching from one to two sermons a day for nearly four weeks. The good Lord has been with me and enabled me to preach with great power. Some of our local preachers labored faithfully and earnestly in these meetings. There have been seventy-five accessions to the church up to date. I have been adopting the Baptist rule on my work. I preach until I get the people interested, then hold on until I get them into the church. I think that if we Methodist preachers would continue our meetings longer, would be more successful. I have continued some of my meetings this year until two Sundays were embraced, and the last Sunday has proven to be the best day of all, the great day of the feast. To God be all the praise for what has been done during these meetings!

DOWNSVILLE CAMP MEETING.

The Downsville Camp Meeting commenced Friday before the third Sunday in August, and closed Thursday morning. It is the fifteenth annual meeting held at this camp ground, and is given up to be the best. I never saw a greater demonstration of the Holy Spirit operating on the hearts of the people in convicting and converting power. Tuesday night the altar was crowded with penitents; some were happily converted, some that did not find peace before the services broke asked some of their friends to go with them to the grove and pray for them. The result was fifteen conversions in the woods that night. Twenty-six accessions to the church. I do not know how many conversions, but a great many. The church greatly revived. I think the Christian standard has been raised higher than for many years. J. T. R.

STARKVILLE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have held three meetings, which resulted in forty conversions and sixty accessions to our church—a number joined by letter. We have erected a number of new family altars; and a number of children baptized. We are ten in advance of last year in membership, and one more meeting to hold. I think we will reach seventy before Conference. We were assisted by Rev. H. C. Parrott at Osborn. He preached with power, and the Word preached was accompanied by the Holy Ghost to the hearts of the hearers, which resulted in the accomplishment of great good. To God be all the glory! Pray for us. A Proclamation!

Dr. I. Guy Lewis, Fulton, Ark., says: "A year ago I had bilious fever; Tutt's Pills were so highly recommended that I used them. Never did medicine have a happier effect. After a practice of a quarter of a century, I proclaim them the best

I am fifty-five years of age. Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Briefs.

"Greater virtues are necessary to sustain prosperity than adversity."

"We have more power than will, and it is often to make excuses to ourselves that we imagine things are impossible."

"The desire to talk of ourselves and to make known our faults from the point of view that we wish them to be looked at makes up a great portion of our sincerity."

There is nothing so subtle in its deceptions as pride of intellect. It shows itself in its deepest subtlity when we put forth our suspicions, having carefully labeled them, "opinions."

A good authority says that the Methodists in the United States are now building churches at the rate of five per day. Two thousand churches in one year is not bad work for one denomination of the Lord's hosts.

Paul's catalogue of the thirty things by which he commended himself as a minister of God is conspicuous for the absence of a good many things which seem to make up a roll of commendable characteristics of some modern ministers. Read that sixth chapter of II Corinthians, and see.

It was a very simple process the Savior used when he made the hearts of his hearers "burn within them." It was just this: "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." Preaching Christ out of "all the Scriptures" is the theme to make hearts burn. Try it, brother.

Not many days ago the Picayune had this:

Memphis Avalanche, August 30: Rev. McLaurin, of New Orleans, the Bible agent, says the Oxford (Miss.) Falcon tells that eight young men of the wealthiest and best families of Mississippi applied for admission to an institution of learning, and after they had passed examination, the president asked: "Who wrote the Book of Psalms?" Not one of the eight knew, and but one tried to answer. His answer was: "Goliath of Gath." Is this a fact or a foul thing at our State? If any of our readers can answer, let us hear from them. Up here nobody believes it.

We want to say that we "believe it." We are pretty certain that it is a "fact," and not a "foul thing." We would like now to know if the Oxford Falcon or the Memphis Avalanche or the Picayune can answer the question!

Our Brother in Red, commenting on Bishop Hendrix's phrase—"Men carefully selected for this field"—gives this personal recollection:

The writer, "once upon a time," received a letter from an Eastern friend, which read on this wise: "My son, Blank, can not sustain himself in this Conference, and I have advised him to go to yours and remain until he learns how to preach and then return to this one.

"Sustain himself!" What does that mean? If a man has not "learned to preach," what is there about him to "sustain"? And if a man will not learn, will the Conference continue forever to "sustain" his incompetence, and at every session turn him over to the Bishop to receive an appointment? That thing ought to be stopped!

The Present Need.

Bro. Boland's book—"The Problem of Methodism"—seems to have created quite a stir. The knights, having girded on their armor, are shivering their lances with a chivalric courage that would have been creditable to Cœur de Leon himself; and many of our papers are noisy with the fury of the fray. After one of these theological combats, Mr. Wesley looks like "a thing of shreds and patches," and the "standards" are riddled with "paper bullets of the brain." The great mystery to us is, that the subject of sanctification should always excite such intense ardor. It don't seem to make much difference upon which side a man enrolls himself; he soon is carried away with enthusiasm, and begins to regard all opponents as quite superficial students of this most important subject. Another mystery is, that nearly all the writers on this subject go to Mr. Wesley and the "standards" for a settlement of the question in debate. We have always been taught to look upon the Bible as the only authority on subjects of doctrine and practice in religion. We are perfectly satisfied, from what history has taught us of John Wesley's character, that if he were living to-day, he would greatly modify a good deal that he published to the world one hundred years ago, and that he would utterly banish from his societies some practices which worked admirably in his day. We can see no end to the controversy on the subject of sanctification. When a question is in dispute, and each side sees things so clearly, as is done in this case, there can be no hope of convincing either party. The "problem" can't be brought to a solution. The "unknown quantity" can not be determined.

But we have a problem to propose which we think can be solved by every Christian, and, when solved, will do the church and the world more good than all the essays and sermons and newspaper articles ever published on the subject of sanctification. And, in our humble view, it is the special need of these stirring times. The question, put in its simplest form, is this: What will conversion + consecration do for the church and the world now? There are millions of converted people in the church of God today, but the consecrated people can only be counted by hundreds. The church needs converted and consecrated teachers in her day-schools and Sunday-schools; converted and consecrated parents in her families; converted and consecrated men in her pulpits; converted and consecrated money-makers in her marts of trade; converted and consecrated editors and publishers of her literature; converted and consecrated men and women filling all her offices! The world would be amazed and awed and subdued and saved by one month's exhibition of a converted and consecrated church; where each man and each woman was pursuing the chosen lines of church work under a visible spirit of thorough consecration to God in that work. Where each has "an eye single to God" and his will in the department of life where the lot is cast, the influence that is put forth is incalculable.

The beauty about our problem is, that each can solve it for himself. As preachers and editors and teachers and workers, let us turn the whole church to solve the question: Conversion + consecration?

Dr. Haygood has a knack of saying pertinent things in a most effective way. His last, that has come under our notice, is this: Speaking of a community which had built a $1,200 church with a cash outlay of only $100, and having a meeting in it and getting "shouting happy," he says:

Let such people shout as much and as loudly as they please; it is music in my ears; but not so the shout that has no work back of it.

The College Question Again.

BY REV. J. M. BROWN.

The discussion of the college question indicates that the church is aroused upon the subject of education; and it is to be hoped that this awakening will result in something of permanent benefit to Southern Methodism.

Now, the question is, Which is the better plan, to multiply colleges, or to foster those we already have, so that they may become colleges in fact? To me it seems evident that we have already pursued the former course to our hurt. In several of our Conferences we can see the sad reminders of our former haste to build, while only a few colleges stand as monuments to our success in establishing. The inquiry may be pertinent: Why have we failed so often? After looking fairly at all the reasons, we can find only one that is satisfactory, and that is, the number has exceeded the demand. If we had projected more academies and high schools and fewer colleges, doubtless, we would have done more in the interest of sound education. To establish a college is quite an undertaking—ordinarily, it is not done in a few years.

To begin with, we must have one of two things, and better if we can have both: We must have either an imperative demand, not otherwise met, that will assure something more than a sustaining patronage; or an endowment that guarantees permanency. When we have either or both of these, a patronizing public will be made to feel that the enterprise is not a failure, and we may reasonably look for establishment in the future, for the life of a college ought to be a long one. The work is not done when the building and equipments are in place, nor yet when the endowment is secured and the faculty installed. The mission of a college is to work on and grow on through the ages, constantly increasing in apparatus, libraries and other facilities, so that they may become centers of learning where students may congregate in hundreds, and where scholars may resort for purposes of special investigation. The great schools of the world have grown to be what they are, and they prosper to-day because they are backed by the prestige of age as well as money and other resources. If a college is to grow, it must have within itself and surrounding it the means of growth. Just as a plant, it must have proper conditions of soil and atmosphere, as well as vitality within. Within itself it must have the teaching ability and the facilities for learning which make it equal to the task of educating not only the boys or girls who attend it, but the people at large. For it is a fact, demonstrated beyond all doubt, that the people need to be educated as to the nature and worth of a college. Talk to many of our people about sending a son or daughter to college, and they will refer you to half a dozen schools that have sprung up like so many mushrooms, where the year's expenses will be a few dollars less, and the children much sooner advanced to the point of graduation. They fail to see that these institutions—which are nothing more than academies and high schools in reality, though called colleges and universities—are operating injuriously in two ways: first, they propose a copartnership to the parent for the deception of the pupil, who is made to believe that he is receiving "college training," which the school is unable to give. The parent, in turn, is deceived because he thinks he has really educated his child, and that a diploma from one of these so-called colleges is equal to one from the Vanderbilt or Yale. In the second place, they put themselves forward as the rivals of the college proper, and—by contracting the curriculum so that it may be compassed in a short time and accommodated to the ability of ordinary teachers, and accompanying this with a reduction of charges—they force the college, whose mission is to raise rather than lower the standard of scholarship, to make the same compromise which they have made, or pay the penalty in loss of patronage. I honor the men who are faithfully toiling in the preparatory schools of the country. Let the American Rugbys be multiplied, but let us remember that we can not have an Oxford in every Conference.

The outside condition necessary to the growth of a college is an appreciative public—a people who have received the impress of the college; have felt something of its educative power, by reason of the fact that its leavening influence has gone through all ranks of society, and has elevated the people around it in proportion to the elevation of its own aims and its own dignity. Our need is not so many "small colleges" with a sickly existence, and whose diplomas are worthless as evidences of scholarship, but institutions that may rival the best, whose diplomas can only be won by protracted and severe study and, when won, will be an introduction among scholars anywhere. Far better is it to have one great college—equal to the demands, with five hundred students—than five small ones with a hundred each. But these great schools are the work and growth of generations. Yale, Harvard and Princeton have been working and growing for a long time, and in the coming years there will be more room for more growth.

"Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Let us carry on the work of endowment so nobly begun. Let the coming years witness the accretions of strength and the enlargement of growth; but let us build no more until the need is clearly seen.

BASTROP, Louisiana.

It Is God Who Gives Power to Get Wealth.

BY J. H. WALKER, D. D.

Nearly all of our young men want to be rich, and some of them who may read this article will be. Some of them will possess from one to five hundred thousand dollars, and possibly more. Some of the young women who may read these lines will preside over splendid households, and live surrounded by all the elegancies and luxuries which wealth and taste can procure.

No country on earth holds forth such rewards to intelligent and diligent enterprise. The resources of the vast and magnificent valley of the Mississippi have as yet been but quite partially developed. Hundreds of millions are to be homed in it. The productions of its fertile soil will be multiplied manifold. Its vast marshes, with soil of exhaustless fertility, shall be drained, reclaimed to the plow, and smile with golden and fleecy harvest, and beautified with countless homes. The net-work of railways, the improvement of the waterways, and the lines of ocean steamers sailing to all lands and ports, will pour untold wealth into this vast valley. In view of these, by no means overstated, probabilities of the near future, we should be called to a serious consideration of the religious aspects and responsibilities of wealth.

The Book admonishes us to remember that "it is God who giveth us power to get wealth." Men, for want of intelligent consideration, are often tempted to say: "My power, and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth;" and God is not recognized as having had anything to do with its accumulation. Such men seem not to recognize God's providence in bestowing the possibilities and helping with his favor in accumulating wealth. Often no gratitude is expressed, and no manifested admission is made that they are in any way responsible to God for the use they make of their wealth.

Our chief hope in writing this article is to benefit the young; but we hope its lesson will not be altogether lost to the old.

God gives the financial mind. This is as much a gift of God as genius for poetry, oratory, painting or mathematics, or any other gift by which men can rise to power and commanding influence. It is quite apparent that many have these various exalted and shining endowments who have no "power to get wealth." Without this financial aptitude and capacity, few or none in the legitimate course of business will ever grow rich. God gives the health and continues the life, without which it is impossible to accumulate wealth by legitimate means. God also gives the favoring seasons that fill our barns with plenty; that increase the public store, and pour prosperity into all the honest channels of trade. God must and does administer his great and beneficent laws on which seasons, harvests, navigation and general prosperity depend. It matters not to the question of our obligations whether God's administration is a personal superintendence or is the outcome of a wisely calculated prearrangement—the result and our obligations are just the same. Thus it appears that the power to get wealth is dependent on the endowments and smiles of a favoring Providence.

In the accumulation of wealth God should be remembered in order that we may feel grateful, and render the thankfulness and service due to him for his unmerited and unceasing favors. It is true that wealth, like other gifts, is often perverted and abused, and for this reason the possessors of wealth are often cautioned and warned against the dangers and temptations to which wealth subjects its possessors; but wealth is not to be regarded by reason, any more than it is by revelation, as an evil in itself, or its accumulation or its possession a sin, for God has created all the sources of wealth in the mines, the fisheries, the forest, and fertile lands.

If God gives us power to get wealth, it follows as an inevitable sequence that it should be honestly gotten, and that God should be recognized in the uses to which we put it. No man who has been so endowed and environed as to be able honestly to accumulate more than his personal and domestic needs demand is excusable if he does not do so; otherwise he is burying his talent, hiding his lamp, and withholding influence which he ought to exert. It is a selfish thing to seek the good of none beyond ourselves. The world about us has need of the benefits of all the gifts and possibilities God has bestowed. It is a sin of omission not to use God's gifts for the glory of his name and the well-being of his creatures.

As we should be grateful for every gift whereby we may excel and have power to confer blessings and exert an influence for good, so we should be grateful for the power to get wealth, not only as a source of comfort to ourselves, but of usefulness and help to others. This would, no doubt, be the common state of feeling if our hearts were in a right state; but, alas! they are too often in a wrong state, so that prosperity often fills our hearts with self-adoring pride and ungrateful forgetfulness of God. Prosperity does by no means (as it always should) increase our thankfulness, our humility, our tenderness and benevolence towards our fellow-men; but too frequently, alas! wealth seems to produce haughtiness, hardness and remorseless selfishness. How imperative, then, is it that we should remember it is God who giveth us power to get wealth! What grand opportunities have financially successful men to honor the Giver of all good, to lessen the sum of human woe, and leave monuments to benevolence that shall speak for them and of them with heart-touching eloquence forever!

There are many and great demands: we need endowed colleges; we need more and better churches; we need more missionaries; and in many stations, circuits and districts our pastors need a more generous support for themselves and their straitened and self-denying families.

NEW ORLEANS, Louisiana.

Notes.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is to contribute to Mr. Leland's "Dictionary of Americanisms" a list of words, with many interesting remarks on the folk-lore, superstition, and language of Massachusetts.

The most surprising thing we have seen lately is this, recorded in the Presbyterian, of August 25:

It is certainly a surprise to learn that in South Africa there are two hundred and twenty-three Presbyterian congregations, numbering 54,320 communicants, and controlling five colleges—one each at Cape Town, Wellington, Burghersdorf, in Cape Colony, and two at Bloemfontein, in the Orange Free State.

"The seed growth, we know not how," is certainly applicable to that case. Over fifty thousand Presbyterians and five colleges in South Africa is an astonishing statement.

A correspondent writes from a circuit in the Mississippi Conference to say this: "In 1885 our preacher received $200; in 1886, $200; in 1887, $228 50. What he has received up to date this year I do not know. He has a family of four besides himself. The circuit has 438 members." The preacher in charge of that circuit, writing one day earlier than the above member of his charge, says: "We have had four protracted meetings and good revivals at each meeting. Two-thirds of the membership professed a blessing." What's the matter there? Three hundred "blest Christians" paying their pastor $200 a year is a sight to see! They must be "as poor as Job's turkey."

The preacher who neglects to study his text, and goes into the pulpit in the hope that the Spirit will come to his rescue and save him from failure, will be a disappointed man. God's gifts are bestowed according to the rule, "grace for grace," and the preacher who takes an unstudied text into the pulpit, and then cries to the Spirit to show him its meaning, is endeavoring to get a blessing outside of the rule. The old saying is true at this point: "The Lord helps those who help themselves." The Spirit's office is to guide us into the truth, not to force it upon us. Diligent preparation for preaching is the only sort of preparation which the Spirit will honor with his guiding wisdom.

The Wesleyans in England have a way of doing things that, if done on this side of the water, would cause many of our people to "hold up holy hands" in wrath and horror. Take, for instance, this fact:

Of the 109 candidates for the Wesleyan ministry in England, examined by committees, 55 were refused. Of the 54 accepted, 43 were for home work, 10 for missions, and 1 for Wales. All the approved were recommended for training in the theological colleges.

We knew a committee-man twelve years ago to make an unfavorable report on two candidates, and he has not heard the last of it yet. As for "recommending them for training in the theological colleges," why, that is simply a waste of time!

Every pastor will agree with us in the statement that there are far too many inactive people in our churches. The call of the Master, the call of the Holy Spirit, the call of the church, is everywhere heard for more, and more earnest workers. The church needs more than an exhibition of consistent living in her members. But, then, the question arises, Can an inactive Christian be a consistent one? Do not the very terms of our profession demand an outlay of earnestness to bring us up to the plane of consistent living? It occurs to us, that if we examine the reasons for our inaction in the Christian life and work, we may, to our surprise, find them to be nothing more nor less than excuses for downright laziness.

Personals.

We call attention to the "news from the work" this week, especially to the letters of Bros. Sanders and Galloway. Read and ponder and pray for the Spirit in your work, brother.

At a competitive examination for the appointment of a cadet to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, held in Monroe, La., recently, we are glad to see that our young friend, Thomas S. Borden, son of the late Rev. J. Lane Borden, passed the best examination, and received the recommendation of the committee.

The Methodist congregation at Jackson, Miss., through their treasurer, Hon. H. H. Hines, sent to the editor, last week, a check for $22 30, to be applied to the relief of the "storm sufferers" in Louisiana. A generous act gracefully done! The money has been turned over to the proper authorities.

C. H. Parker has retired from the position of editor-in-chief of the Picayune, having been appointed one of the tax collectors in this city.

Prof. Charles H. Cooke has been elected president of the Industrial Institute and College of Mississippi, in place of Dr. R. W. Jones, who has accepted the presidency of Emory and Henry College, Virginia.

The foundation-stone of a suitable memorial chapel at Epworth, John Wesley's birthplace, will be laid September 20.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, of Whitworth College, gave us a welcome call last week. He represents the prospects of Whitworth for the next session as very flattering.

We are pained to hear that Bro. Wimberly, our pastor at Pinquemine, is quite ill with malarial fever. We trust that he may soon recover his wonted health and vigor.

The article by Mark Guy Pearse, on the first page, is intended for the preachers specially. It touches upon a very serious matter.

Dr. L. G. Perkins, of East Feliciana parish, has been elected superintendent of the Insane Asylum at Jackson, La., in place of Dr. J. W. Jones, resigned.

Be sure to read the two articles, on the second page, on ministerial education. They finish what "Onesiphorus" has to say on that subject for the present. And be sure to give the subject a good thinking over from beginning to end. It is decidedly the most important subject before the church today.

George James Stevenson, the Wesleyan correspondent of many papers in this country, died August 16.

We had a call a few days since from Rev. Prof. P. A. Rodriguez, en route from the City of Mexico to Nashville. He was recently elected to fill the chair of Spanish literature in Vanderbilt University, and is also engaged as the translator and editor of Spanish books for our Mexican Mission. He spent Sunday in our city, and was much pleased with our part of the great world.

The yellow fever in Florida has been steadily increasing at several points, and in Jacksonville has assumed the proportions of a fearful epidemic. A good number of trained nurses have been sent thither from this city. There is now no hope of abatement until the disease has used up all the material, or a severe frost shall come; which latter must necessarily be late in the year. There is no suspicion of a case of yellow fever here.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. Amos Kendall, presiding elder of the Aberdeen district, North Mississippi, writes, under date of September 3, as follows: "More than five hundred conversions on the Aberdeen district up to date, and the good work still going on gloriously."

—Rev. T. W. Lewis writes from Carrollton, Miss., September 6: "Carroll county has just voted on the whisky question, and gone dry by 321 majority. The ladies worked hard, and many of the colored people voted on the moral side. This county has been dry two years and will be dry two more."

—Rev. Robert Randle, presiding elder of the Homer district, Louisiana Conference, writes, September 5: "The work is reasonably prosperous in all things and still improving. Health is good or, maybe, better than usual at this time of the year. Crops only tolerably good and being gathered."

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R., Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

Church Extension.

OUR LOAN FUNDS

Are growing steadily all the time, not only by accretions of interest, but by additional subscriptions and collections of old ones.

To the Kavanaugh Fund new gifts are still being made, and old notes and subscriptions are still being paid.

We have of late had quite a revival of interest in the Marvin Fund, and it will most probably equal the Kavanaugh Fund in amount within a year.

The subscribers to the Paine and Harris Funds have learned the step and march up and pay their installments as they fall due with a regularity and promptness that is encouraging.

The Green-McFerrin people have not promised much yet, but are redeeming the pledges made with commendable punctuality.

To the Andrew Fund over $2,200 have been added in notes, cash and subscriptions since our annual meeting in April last, and there is more to follow.

CHURCHES AND PARSONAGES HELPED.

During the first five months of our last fiscal year we helped by donations only one church, giving it $600, and by loan six churches, granting them $4,800. For the same period of this fiscal year we have given to ten churches $2,900; and loaned to fifteen $8,450; and are ready to pay to eight others the $2,550 in loans promised them.

At this period of our last fiscal year we had only paid $250 as a donation to one parsonage, and had made no loans to parsonages. To date this year we have paid in donations $475 to five parsonages, and are ready to pay $525 to others, to which it has been promised. We have also paid in loans to four parsonages $700, and have ready to pay to others the $800 promised them.

THE COLLECTIONS DA ASSESSMENT.

Our brief appeal of August 17 seems to have excited interest in the minds of some of our friends. Most of the church papers to which we have sent it have printed it, and some of them made editorial mention of it, all of which is duly appreciated by us.

One friend writes us not to be discouraged, and another expresses the hope that our score will prove unreal. Thanks to these friends—but the fact remains that our collections on the assessment must be emphasized; that the preachers and people must wake up to the realization that we are to have the whole assessment from each Conference, or be embarrassed in our work. Nothing short of $40,000 will enable the General Board to do what it undertook at its last annual meeting in April. Nor did we undertake too much. Only about three-sevenths of the applications before us were granted. Many others needed and deserved the help they asked but we could not give it just because we did not have it, and we feared to promise lest we could not pay. But this $40,000 should and can be paid. Eleven hundred churches and parsonages have been helped in six years, and if the churches will rally to our aid, we will make the record of this year the best of the seven.

Let the preachers and people work unitedly, intelligently and persistently, and we will see greater things than ever before.

This is a tractate in three parts: Jesus His Own Proof, The Laws of Nature, Correspondence with Spinoza. The first part was published in the Texas Advocate in 1883. The second part is a sermon preached in McKendree Church, February, 1883. The third part is a controversy between Dr. Kelley and a lawyer, and published in the American, 1885. The whole makes a very interesting discussion of a very interesting subject.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN OF 1876. A scrap-book chronicle; compiled by an editor of that period. By the author of "The Battle of Bletigheim." 12 mo., paper, pp. 163. Price, 50 cents. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

Literary Notes.

George Eliot's first arrangement with the publisher of "Romola" was for no less a sum, it is said, than ten thousand guineas. "As that is so very large a figure," he said, "it must run it through fifteen numbers of the Cornhill." "No," she said, "it must finish in twelve numbers, or the artistic effect of the story will be lost. I quite understand the necessity for its prolongation from a commercial point of view, so we'll say seven thousand guineas instead of the ten thousand." And seven thousand guineas was accordingly paid for the copyright. Three thousand guineas seems a large sum to give up for an artistic scruple or even a grain; but she did it.

Gen. Sheridan's article entitled "From Gravelotte to Sedan," to appear in the November number of Scribner's Magazine, is the first and only contribution ever made by Gen. Sheridan to a periodical and covers a part of his career which it was impossible for any other pen than his own to record. It is well-known that Gen. Sheridan had kept careful notes during the whole of his European experiences; and the article will be of an interest which even the extraordinary circumstances surrounding it would hardly lead the public to anticipate. Sheridan's position as a non-combatant observer of a great war was, in fact, without a precedent. Invited officially to accompany the German headquarters, he watched the contest from the closest point of view; and his recognized position among the foremost military men of his time opened to him relations of very unusual intimacy with the remarkable group of men about him; especially with Bismarck and Von Moltke. The picture he gives is as vivid as the situation is unusual. The article is written with the greatest spirit and force, in the concise and unpretentious but peculiarly clear style which Sheridan had in common with Grant and, indeed, with most great military leaders.

Dodd, Mead & Co. give the following figures as the sales of E. P. Roe's works in the cloth-covered editions: "Barriers Burned Away," in its sixty-ninth thousand; "What Can She Do?" in its forty-fifth thousand; "Opening a Chestnut Burr;" in its sixty-ninth thousand; "Near to Nature's Heart," in its fifty-fourth thousand; "From Jest to Earnest," in its sixty-first thousand; "A Knight of the Nineteenth Century," in its fifty-fourth thousand; "A Face Illumined," in its fifty-third thousand; "A Day of Fate," in its fifty-second thousand; "Without a Home," in its sixtieth thousand; "His Sombre Rivals," in its forty-seventh thousand; "A Young Girl's Wooing," in its forty-second thousand; "An Original Belle," in its thirty-fifth thousand; "Driven Back to Eden," in its twenty-sixth thousand; "Nature's Serial Story," in its twenty-second thousand; "He Fell in Love with His Wife," in its thirty-fifth thousand; "The Earth Trembled," in its thirty-fifth thousand. One of the last things that Mr. Roe wrote was a sketch of his own life for Lippincott, which will be entitled, "A Native Author Called Roe." This is an expression which Matthew Arnold used in his last paper on America, and though not used in a precisely complimentary way, it was taken up by Mr. Roe without flinching.

Opening at Centenary.

MR. EDITOR: In spite of the terrible and widely destructive cyclone and the two weeks' rain and the yellow fever scare and the bagging trust, all of which have been greatly against us, we have had a good opening at Centenary. Quite a number of fine young men in the collegiate and preparatory departments are already with us, and many more are coming. If we can make the excellent men we desire of half the number we have, we shall do a good work and greatly bless the church and the world for all coming time.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Our Young People.

THE HOUSEHOLD PET.

BY SALLIE V. DU BOIS.

Darling little Mabel, shouting in her glee,
Tossing grandma's knitting, striding papa's knee,
Was there e'er beside her one so dear as she?

Merry, flitting sunbeam, climbing everywhere,
Chasing fleeting shadows, falling down the stair,
Scaring grandma speechless in her easy chair.

Ah, the heavenly Shepherd marked the fragile flower,
Watched it thrive in beauty with each passing hour,
Bade it bloom perennial in the heavenly bower.

And an angel's whisper, softly breathed, and low,
Entered in the household, said the child must go;
Hearts in burdened anguish wrestled 'neath the blow.

Silence marks the household, footsteps falter grow,
Forms are bowed in sorrow 'neath the sudden blow;
Yet their darling Mabel is more blest, they know.

An Appreciated Gift.

On Sunday, August 5, little Carrie Terry, daughter of Mr. W. D. and Mrs. Jennie Boswell Terry, came into the Methodist Church, at Terry, Miss., and presented a beautiful silver communion service in honor of her mother. She said that she, herself, was not a member of any church, but that she loved the Lord and wanted to be a Methodist like her mother. She added that the silver cup had been presented to her mother, on the day she graduated, by the Rev. Dr. H. F. Johnson.

The interesting incident affected all present most deeply, and caused the unanimous adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we accept the gift and return thanks.

Resolved, That we appreciate the present most highly, not more for its intrinsic value than the motive which prompted the child-heart of the giver.

Resolved, That this church en masse go to God for this little girl, and beseech him to give her of his Holy Spirit, that she may turn many to righteousness and shine as the stars for ever and ever.

Resolved, That this sacramental service shall be named for the giver, and called "The Carrie Terry Communion Service."

Resolved, That this notice, with the resolutions, be placed upon our church record, and one copy be sent to the little girl, and one to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

A School Legend.

BY EDWARD R. SHAW.

The teacher of our school was called from the room one morning by a man who drove up to the door.

"Study your lessons, scholars, while I'm gone," he said. "I shall be back in five or six minutes."

I was in the A, B, C class, and sat upon a low bench. My only work was to be called up three times a day to read to the teacher what were then called the a, b, abs. The page of my book was filled with words like these: ab, eb, ib, ob, and so on. Each one was to be spelled and then pronounced. There were no pictures that I could look at and think about, and the school hours were very dull and very uninteresting to a little boy. Of course I could not study, as the larger pupils could, but I did my best to imitate them, and looked steadily on my book.

For the first two minutes after the teacher went out there was brisk study; then the pupils began to look around and to whisper. Some of the larger boys dared even to leave their seats. One of them slipped away from his desk, came around, and sat down on the low bench beside me.

Why a larger boy should take any interest in me I did not then know. But I have since noticed that larger boys do take interest in smaller boys, and show them many bits of knowledge they would never otherwise learn, for their parents or grown-up men would never think to teach them such trifles.

Well, the larger boy who had seated himself beside me, took my book from me, and turned to some reading in the very first part of it, which I had never noticed.

"There's something," he said, pointing to a long word printed in capital letters, "that you'll find in every book. There it was like this:

PREFACE.

Then, pointing to each letter, he read out of that word a very funny story. It ran, "P-eter R-ice E-ats F-ishes A-nd C-atches E-els."

And when he had read through the word in that way, he began at the other end, and read backwards a still funnier story:

"Eels Catch Alligators, Fish Eat Raw Potatoes."

He read it but once, and then slipped back to his desk, for the teacher was coming.

Then I read it over. I had not the least trouble to remember it. I do not know how many times I read it over that day; but a great many. Every time I was tired or wished recess would come I would read over the story of Peter Rice. And I read it many a day afterward. It never lost its charm.

Whether that large boy really knew he was doing a kindness, or whether his coming to my seat grew out of the feeling of comradeship which a big boy has for a little boy, I never really knew. I half suspect, though, it was the latter. But one thing is clear to me. From that morning I began to learn to read. I could see that "P" was a part of the word Peter, and that "R" was a part of the word Rice, and I got an idea of their sounds, and was no longer misled by their names.

When I grew to be a large boy, I told the story to a small boy, just, of course, as it had been told to me. He, I have no doubt, told it to others, and they to many others, and in that way the story is going yet.

The story, though, did not start with the boy who told me, for he had been told by an older boy; and that boy, when small, by a boy who was older than he. So you see the story or legend of Peter Rice is a very old one, and runs away back to the time when little boys first had books in school.

When I grew to be a man, and visited widely separated places in many different States, I had some curiosity to know whether, in the schools of those places, the legend of Peter Rice was being handed down from older boys to younger ones. It was still being told, I found.

Thousands upon thousands then, you see, know it; yet this is the first time, so far as I know, that it has been told in print.—St. Nicholas, for September.

Brotherless Girls.

A brotherless girl may have a languid air, a simpering expression, and the habit of using long words where short ones would be better, but anyone who can boast of from two to eight brothers is sure to have her little affectations well weeded out. The girl whose brother is one of her best friends will not make eyes, nor drawl, nor give her photograph to an acquaintance of yesterday, nor answer advertisements whose object is "mutual improvement" She will understand that there are some sort of innocent sounding slang that ought never to be used, and she will remember that the women who wish to retain the reverence of men should decide how little slang they can possibly get along with and not use a quarter of that. She will learn that men, good and bad alike, treat a silly woman civilly to her face and pronounce her an awful goose behind her back.

A great deal is written about selfish and depraved boys who are ruined for life by the injudicious fondling received from their mothers and sisters, and it may be that, to a youth of naturally evil tendencies, petting and adulation are almost as bad as snubbing and scolding; but even a bad boy has a strong sense of justice, a love of fair play, and a willingness to stand up for those who stand up for him. Any girl who really interests herself in her 10, or 12, or 14-year-old brother, who acquaints herself with his ideas, furthers his plans, shows that she takes a genuine pleasure in his society, will find not only that her influence over him is daily increasing, but also that his wholesome, practical and sensible way of looking at things is a decided benefit to her.—Toronto Globe.

THE DAUGHTER.

My little daughter grows apace;
Her dolls are now quite out of date;
It seems that I must take their place.
We have become such friends of late.
We might be ministers of state,
Discussing subjects of great peril,
Such strange new questionings dilate
The beauty of my little girl.

How tall she grows! What subtle grace
Doth every movement animate;
With garments gathered for the race
She stands, a goddess slim and straight.
Young Artemis, when she was eight,
Among the myrtle-bloom and laurel—
I doubt if she could more than mate
The beauty of my little girl.

The baby passes from her face,
Leaving the lines more delicate,
Till in her features I can trace
Her mother's smile, serene, sedate.
'Tis something at the hands of fate
To watch the onward years unfurl
Each line which goes to consecrate
The beauty of my little girl.

ENVOY.

Lord! hear me, as in prayer I wait.
Thou gives all; guard thou my pearl;
And, when thou countest at the Gate
Thy jewels, count my little girl.
—Chambers' Journal.

The Comforts of Staying at Home.

Those who think it is hard that they can not go to the country, the mountains, or the seaside, but must spend the hot season in the crowded city, might derive solace in enumerating the many annoyances and vexations they escape, but which have to be endured by the envied ones who can go away. Many there are, to be sure, to whom a change of a week or two is almost indispensable—a change of some sort or almost any sort, but a vast number go from custom, fashion, or yearn to go, who do not require any more change than their weekly routine brings them at home. Those who stay at home escape the smoke and cinders and dust of the crowded cars. They will not in the great "mountain houses" and seaside hotels be tucked into little rooms like the bunks of a packet ship, whose walls are covered with the cheapest paper or none at all, without a closet or wardrobe, and too small for a trunk: with one window, without a screen, or perhaps with only a piece of netting, through which gnats and other pests find their way, and then sting at their will; with no hot and cold streams of cleansing and refreshing water, but only a meagre pitcher with not enough water for ordinary cleanliness; with noises, too, to be heard all night—noises of all sorts, of people laughing and singing till after midnight, regardless of anyone else, of babies crying, of couples disputing (loud-voiced) through thin partitions, of belated revelers returning down long corridors with careless feet in the small hours, of doors slamming, of teams arriving, of bell-boys running to answer calls for ice water, and of the watchman striding along every half-hour or so to see that the great wooden trap is safe still from the flames that one day or other are sure to devour it; with the stifling heat in the little rooms worse than in tenement houses; no quiet, no retirement, no peace, indeed no comfort. At home, in the city, there is often more quiet, with other and numerous comforts of home: the parks, the boating, and driving and little excursions. You who feel like prisoners at home, ponder somewhat over these things and be content.—Exchange.

HOME.—One is forever hearing of men and women who go away from home to have a good time; whereas, the proper place for good times is right in the home. The ways of having them are as many as the sands of the sea; but there is one reliable method for starting a "time," and that is to do something to please another member of the family rather than yourself. A little exhibition of unselfish affection, a favor extended, a reasonable indulgence granted, may start a train of events which will brighten a whole day and make an evening merry. It involves less trouble and far more fun than a pic-nic.

The gospel is no afterthought, but the forethought of God. God sees the end from the beginning. All things in nature and grace are working out one grand scheme which God before the creation of heaven and earth designed.—Rev. C. Neil.

Extraordinary, but nevertheless true. We refer to the announcement of B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., in which they propose to show working and energetic men how to make from $75 to $250 a month above expenses.

HUNTLEY—Mrs. W. H. HUNTLEY, the wife of Rev. W. H. Huntley our pastor at Flora, Madison county, Miss., died on Thursday, August 30. She was the daughter of Rev. Simon P. Richardson, of the Georgia Conference. She had been in bad health for some time, and the disease culminated in typho-malarial fever. Sister Huntley had been living in Flora less than two years, yet she had endeared every one to her. She was the friend of all classes, and devoted herself especially to the Sunday-school, to the missionary cause, indeed, to every enterprise of the church. She will be most sadly missed by the whole community. Bright, winning, cultured, capable, she had an encouraging word and a helping hand for every good cause—and for everybody associated with her. Her stricken husband is nearly crazed with grief. She left four very small children. Oh! how sad and desolate will be the parsonage home without the mother and the wife!

Rev. R. S. Woodward and myself participated in the funeral services. Bro. Woodward knew her from childhood, and spoke feelingly of her own worth and that of her family. There was scarcely a dry eye in the large congregation, and many of her friends were sobbing with grief. A very large procession followed her remains to their last resting-place. The whole community seemed desirous of expressing their grief and deep sympathy. I bespeak the prayers of the church for our deeply bereaved brother and his motherless babes.

C. G. ANDREWS.

SIMMONS—JAMES W. SIMMONS was the son of W. W. and Mary Simmons, and was born in Attala county, Miss., August 22, 1856, and died at his residence in Sallis, Miss., June 22, 1888. Bro. Simmons professed religion when quite young, and joined the Methodist Church, but was only a formal, orderly member, until about five years before his death, when he was made alive to a sense of duty.

He was soon elected Sunday-school superintendent, in which office he lived until the day of his death. He was a spiritually minded man, and he carried his full force into the Sunday-school work, and the conversion of souls was the fruit of his labor. He seemed to feel divinely called to that work, and he was certainly divinely qualified for it. He was true to all his pretensions and faithful to all things committed to his care.

The church has lost one of its best members; the community, a good citizen, and his Christian wife a loving husband. When he saw that he must die he arranged all his business as he wished, and then said, "I am ready; God's will be done." And in a few minutes his spirit was gone to the God who gave it. We indeed mourn for him, but not without hope. May the hand of divine Providence guide and protect his bereaved and patient Christian wife till we all meet again!

W. W. WILLIAMS.

SCIPLE—MARTHA A. SCIPLE, daughter of John and Helen Sciple, was born in Macon, Miss., February 8, 1851, and died July 22, 1888.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1881, and from that time until her death she was a faithful, devoted, sincere Christian. From all that we can learn she was devoted and loyal to the church of her choice, always letting her light shine before men. She was always in her place in the Sunday-school and in her attendance upon church services. Her zeal and love for the sanctuary was such that, no matter what the state of the weather might be, she was always at the post of duty. Sweet-spirited and modest, she manifested great concern for the spiritual welfare of those around her. Her greatest solicitude, perhaps, was shown in behalf of her own relatives who were unconverted; and just before her death she whispered to her father that he was not yet ready to die. May the God of all comfort, bless and sustain all that loved her, and especially we pray that God will sanctify the death of this amiable Christian daughter to the conversion and salvation of the unconverted members of the family, that they may all meet her again upon the shores of eternal deliverance.

W. G. BACKUS, Pastor.

WATTS—The following resolutions were adopted in memory of JOSIE and ALONZO WATTS:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom and power, to take from our midst our young friends, Josie and Alonzo Watts; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, then, young friends and Sabbath schoolmates, do hereby tender our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved parents and relatives; that while we deplore and feel their loss, we know 'tis their eternal gain to live up where the weary rest from pain.

CHARLIE DANSEY, for Com.

BENNETT—CASSANDRA M. BENNETT (nee Pickett), was born in Fairfield district, near Winnsborough, S. C., September, 19, 1810, and died near Little Springs, Franklin county, Miss., July 18, 1888, lacking but a short time of being seventy-seven years old. During her life she was married twice; the last time to Bro. E. D. Bennett, who still survives.

Sister Bennett was the mother of ten children, all of whom are gone to the better land, except two, who yet remain, with their aged father, to mourn the loss of their dear mother. The latter years of her life were years of affliction, but with all that she retained the pure Christian faith. Her life would have been a blessing to any circuit, and a help to any preacher. Her home was a preacher's, and she a friend and mother.

The name of "Grandma Bennett" is precious to all who knew her, and especially to the preachers who have visited her home. Many things could be mentioned to show her fidelity to God and his cause; but it is sufficient to say that she lived a consistent Christian, a loyal Methodist, and a worker in the cause of Christ.

May God grant grace to the husband, children and grandchildren of our departed sister and mother, that they may so live as to reach the land where parting shall be no more, but all shall be peace, love and joy!

M. L. BURTON.

WALKNERS—About 6 o'clock, Friday evening, August, 24, MR. J. B. WALKNERS was in bathing, and on attempting to dive he slipped some way and fell head-foremost into the water where it was very shallow, and broke his neck. He was dragged out by a friend that was with him, and carried to the home of his parents, which was near by.

Strange to say, he was not dead, and when he was taken out of the water and asked if he was hurt, he replied that he was badly strangled. He was able to talk until about twelve o'clock Saturday; but his lower extremities were paralyzed. He lived in this condition until about four o'clock Saturday evening, when he bade adieu to this earth, and went to try the realities of another world.

Mr. Walkners was about twenty-two years old, hale and hearty, with his future hopes and ambitions just dawning upon him. He had gone to the schoolhouse where Mr. Edward Spears was teaching school, to witness the closing exercises of the week, engaged in hearty games with the scholars, and went straight home from there, and received his fatal accident a few minutes later.

Young men, let us take warning from this. We are now enjoying good health, but we may be called into eternity before to-morrow night. Let us have our lamps trimmed and lighted, for we "know not the day nor the hour when the Lord cometh."

J. B. K.

LANIER—EZRA, infant son of J. B. G. Lanier and wife, was born July 7, 1887, and fell asleep in Jesus, June 9, 1888. The little sunbeam was suffered to remain to brighten and cheer the home only a few months, and has been removed to the treasure-house on high as an attraction to those who remain behind. It is sad to think of sweet, helpless and innocent babyhood, stung with the physical pangs of sickness and death; taken from fond mothers' breasts, wrapped in the gloomy swaddlings of the ground But oh! how sweetly and tenderly God's messengers guard the ashes of their precious little forms. The only sorrow that thrills our souls is that they are taken from the embrace of earthly affection and society. Could we all be as pure and safe as the little buds of immortality, then all these broken ties would be adjusted in eternal friendship.

May God comfort the bereaved family and keep them unto life eternal!

C. H. OWEN.

Warm weather often causes extreme tired feeling and debility, and in the weakened condition of the system diseases arising from impure blood are liable to appear. To gain strength, to overcome disease, and to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

NOT OFTEN QUOTED.—After having served you between sixty and seventy years, with dim eyes and shaking hands, let me add one word more. I am pained for you who are rich in this world. Do you give all you can? "Nay; may I not do what I will with my own?" you reply. Here lies your mistake. It is not your own. It can not be unless you are Lord of heaven and earth. Who gave you this addition to your fortune? Do you not know that God intrusted you with that money for his work? "But I must provide for my children." Certainly. But how? By making them rich? Then you will probably ruin them. "What shall I do; then?" Lord, speak to their hearts (Who can not see the impassioned old man stretching out his trembling hands to heaven as he thus pleads?), else I speak in vain! Leave them enough to live on, not in idleness, but in honest industry. And if you have no children, upon what principle can you leave a groat behind more than enough to bury you? What does it signify whether you leave ten thousand pounds or ten thousand boots and shoes? Haste, haste! Send all you have before you to the better world!—John Wesley.

Children Starving to Death

On account of their inability to digest food, will find a most marvelous food and remedy in Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. Very palatable and easily digested. Dr. S. W. COHEN, of Waco, Texas, says: "I have used your Emulsion in Infantile wasting with good results. It not only restores wasted tissues, but gives strength and increases the appetite. I am glad to use such a reliable article."

Theories in Regard to the Esquimaux.

Why human beings have been found living in this lone land of desolation has given rise to no little theorizing and speculation, the bulk of which seems to be that they are cruelly forced to abide here by the supposed greater strength of the savages to the south of them. My own ideas are with the "respectable minority," which believes that they are found in these regions for the same reasons that we find the reindeer, the musk-ox, and the walrus; that is, it suits their peculiar temperament and disposition better than any other climate or condition possibly could, and they are no more forced into the frigid zone by other savages than the animals named are held there by the antelope, buffalo, or caribou of lower latitudes. When they are taken from their hyperborean home they are as restless to return as the castaways in their own land are to get back to civilization, and singular enough, despite all their desolate surroundings, they are the most happy and contented race, savage or civilized, in the four corners of the earth; although it is the coldest corner. The tale told by Captain Hall, of the deep longing of the sick and sinking Esquimaux, Kudlago, to see his land of ice and snow before he died, and his joy on being carried to the deck of the Arctic-bound ship when the first iceberg was sighted, is as pathetic as any ever told of the return of Arctic refugees to their land of flowers and forests; and clearly shows that patriotism and love of home is circumscribed by no parallels of latitude nor influenced by climatic conditions. Wherever the Indians and Esquimaux have come in contact in an aggressive way, the northern nomads have steadily pushed back their copper-colored neighbors, and the only places where they—the Esquimaux—have penetrated far inland to reside, is along the Yukon and Kouskoquim rivers of Alaska. Here they have elbowed out the Indian for some hundreds of miles, and find a luxuriant living on the swarming fisheries of these streams.—American Magazine.

GREAT THINGS.—The greatest cataract in the world is the Falls of Niagara; the largest cavern, the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky; the largest river, the Mississippi—4,000 miles in extent; the largest valley, that of the Mississippi—its area 5,000,000 square miles; the greatest city park, that of Philadelphia, containing 2,700 acres; the greatest grain port, Chicago; the biggest lake, Lake Superior; the largest railroad, the Pacific railroad—over 3,000 miles in extent. The most huge mass of solid iron is Pilot Knob, of Missouri—height, 250 feet; circumference, two miles; the best specimen of Grecian architecture, Girard College, Philadelphia; the largest aqueduct, the Croton, of New York—length, 40½ miles; cost, $12,500,000; the longest bridge, the elevated railroad in Third Avenue, New York—it extends from the Battery to the Harlem river, the whole length of the eastern side of Manhattan Island, seven miles long, or nearly 40,000 feet. The longest bridge over water, however, is the one being constructed in Russia, over the Volga, at a point where the river is nearly four miles wide. The most extensive deposits of anthracite coal in the world are found in the State of Pennsylvania.

CAMPHOR MAKING IN JAPAN.—Camphor is made in Japan in this way: After a tree is felled it is cut up into chips, which are laid in a tub, or a large iron pot partially filled with water and placed over a slow fire. Through holes in the bottom of the tub steam slowly rises, and heating the chips generates oil and camphor. Of course, the tub with the chips has a closely fitting cover. From this cover a bamboo pipe leads to a succession of other tubs with bamboo connections, and the last of these tubs is divided into two compartments, one above the other, the dividing floor being perforated with small holes to allow the water and the oil to pass to the lower compartment. The upper compartment is supplied with a straw layer, which catches and holds the camphor in crystal in deposit as it passes to the cooling process. The camphor is then separated from the straw, packed in wooden tubs, and is ready for market. The oil is used by the natives for illuminating and medical purposes.

Preaching the Gospel.

The only solid way of attracting an audience in church or anywhere else is to give the people something that is worth listening to, something that is food for thought, something that will reach their hearts and do them good. There is nothing men need so much as the gospel; nothing else will be so comforting, helpful, stimulating, soul-satisfying. And now the problem for Christian wisdom is how to convince men of this need and how to present the gospel to them so that they shall experience in the largest measure its blessed effects. The immediate work of the ministry is to lead the unconverted to repentance and faith and to promote the edification of believers. But individuals form communities, constitute society and make up the State. Individual life can not be separated from these complex relations into which men jointly enter. The risen Savior enjoined it upon his followers not only to "preach the gospel to every creature," dealing thus with each individual man, but likewise to "teach all nations," extending thus their commission to men in the mass. Christianity should lead the thought of the world. It should lay its firm grasp upon every form of human activity and subject all to the law of Christ. All commerce and trade, all the business and occupation and intercourse of men fall within the sphere of Christian duty, and should be conducted in a Christian spirit. The various classes of men, and the relations which thence arise between the poor and the rich, employers and the employed, are not to be left to selfish greed and mutual defiance and distrust, but to be brought under the application of the golden rule. There are problems in sociology, problems in political economy, problems in philanthropy and the work of moral reform, problems in popular education, upon which the light of the gospel should be thrown, to which the earnest, patient thought of the best Christian mind should be given and the solution wisely worked out on a basis of Christian principles. The whole wide sphere of human life in all its forms and conditions is to be purified, regenerated and reconstructed under a power emanating from the Bible. The law is to go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and is to rule the world. The dominion under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. And what is needed to bring about this consummation is the labor of men "mighty in the Scriptures," who shall apply the principles of the Word of God to all human affairs and bring the efficacy resident in that word into due operation everywhere.—Prof. W. Henry Green, D. D.

Points from the Pew.

It is sometimes a good thing for the man who stands in the pulpit to know how he looks from the pew. Two remarks made recently by occupants of the pew concerning their respective pastors, may furnish food for profitable thought:

"We did have a good sermon yesterday," said a lady one Monday morning; "it was so plain and practical and helpful. I do wish Dr. —— would preach such sermons oftener. Most of his sermons, I think, would do very well for a congregation of ministers, or before theological students. But they do not seem to fit the ordinary hearers."

Another lady was telling some of her troubles to an acquaintance. "But in it all," she said, "Dr. —— never said a sympathizing, helpful word. He's so different from Dr. ——, who would have said: 'I'm so sorry for you. Just take it to the Lord, and ask his help.' But I never heard Dr. —— say a religious word outside of the pulpit."

Both these ladies are members of large and wealthy churches. The hearers of these two ministers are cultivated people—some might call them aristocratic. But these remarks made in the freedom of conversation with friends, show what their feelings were on the two subjects of preaching and pastoral work. Not everyone might agree with their views, but they furnish, at least, very valuable suggestions. They show how more than these two people feel. They suggest the reason why some ministers, with all their ability and eloquence, fail to build up their churches. "Able and scholarly" sermons are good enough in their place, but do not furnish all that the Christian requires.

Nurses have been sent to Jacksonville, Fla., from this city by the Red Cross Society. There were transported free of charge on the lines along the route.

Cleveland's letter accepting the presidential nomination tendered by his party was made public September 9. It is an emphatic endorsement of the Democratic platform. Adequate protection is guaranteed to the laborer and citizen at home and abroad, and war is declared upon trusts of all kinds, while the urgent need of reform in our revenue system is demonstrated.

San Francisco had a $1,000,000 fire on the ninth instant. About 1,000 men are thrown out of employment.

Forty-nine new cases and seven deaths from yellow fever were reported from Jacksonville, Fla., on the ninth instant.

The appeal of the Jacksonville (Fla.) people for aid is meeting with a hearty response.

A G. A. R. excursion train en route to the national encampment at Columbus collided with a freight train. Four persons killed outright, and twenty-five injured.

In the election, on September 9, Maine went Republican by 20,000 majority.

Congressman Chas. E. Hooker has been renominated by the Democrats of Mississippi.

The Association of Naval Veterans, which was organized in 1887, held its second meeting in Columbus, O., September 10.

The city of Augusta, Ga., was entirely covered with water on the tenth instant.

FOREIGN.

A cyclone struck Cuba near Sagua and reached Havana on September 5. Several vessels foundered off the coast and two sailors were drowned. Many persons were injured. Many street lamps, walls, trees, fences, etc., were blown down and much damage was done to wharves. At Isabella Desaqua forty-three bodies have already washed up on the beach, while the loss of life is estimated at 80. Advices from Cardenas state that all the wharves are destroyed and numberless small crafts sunk. The city is inundated, the water at the statue of Colon being a foot deep. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

A German squadron will go to Athens to salute King George on the twenty-fourth anniversary of his accession. It is probable that Italian, Austrian and other foreign squadrons will do likewise.

A dispatch from Rome says: "The Pope has instructed the papal nuncio at Brussels to aid Cardinal Lavigirie to convoke an international conference on the suppression of slave trading. His holiness promises to send delegates to the conference."

The North German Gazette confirms the reports of an increase in the naval forces in connection with the scheme to build a canal between the North Sea and the Baltic.

The Catholic congress at Freiburg, Prussia, has unanimously adopted resolutions in favor of the temporal power of the Pope, and condemning the Italian penal laws affecting the clergy.

Prince Bismarck sent a telegram to the Pope intimating that the only object of the proposed visit of Emperor William to King Humbert was to make secure the alliance between Germany and Italy, and thereby the addition of half a million men to the German army, and that the papal question was quite outside of it.

A Franco-Russian company has been formed to unite the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea by a canal. Forty million roubles will be required.

One thousand strikers, accompanied by 200 women, marched to Limoges; the women were incensed because of the men's inability to obtain work and threatened to destroy the works. Many of the strikers were wounded.

A dispatch from Zanzibar says the natives again, on September 9, fired upon an Algerine carrying the British flag. Afterwards they allowed an interpreter to land, to whom they declared that they were banded together to resist all whites.

Two earthquake shocks have occurred at Vistizza on the Corinthian Gulf, in Greece, doing great damage.

A decree has been issued ordering the formation of fifteen new batteries and four new companies of Bosnians to increase the Austrian army.

COMPARISON SOLICITED.—A wise discrimination should be exercised by all who take medicine. The proprietors of Hood's Sarsaparilla solicit a careful comparison of this medicine with other blood purifiers and medicines, being confident that the peculiar merits of Hood's Sarsaparilla are so apparent that the people will unhesitatingly prefer it to any other preparation. Hood's Sarsaparilla is not a mixture of molasses and a few inert roots and herbs, but it is a peculiar concentrated extract of the best alterative and blood-purifying remedies of the vegetable kingdom. The enormous sales of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the wonderful cures effected, prove even more than has been claimed for this medicine. If you are sick the best medicine is none too good. Therefore, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

WATCH AND PRAY.

When the world is spread before thee,
And its treasures opened wide;
Ere it fling its glamour o'er thee,
Ere thou'rt caught in pleasure's tide,
Turn thee from its joys away,
Looking upward, "watch and pray."

When the mists of doubt oppress thee,
And thy path is dark and drear;
When distrust and fears distress thee,
And no ray of light is near,
Lest thou slip and go astray,
Lowly kneeling, "watch and pray."

Pray when dangers be around thee;
Watch when enemies are near:
Pray when Satan would confound thee;
Watch, e'en should the road seem clear,
Till the breaking of the day,
Hoping ever, "watch and pray."

Kentucky Correspondence.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

The expasition by Bro. Hoover, of Summit, Miss., in the ADVOCATE, of August 30, of the text, "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (John iii. 5), is not that which seems most reasonable to me. He has it, that being born of water is in reference to the operation of the Word in the regeneration of one; the Word being, by metaphor, set forth under similitude of water. His quotations of passages of Scripture, wherein salvation is compared to the water we drink, etc., and by which we are cleansed, do not, to my mind, converge toward the point he seeks to make. I offer the following as a more satisfactory solution of the matter: By water-birth there is signified simply the natural birth. Having been born once, it is requisite we be born again. "First, that which is natural; then that which is spiritual." "That which is born of the flesh (naturally born) is flesh"—is merely natural; "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," or is spiritual. This appears evident from the Savior's reply to Nicodemus, when the latter asks: "How can a man be born (again) when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?" The reply then places the two births in antithesis—the natural birth and the spiritual birth. "He must be born of water and the Spirit"—not born of water and Spirit, as though the birth were of the two jointly. Unless an egg be laid and hatched, we can't have a bird. Whether the Savior told Nicodemus, in reply to his recognition of him as "a teacher come from God," that "unless a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God," in recognition of Nicodemus having been thus enabled to have the spiritual perception of him as from God, or whether it was a requisition upon Nicodemus yet to be born of the Spirit, is difficult to be determined. I apprehend that it is the former. It was as if Christ had said: "Nicademus, it requires spiritual perception for one thus to apprehend me, and spiritual perception comes of being born again—born of the Spirit." He reciprocated the recognition Nicodemus had given him, as of God.

As to there being any allusion to water baptism in the answer of Christ, that is simply preposterous. There is not a drop of water in Christian baptism, if we are to believe John the Baptist. "I, indeed, baptize you with water, but he that cometh after me * * * will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire." Christian baptism is thus differentiated from John's, in that John's was with water, and Christ's would be with other and else. The force of John's speech lay just in the contrast of cleansing with water and cleansing by fire. Paul teaches plainly the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. He affirms that we are in Christ, as new creatures, by baptism. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ," etc. "We are buried with Christ, by baptism, into death." How is that accomplished—how is it operated—Brother Paul? Why, "by one Spirit are we baptized into one body, even into Christ."

Were it a capital crime for one to commission men to baptize in or with water, Christ could not be convicted under indictment predicated of the commission he gave to his apostles to go "into all the world and preach the gospel, baptizing them in (or into) the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost." He didn't say baptize with, or in, water, and we are, therefore, left to inference as to how it should be done; and, as John the Baptist had declared that His baptism would be with other and else than water (not with water and other and else), and as Christ never used, in his teachings, for the three years of his ministry, the term baptism in reference to water, save in a single instance—that in which he asked the disciples of the baptism of John, whether it was of man or of God—it is reasonable to conclude that when he told the apostles to abide at Jerusalem until, by descent upon them of the Holy Ghost, they should be empowered to preach the gospel effectively, and then to go into all the world and operate in the power of that Spirit, so preaching the gospel as that, the baptism of believers "into Christ" would transpire. To them he had declared that greater works than those operated by him previous to his enthronement would be accomplished by them after the Holy Ghost should come upon them; so there is no presumption or extravagance in saying they were commissioned to baptize with the Spirit. The argument is cumulative on this behalf, from other facts and declarations of Scripture. That which clinches the argument to my mind is, that Paul declared the "law of commandments, contained in ordinances, abolished."

If a law be abolished, nothing can by it be established. If water baptism and the Lord's Supper be "ordinances," substituted for the more elaborate and irksome "ordinances" of a former dispensation, then was the law amended, and not "abolished;" and Paul was simply mistaken in his apprehension of that "yoke of bondage" having been "taken out of the way and nailed to His cross." That this theory of the matter consists with an organized church, having ordinances according to its own perception of fitness and utility—its discernment of proper measures and methods of gospel propagation—will be evident to those who rightly apprehend the church as an ugency and not as a mere instrumentality. Under the commission to the apostles, we, who apprehend Jesus as "the Christ, the Son of the living God," may "bind and loose," with assurance that all is ratified or sanctioned in heaven. Therefore have we baptism and have we the celebration of the Supper—gracious rites, but not legal ordinances. There is not rigidity from a single finger-touch of legality anywhere in the dispensation of the gospel of grace—the gospel of life. "Jerusalem which is from above is free—the mother of us all." As I wrote some years ago, whatever of ordinal, modal, sacramental and ritualistic incidents are connected with church ministrations, they are, in respect of the kingdom, as my clothes are to my person; no part of it whatever. Such churches as have theirs as one has his skin, are inevitably hidebound. "Do we make void the law by faith? Nay, we establish the law." "Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon." If these be ordinances, in the sense in which ordinances were prescribed, divinely, under the provisional Mosaic dispensation, then does it follow that the precision of mode, measure, time, and all else pertaining to legal ordinances, are to be regarded. A kingdom predicated of spiritual conditions only, in which nothing ordinal, modal, ritualistic or sacramental, is of the essence thereof, is alone catholic. Bishop McTyeire, in a sermon before the Louisiana Conference, a few years ago, quoted from an editorial I wrote for the Central Methodist, wherein I entered a caveat, on this score, against the dip theory of the Baptists, and the tip theory of the Romanists and Episcopalians, following the rigidity of the dip theory of the Jew.

It was in respect of this genius of spiritual life, freeing men from all entanglement of legality, that Wesley exclaimed, "Behold, what God hath wrought!" when Methodism assimilated the elements, and appeared, organically, a phenomenon of religious power, in form new and unique, among the churches of earth. If she build again the things destroyed by her Melchisedec-like independence, she becomes an offender. If she stand fast in the liberty wherewith she is set free, she may rise, repeatedly, upon her dead-self, renewing herself and reforming herself according to "the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." Not only has she large liberty, under chart of her disciplinary law, for legislative reconditionings in polity, but through sovereign, conventional prerogative she may, at any time, as discovery is made of the expediency of such change, disencumber herself of any dogmatic obstruction; she may pluck out any thorn or Calvinistic sting that her development in doctrine causes her to feel in her flesh.

"Gilderoy" on the College Question.

Your correspondents are warming up on the college question. That is right. Ventilation is a good thing. Stagnation is death. This matter should be thoroughly discussed and thoroughly understood, so that intelligent action may be had when the time for action comes. I am not wise enough to say exactly what ought to be done, but even a wayfaring man can see that something ought to be done, and done promptly. We need a good school or college near home, where our young men can be trained—particularly our young men who are preparing for the ministry. In this matter we are greatly behind—behind other Conferences in our own church, and behind other churches in this State. We, the North Mississippi Conference, stand in great need just now of trained men for her own pulpits. I mean no reflection on the men we have. They are good men and true, full of faith and good works, and they deserve all praise for what they are, and for the work they have done. They have come up amid hard conditions, and with few, or poor, advantages, and they have done wonders, considering the circumstances; but the fact remains that we haven't the men to man our work as it should be manned. The great majority of our preachers have done, and they are now doing, the best they could; but they might have been qualified for doing more and better work. What we propose, what we are after, is that the next generation of preachers shall be better qualified for work. We have plenty of young men who have the ambition, the holy emulation, to qualify themselves for any class or kind of work if they had the means and the opportunity to do so. It is understood, and has been given out by some of your correspondents, that consecrated and wise laymen stand ready to furnish the means as soon as the church manifests a purpose to enter upon this great work. We want and we need and we must have, and that soon, a first-class high school, as good as the ordinary college, or a first-class college, on Mississippi soil. Less than this will not satisfy the demands now upon us. It is well understood, or should be, that the Bishops can not make preachers to order—all they can do is to send the men the church furnishes them. All of our preachers, good and indifferent, including the Bishops, came from, and were furnished by, the laymen of the church. This is our only source of supply. It happens, sometimes, that a charge is not willing to be served by a pastor of her own sending or making. The transfer power, so complained of of late, has been exercised by the Bishops, as they thought, for the best interests of the church. The fact is, they are heavily burdened to meet the demands upon them. They have more places than men—not so many more places than men in number, but of men who can meet the requirements—to use a common phrase, "men who till the bill." It avails nothing to say that certain places ought to be satisfied with any sort of a man. They are not satisfied, ought not be satisfied, and will not be. The facts are the facts, and no amount of honest, pious sentiment will change them. The appointing power has to deal mainly with facts, just as they are. It is a most favorable omen for good that the church is beginning to see her need, and is manifesting an interest in supplying her own wants. This is the only way under heaven that they can be supplied. It is my misfortune and the misfortune of many of my brethren, but not our fault, that we are not competent to fill many of the appointments in this Conference. If sent to them, we would be misunited, in many most important particulars, greatly to the injury of God's cause. It is as wicked to want to go to a work we are not qualified to do, as it is not to want a man who is not qualified for the work. There is a sort of eternal fitness in things, anyhow. Oh, yes, I'd like to have a good place; but, then, I know, as well as I know my name, that a rural charge, among uncultured people, would suit me best, because they are of my class. The reason why I should go to this place is the very reason why I am not adapted to the other appointment. The preachers most ambitious for certain places are, generally, the least qualified to fill them. All these things come in to complicate the delicate, important and unpleasant work imposed upon our Bishops. Place-hunting men and men-hunting places; and no place to fit the man, and no man to fit the place. This is not a fancy; it is a solemn and an awful fact. This is a work an angel might dread. Our preachers know they are not qualified to fill certain places, but they are anxious to qualify themselves, and they will do it if the church only gives them half a chance. All they ask is an opportunity. So, let's go to work and build, equip and endow a school or college in Mississippi, where we can qualify our men for our work. GILDEROY.

Mansfield Female College.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of September 6, I see a communication from Dr. McVoy, president of Mansfield Female College, in which he makes a stirring appeal to the Methodists of Louisiana which ought to be considered. He was placed at the head of this institution by the acting Board of Managers for the college: therefore, he occupies the place by authority of the Conference. He comes, as he tells us, with a competent corps of teachers, and carefully selected for every department of the institution, who have large experience as educators. He himself is a thorough scholar, and an experience running through many years as a teacher in and a conductor in the best and most honored female colleges of the land. This college is well located, beautiful for situation, and ought to be the joy of the whole church, as it is the only Methodist female college in the State. Under these circumstances, and in the face of existing facts, why may the president not make such an appeal to the Methodists of Louisiana? And why may he not be heard? What would a pledge of one hundred pupils be, out of the fourteen thousand Methodists in the State, when a reduction of twenty per cent. would be made, on the present rates of board and tuition, if half that number would promptly send their daughters? The appeal is made first with a view of promoting female education in the State, where Protestant influence is so severely needed. This, of itself, is enough to arouse the church to a greater degree of activity and zeal in the support of its own institutions, especially when we remember that well-endowed and wide-awake church schools vitalize the church and give to it an increased degree of power and religious influence which will be felt in all the various political and civil circles of society. With an educated and refined people, pious and spiritual, there will be little trouble in sustaining the Sunday Law or in promoting the cause of temperance.

How reasonable the appeal, and how superlatively easy for the Methodists of the State to respond, when it will not cost them a cent, but to send their children to their own institution, which they ought to do anyhow, and which they would be gainers in dollars and cents. What might not the hundred traveling preachers in the Louisiana Conference do if they were fully awake to the importance of the appeal? As it is, they have to go to every nook and corner of the State. Think of a hundred agents going without a cent of extra expense! At this time, if there is any good reason for Methodists to send their children abroad, we have not been able to see it. We fear if this gracious opportunity is forfeited, it will be to them an everlasting regret. J. P.

OPEN GOINWARD.—Religion may be said to commence when a soul ceases to keep back any secret from God. To live always bare to the soul's core in his sight is the condition of healthful religion. To speak out in his ear what can not be spoken in another's, those incommunicable things which only man's own spirit knows, and which can only be told even to God in such inarticulate groans as need a divine interpreter—this is that manner of praying which is a necessity in the religious life, and which can only be reached in secret. The reason for this necessity runs down into that mysterious personality which makes every human being, at the last resort, a solitude impervious to his fellow, accessible only to his God.—J. Oswald Dykes, D. D.

(Zion's Herald.)

Let no woman think her duties small or trifling who has the care of even one child committed to her. It is a solemn trust. Great evils are to be met and overcome in the future of our land; intemperance, dishonesty and idolatry are to be grappled with. Teach the little children the principles you wish to influence them as men and women. The masses of the future are the children of to-day. Their uplifting should begin now. When the mothers awake to a fulfillment of all their duty, the question as to how to uplift the masses will have ceased to agitate. It will have been quietly, but effectually answered.

(Sunday-School Times.)

That there is truth to be found in all the books of the outside religions of the world can not fairly be questioned. But in all the books of all the ages there is not to be found a moral principle enunciated or a moral precept laid down that the Bible does not contain; while many of the moral principles and precepts of the Bible were first formulated in its pages. This fact in itself ought to be sufficient to prove the unique position of the Bible among the religious books of the world; and he who knows most about the religious books of the ages is surest to confirm the correctness of this statement of fact.

(Southern Christian Advocate.)

In our preaching there is doctrine, logic, eloquence, action; but is there not too little love? Do we not denounce harshly? Do we not invite coldly? Do we not hate the sinner rather than the sin? Do we speak of God, angels, heaven, with sufficient reverence? Do we speak of guilt, pollution, condemnation, hell, with sufficient tenderness? Could we contemplate the eternal punishment of the wicked without tears, if we really believe it? If we fully believed the half we teach, would we not weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of our people? Is not a revival needed in the pulpit? Would it not be well to pray more and study less? to learn more from God directly and less from books? A warm heart in the pulpit is better than a clear head; and indeed the head will be all the clearer for the warmth of the heart.

(Advance.)

In discussing the evolution theory, its acceptance should not be made to depend upon its agreement with Christian belief, but upon facts. The question to be put to the scientist is, "How much can you prove?" Ninety-nine per cent. of theory standing on one per cent. of fact just simply means one per cent. of fact, nothing more, nothing less. The men who talk about the solid data of real discovery, must give us such overwhelming doses of metaphysics. If the survival of the fittest means anything more than the survival of that which does survive, ought to be able to survive without the help of Herbert Spencer's multitudinous volumes of ponderous philosophy. And if "natural selection" is anything more than a convenient phrase to cover an ignorance as vast as it is deep, it is about time for it to explain itself. We have heard much about improvements made upon the breed through experiments in the barnyard where there was an intelligent man to direct and control the agencies. But what we want to know is how the improvements were made in the great out-door world before the barnyards were fenced in, and when there was no man around.

(Central Christian Advocate.)

Modern skepticism seeks to draw the church away from the work of spiritual healing to engage in arguments which ignore that work. The church need not fear discussion so long as it can use the unanswerable argument of Christian experience and point to its fruits in the holy lives of believers. If ever the church should cease to be able to make this appeal, it would no longer be of any avail to talk about the historical and other evidences of Christianity. With no living witnesses, she would be defeated in every polemical debate. Her occupation would be gone, and her claims would be exploded by the ceasing of the very facts which alone make those claims supportable and entitle them to the belief of mankind.

It is said that while the experience of regeneration wrought and attested by the Holy Spirit, is the test of truth and the ground of certainty to those who have that experience, it can not convince those who do not have it; that one man's experience may be conclusive evidence to himself, but can not be to another. To this Christ's own words are sufficient answer: "By their fruits ye shall know them." While the experience of salvation is subjective, its fruits are known and read of all men. These fruits of the transforming power of the gospel are proofs that the testimony of believers that Christ has power upon earth to forgive sin is true. The uniform testimony of millions to the same experience would be credible, even if it were supported by no infallible proofs. But the fact that this mass of testimony is sustained by radical changes for good in the lives and characters of those who give it, renders it impossible for candid observers to doubt the reality of their experience or the truth of the doctrine it proves.

LEARN TO GIVE.

BY LUCY A. BENNETT.

Learn to give, and thou shalt bind
Countless treasures to thy breast;
Learn to love, and thou shalt find
Only those who love are blest.

Learn to give, and thou shalt know
They the poorest are who hoard;
Learn to love, thy love shall flow
Deeper for the wealth outpoured.

Learn to give and learn to love;
Only thus thy life can be Foretaste of the life above,
Tinged with immortality.

Give, for God to thee hath given;
Love, for He by love is known;
Child of God, and heir of heaven,
Let thy parentage be shown.

Sunday-School Lesson, for September 30, is a review of the past quarter's lessons, and as superintendents have their own methods, we omit the lesson laid down in our book.—EDITOR.

A Plea for Church Expansion.

BY REV. J. M. BEARD.

The great characteristic movement of American Methodism in this decade of its history is church extension. Indeed, it is an evolution of the good old doctrine of spreading scriptural holiness over these lands that amounts to a revolution. It has converted the itinerant army, which was rapidly becoming one of fruitless conquest, into one of occupation and sovereignty. The future historian of the church, if he should prove equal to his theme, will combine the unstudied grace of Macaulay with the confident rhetorical tone of the author of "The Decline and Fall" to chronicle the rise and establishment of the greatest religious movement of the latter half of the nineteenth century, when the church, as one man, gave utterance to the inspiring shout: "Let us rise up and build!"

The two men who will, perhaps, be best known to the children of the present generation of Methodists, and most liberally encomiumized, are Chaplain McCabe, the wizard of the Northern platform, who has never failed with the wand of church extension to cause the rock of Northern finance to flow; and David Morton, the bureaucrat of Southern enterprise, who not only converts figures into capital, but who saith to one, Build, and he doeth it; and to another, Cause the desert to bring froth straw and brick, and, lo! it cometh to pass.

Whoever in blind committal to ancient methods may have escaped the conviction that this is the age of "plants" and of ground-work progression (to express a vital fact literally), it has not failed to arrest the attention and grow into the intellectual life of these and others among the most influential servants of the church. Moreover, this movement is a necessity not only of our times, but of our branch of the church, wherever located, which is essentially a social institution, and, like the empire of the honey-bee, nomadic only when circumstances decree it, and, while swarming, without increment either of numbers or saccharine store. It is a law of nature that the most diligent workers must be hived; and the more convenient and elegantly, the greater the ratio of productiveness. The Lycett Chapel Fund, in London (providing eighty chapels for destitute districts), was the greatest benefaction, owing to its peculiar character, that ever befell any church or city; and, under its impetus, London Methodism has achieved a greater increase within a single decade than during the whole century next preceding this bequest; and, what is more astonishing still, from being the smallest community cipher of the Methodisms, not only of Great Britain, but of the world during these years of unhoused vagabondage, it has grown during the short space of ten years of tabernacle journeying to be the ringleader in men, means and progressiveness of this offending sect—certainly in England, and, perhaps, in the whole world.

During a slightly longer period of church extension endowment to which the church north of Mason and Dixon's line has committed itself, it has gained more in numbers and influence than during a whole century (or the entire period that has elapsed since its organization); and where by former precarious methods it enlisted individuals to its ranks, its census establishes the fact that it now enlists whole communities. It is almost startling to hear it related officially that the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church erects, mainly in the unoccupied West, one thousand church buildings annually; and these with all modern and artistic improvements. That sounds like a passage from the "Arabian Nights;" and if you will add to it the statistics of this society as organized in the Church, South, it will prove more romantically resonant still, and will possibly justify the hope cherished by some, that the time is not far distant when American Methodism will lose its leisurely and stoical gait of centennial reminiscence, and, when, challenged by the enemies of her progress, like Sanballat, from the valley below, in a towering rage of envy and vituperation, will be able to appear on a broad platform of ascending masonry, trowel in hand, and excuse herself from both the meanness and impolicy of an interview.

But as one who, for a number of years, has been more or less identified with the church extension work in this State, the writer began this article to say some needed things about the movement in Louisiana. No other field of our branch of the church is so needy and so likely to derive great gain from an enthusiastic championship of the cause. Immigration sets this way, and so do the pointers of the nation's progress. Three or four great lines of railroad are projected; and as a kaleidoscope turned in the hand reverses its features and throws the organic particles into new and more lovely combinations, so the hand of Northern capital is seizing the situation of trade amongst us, and projecting our supposed steadfast populations into new communities of cities, towns and neighborhoods along these freshly articulated lines of commerce. We need to say nothing of manufacturing plants, here and there, which are sure to come, and the exigencies they will create, or of the natural order of progress springing from native industries. The necessity will be upon us speedily to meet a new order of things; and it can not be successfully done with empty hands and, least of all, by those who are necessitated to oppose crude methods or the very elements of disorganization—to a state of things that calls more loudly for organization than aught else.

This society, well organized and, perhaps, well administered as a faithful servant, but not as a favorite child of the Annual Conference, has already enabled us to occupy with handsome church buildings the Texas and Pacific railroad from Donaldsonville to its Northern division, including every station of importance, and even beyond; has erected two fine churches on the Mississippi river, and has proven a benefactor to the northern districts of the Conference when the bulk of its finances have been disbursed, and is now waiting, empty handed, a fresh commission for more effective work of the same description. As we have demonstrated heretofore, the profit on contributions to this fund is tenfold, or a thousand per cent. For investments of one hundred dollars we can plant churches worth ten times that sum from one end of the State to the other. That is just the effect upon the popular pulse when the church visits a churchless locality with the perfume of greenbacks on its garments, and says to the houseless pilgrims who are just beginning to despair of extracting anything but gloom from the clouds and darkness of their environment: "My children, I want to see you housed as well as clothed and fed; take this check for one hundred dollars" (which is, of course, just the sum lacking), "and let us see how much you can cause it to yield in a good cause." The church's gift, then, which flatters community as well as church pride, is worth to it one hundred dollars, and its words of encouragement to feeble-handed workers yield an additional profit of nine hundred per cent. on this investment. The old adage, that "deeds speak louder than words," is, therefore, only partly true; and so, great as the above disparity, is hopefulness a more powerful stimulant to success than mere material resources. Who has not seen a spirited steed, who could not be suspected of a weakness for the corn-crib, and who would rebel under the whip, in response to a kind word, whirl along the homestretch at a breathless gait?

Within a given period of years—say, ten—the Church Extension Society of the Louisiana Conference has expended three thousand dollars for the erection of church buildings within its boundaries; and during that period, and under the magic of this expenditure, it has added over and above the natural growth of its resources in church buildings, between thirty and forty thousand dollars in money value to its church property; and this in elegant and tasteful houses of worship, most eligibly located by a committee, whose business it is to see that this fund is wisely administered and in the communities where it will do the most good. But this three thousand dollars is but the moiety of the church's contributions—a like sum going into the connectional treasury for the spread of the gospel along the needy frontiers of the church, so that the brother who gives may with perfect propriety and complacency let his right hand know what his left hand doeth, and with perfect sincerity claim that the blessing which attends the gift to the foreign field may rest upon that which stays at home as well as upon the unworthy giver. No worthier object for a sacrifice, we are persuaded, can engage the hearts of men; and while we are forbidden to follow the consecrated gift with that degree of questionableness which amounts to solicitude, we are, by the nature of the obligation, to bestow it where it will do the most good. The new Emperor of Prussia, it is reported, lately dismissed the burgesses of the Capitol city of his empire, who had come to pay their respects to him, with the brusque adieu: "See to it that more churches are built"! And when we hear an earthly sovereign address such a decree to unwilling servants, must we not experience compunction in realizing that the commandment of the King of kings—the prosperity of whose reign more imminently depends upon the zeal of his servants in preparing for him earthly habitations—meets with such inordinate delay—not to say, neglect—at our hands.

For years previously to this incident of the German Court a great revivalist, of evangelical character and popularity with the masses, had been laboring with the metropolitan population of Berlin for the conversion of souls; but with how much more effect, can it be supposed upon the religious fortunes of the gay capital than a bold eddy dancing through a whirlpool upon its turbulence. It was commendable for him to labor and be supported; but was it just or politic for the souls which he had been instrumental in rescuing to die for lack of that weak hospitality which would lodge them in the courts of the Lord's house for a single day? The man who attempted to fill a sieve with the Atlantic Ocean had an endless task, but he was no less unwise and unsuccessful than those shepherds of our Western wilderness who fold the Lord's sheep in unsightly pens once or twice annually and suffer them to roam at large during the remainder of the year. The "world's first temples" were and are poor makeshifts; and whatever the great Head of the church may have promised the church, he has never engaged for himself to dwell in an earthly temple not made with hands; and to expect him to do it, even in the most favored locality, is sheer enthusiasm.

Brethren of the Louisiana Conference (of whose fidelity and unselfish zeal it is not necessary to speak), let me exhort you, as your servant, to give attention to this interest of the church as that which, of all others, calls to you most convincingly and appealingly for help. Shall we not pay our assessments for church extension in full at Conference, and will not each preacher consider himself an agent for the Parker Loan Fund (a financial scheme which, if successful, would cause our glorified brother, whose memory it is purposed thus to honor, to live over again that career of success which made him so great a blessing to the church in Louisiana)?

The surest evidence of immortality is the desire of it. The eye for light and the ear for sound, and the soul of man (with its instinct for continued existence) for immortality. If there had been no light, there had been no eye; if no sound, no ear, so if there were no immortality, there would be no "pleasing hope," no "longing after immortality," no "bitter dread of falling into naught."

Letter from China.

It has been decided, finally, to hold another General Conference of the missionaries in China. The Conference of 1877, before adjourning, resolved to meet again ten years from date of adjournment. But when, two years ago, a movement was made to carry out this purpose, there was some want of harmony in the counsels of those who had the matter in hand; and, to speak more plainly, many of the missionaries were unwilling that Dr. A. Williamson, who undertook to lead the movement, and Dr. Y. J. Allen, whom he proposed to appoint as convener of the Conference and general manager of preliminaries, should have a controlling position in the organization of the Conference. For these reasons the Conference was indefinitely postponed. It has, however, been recently taken up by the Shanghai Missionary Conference, and circulars were sent to all the missionaries calling for a vote on the question. In reply to these circulars a large majority voted in favor of having the Conference in 1890, at Shanghai. Accordingly,—measures are being taken to organize a committee of arrangements, and prepare for the meeting of the Conference at that time and place.

It will, no doubt, be an occasion of great interest and profit, not only to the missionaries in China, but to missionary workers in many other foreign and home fields. The Conference of 1877 was to me, a young missionary at that time, less than two years in China, a feast of fat things. The earnest discussion of the numerous phases of missionary work by men of such strong faith, intelligent zeal and wide experience, as were many of the men who composed that body, was an inspiration to me, as it was, doubtless, to many others who had the privilege of attending the Conference. May the blessing of God rest upon the next Conference as it manifestly did upon the last one, and may nothing interfere to prevent the Conference from being held!

The attempt to close the breach in the Yellow river has failed. The summer freshets came down before the work was finished, and all the embankments that had been put in during the last winter and spring have been washed away, and the work has been abandoned. The government is now apparently at its wits' end. It seems to be a hopeless task to try to turn the river back into its old channel. It will probably have to be allowed to continue in its present course to the sea, and measures taken to control it in this new course. Even this can not be done, with any certainty of permanent results, without a thorough survey of the river by competent engineers. But, so far, no call has been made by the government for such engineers, and no one seems to know what is to be done next. Truly has this river been called "China's Sorrow."

The first railroad in China, built with the sanction of the government, is now completed, the first through train having passed over it some two weeks ago. It runs from Taku to Tientsin, a distance of about 50 miles. This is an important event in the history of China. Prejudice is being broken down, and, no doubt, in the near future railroads will be extended to various parts of the empire. The introduction of railroads into the country must have an important bearing on missionary work, in the increase of facilities for missionary travel and transportation thus afforded.

We must not, however, lay too much stress on railroads, or telegraphs, or commerce, or diplomacy, or any other merely material influence. These are not converting agencies. They can not and do not lead any man, in either Christian or heathen lands, to repent of his sins and trust in a Savior. We can not, therefore, have the least ground for hope that China will be converted, either in whole or in part, by such agencies. Human nature is the same in China as in America, and it requires the same almighty grace of God to convert a soul here that it does there; and, thank God, the same spiritual forces do accomplish like results in China with those in America!

Nor is there any hope of converting China en masse by any process known to the Christian Church. Conversion en masse by nations, tribes or families is a Mohammedan and a Roman Catholic method, and the method well accords with the kind of "conversion" that those religions contemplate. But the real conversion of heart and life, contemplated in the commission of our Lord to disciple all nations, can only be accomplished by what some missionary workers discouragingly style "the slow process of individual conversion." Be the method slow or fast, it is the only one we are authorized to use, and the only one from which we may expect genuine results.

We hope the new man promised to the China mission will not fail to come this fall. We want to open the city of Chang Shuh next year, and two men will be needed for the station. Another is wanted for Sung Kiang, to be with Bro. Burke. Suchow also needs one more man. Let us have the men without fail. But it may be that they are even now on the way to China with Bishop Wilson.

The evangelization of China is a tremendous work, requiring many hundreds more of foreign missionaries. Let the church take this mighty fact into the account, and be prepared for the immense expense of men and money that will be required to bring China to Christ.

SUCHOW, Aug. 6, 1888.

Letter from Japan.

On Tuesday, August 14, at five P. M., the corner-stone of our first Methodist Church in Japan was laid successfully, by the blessing of God, in the midst of great rejoicing of God's people. The names of about fifty persons connected with our Kobe Church were deposited in the corner-stone. To God we give all the glory. Blessed be his holy name! We had one hundred and fifty, or more, persons present. Quite a number of foreigners were present to witness the ceremony of laying the corner-stone and to rejoice with us. The best of all, dear brother, the Lord is with us and we are rejoicing in him.

Ten days since, the Lord poured a rich blessing upon my soul, and I have not been so happy for thirty five years. We were having a meeting at the home of one of our native Christians when the blessing of the Lord came down upon us, and my soul was filled with unutterable joy and peace. Everyone present felt that the Lord was in our midst, and I think there was not a dry eye in the house. My dear Christian brothers and sisters were deeply affected, for they had never before witnessed such a manifestation of the Spirit's power. They wept and they prayed, and many of them felt the Lord had blessed them, too. It was late at night when I left those dear Christians. I left them weeping; but my soul was full of the love of God. Thanks be unto God for his love to us!

The work is still going on, and almost every day some of our native Christians tell me they feel happy and the Lord is blessing them. There is a spirit of earnest prayer in the whole church, and we are expecting a greater blessing yet.

Bro. Newton has just been with us, and I do thank God that you dear Christians have been the means of our getting such a devoted, noble, godly man as he is. You could not have sent us a better man with the money you collected.

We are expecting Bishop Wilson in a few weeks, and we trust his presence in our midst will be for good; and while we are expecting the blessing and the presence of the Lord in our midst, pray for us, dear brother, and let the whole church pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

P. S.—Bro. Utley arrived just about half an hour after the laying of the corner-stone of our church. We found him at home, and gave him a hearty welcome into our midst. How pleasant it would have been to have had him on the platform with us on that occasion! J. W. L.

Entire Sanctification.

MR. EDITOR: From my youth up to my eighty-fourth year I have been a conscientious student of the doctrine of Christian perfection. In reading the Bible I have carefully noted all passages where the doctrine is either implied or fully expressed, and the Bible is well filled with it from beginning to end. I have also read and studied what we call our standard authorities on the subject, in an indefinite number of volumes, pamphlets and periodicals devoted to the subject of Bible holiness. In these books I have found some thing instructing and edifying but some opinions I have been compelled to reject as not in accord with my settled conviction and long experience of this doctrine of heart purity. But for the present I have but one object in view in writing this article and that is to call attention to the manner in which the blessing of entire sanctification is to be sought and obtained. Just here all the late authors I have read seem to be at fault. They do not tell us plainly how we are to seek this advanced state of grace and how and when we are to obtain it. Whether this deficiency grows out of the fact that they have never obtained a clean heart filled with perfect love themselves, or an unjustifiable want of attention to this all-important point, I will not say, but the fact stares me in the face. They do not tell us in detail and plainly, how, when and where we are to get the blessing of "a heart in every thought renewed, and full of love divine." They write beautifully about growth, growth, but say little about the certain attainment and enjoyment of perfect love. But I must not wander from my main point. Do you ask what I believe entire sanctification is? You can find the substance of all I believe about it in Matthew v, 6: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." What is righteousness? It is a conformity of the heart and life to the two great commandments on which hang all the law and the prophets. How is this righteousness to be sought and obtained? By hungering and thirsting after it specifically. In order to show the intensity and persistency with which we should seek this righteousness, our Savior refers to our hunger and thirst, the strongest of our bodily appetites. Under excessive hunger women have been known to eat their own children. And how forcibly Dr. Watts expresses the matter of thirst in one of his hymns!

"Early, my God, without delay,
I haste to seek thy face:
My thirsty spirit faints away
Without thy cheering grace.
So pilgrims on the scorching sand,
Beneath a burning sky,
Long for a cooling stream at hand,
And they must drink or die."

By these strong and tenacious appetites our Savior shows the intense earnestness with which we must seek the attainment of perfected righteousness. The promise is that those who thus hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled. Filled with what? Paul says, "That ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." Surely this is to be sanctified wholly. What more can we expect than to be cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and to be filled with all the fullness of God?

Now, brethren, you all believe in the necessity of entire sanctification, and you have a place in your daily prayers where you pray for it; but you have never yet believed that God would there and there bestow the blessing on you. You always look for the blessing of full salvation to come after awhile, and, hence, you never come up to it. I would recommend you to throw this old stereotyped prayer away, and adopt one in its place that implies a conviction on your part that God is willing to give you the blessing now and here, and every time you pray for it expect it, and strive to exercise faith for its immediate reception, and a faithful God will give it to you.

J. G. JONES.

HAZLEHURST, Mississippi.

I call the Book of Job, apart from all theories about it, one of the grandest things ever written with pen. One feels, indeed, as if it were not Hebrew; such a noble universality, different from all noble patriotism or sectarianism or religus in it. A noble book; a man's book. It is our first and oldest statement of the never ending problem—man's destiny and God's ways with him here in this earth. And all in such free, flowing outlines; grand in its sincerity, in its simplicity, in its epic melody and repose of reconcilement. . . . Such living likenesses were never since drawn. Sublime sorrow, sublime reconciliation, oldest choral melody as of the heart of mankind; so soft, and great; as the summer midnight, as the world with its seas and stars! There is nothing written, I think, in the Bible or out of it, of equal literary merit."—Thomas Carlyle.

The Sunday Law and Human Nature.

SOME STRANGE VIEWS REVIEWED.

Happening to pick up a secular paper, of late date, published in the free State of Louisiana, I saw therein a peculiar fragment of correspondence. Being signed "Rev. Pere C——," it attracted my attention as coming from "the cloth." Printed in French, I must appeal to my "nearest friend" for translation. This revealed such a tissue of sophistries and exploded blunders in mental and moral science as might well astonish and grieve us, emanating from one who assumes to speak ex-cathedra, and to whom, it is presumable, a multitude give diligent heed. This letter was one of a series in a parish official journal, published without note or comment. It was nothing less than a diatribe against the Sunday Law, ringing in some notes against prohibition. It may be more common than I suppose; but I was greatly surprised at the avowed opposition to laws fully established by constituted authority, on the part of a minister in any branch of the church of Him who so straitly commended and practiced obedience to the "powers that be." Whether this be attributable to that hierarchal behest, which sets up "an empire within an empire," or not, it is none the less sad that our good citizens should be encouraged to lawlessness by spiritual advisers.

I give the general teaching of the letter in question, leaving out the exaggeration. His practical objection to the Sunday Law is that it keeps people from attending mass. You will be surprised to hear how. The stores, shops, etc., being closed by law, the poor country people, who used piously to "kill two birds with one stone," by coming ten or fifteen miles to town on Sunday, buying their eatables and drinkables, as well as attending "mass," are now compelled to do their purchasing on Saturday, and are unable to return to town on Sunday. Hence they are deprived of a saving means of grace. Comment is needless in your paper on such admixture of plain disobedience to God's express and oft-repeated command with a form of worship.

But he goes on to denounce all such prohibitory legislation, stating, as a well-recognized law of human nature, that to forbid indulgence increases and even produces desire for the things forbidden. I have heard such crude ideas set forth largely and blatantly by unbelievers—some of them in the church, unfortunately—occasionally also by professors of religion who had never thought seriously on the subject, and who had been led into this superficial view by want of familiarity with God's Word and the principles underlying all human government. It is a sadder sight to behold teacher in Israel forgetting that God began his probationary plan by forbidding certain indulgence, and that most of his commands, which Jew and Christian alike take as the epitome of divine will, are couched in those terms so hated of the lawless and disobedient: "Thou shalt not." But the climax of folly in the reviewed article is now to come. As an illustration of the truth of his false philosophy against prohibition, he cites his dog, which he says is "infinitely dear to him." This "intelligent" brute, if fed freely on meat, soon tires of it and prefers vegetable diet, but having her meat "prohibited" for a few days, comes back to it with an increased appetite. A brave argument truly! proving what everybody knows—that animals will search, even on good food. He draws the inference that the way to keep people from being drunkards is to put within their reach a constant and copious supply of liquor. Well, ignoring for the time some slight differences in the canine and human nature, we assert that the appetite for alcohol is essentially different from that for food. Indulgence in the former brings not satiety till the point of intoxication is reached. On the contrary, each drink edifies for two more, until the man is beastialized. Then, as soon as sickness from intoxication is past, he "seeks it yet again," and with greater desire. Total abstinence was never known to induce an appetite for strong drink. Every day of non-indulgence weakens the desire even after the fearful habit may have been once formed.

But to the "Father's" canine illustration again. It was made to defeat the general principles of prohibition, including Sunday Laws, which he flippantly says are intended to force men to be religious. Thank you, Rev. Sir, for the suggestion! In order to make good your argument against "such laws," you must debase the God-given reason and intelligent spiritual nature of man to the level of the beast. We are free to admit that if we rise no higher in the scale of being than the dog, it is hardly worth while trying to deliver men from the pitfalls of temptations. But, brother, we believe that we have a higher destiny, as well as a more reasonable mind, than the most intelligent dog.

Since we are taught that Christ came to destroy the works of the devil, we believe it the Christian's duty to aid in that work by helping to pull down the greatest stronghold of Satan—the open saloon. Learning from the lips of Jesus that "the Sabbath was made for man," and looking upon man's spiritual wards as the highest and of greatest import, we shall always defend and uphold all laws edenacted to render it easy for men to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. If trading in eatables and drinkables; playing base ball, with its usual attendants of swearing, betting, etc.; making excursions here and there for worldly pleasure, etc., upon the Sabbath day can be shown to tend to hollu ss or purity of any kind, then we may be persuaded to desist from that which now we regard as one of the prime duties of every Christian (and especially of ministers). That our State laws should recognize these great principles of Bible truth is of vast importance to the morality of our people. On the other hand, that our government should in any form, and for any reward, great or small, license wrongdoing is a shame—and every citizen must bear a part of the disgrace. For, with us, the people make the government.

"With cheerful hope our eyes explore" this landmark on a not very distant shore where we shall see all our laws righteous and well administered by Christian statesmen.

CHINA GROVE CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: This meeting began on the night of the twenty-fourth day of August, and closed on the morning of August 29. There was a good supply of preachers in attendance from the beginning. The preaching was earnest, faithful and effective. At every service, I believe without an exception, there were manifestations of the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. The spiritual results of the meeting were very satisfactory. Many of God's people were blessed and built up in the faith. There were happy reunions, and sanctified social intercourse between friends long separated, which has a salutary influence upon Christian life and character.

"And if our fellowship below
In Jesus be so sweet,
What heights of rapture shall we know
When round his throne we meet?"

Forty-seven persons united with the church. The pastor, Bro. Gale, writes me, "And I think over one hundred conversions." I had estimated the number to be over sixty, but he had a better opportunity of judging correctly. At best we can make only an approximate statement of the number. It is sufficient to know that a great many "were obedient to the faith," and gave signs of a genuine work of grace in their hearts. Altogether, it was one of the most complete triumphs over the powers of darkness I ever participated in. A happy combination of law and gospel, under God, did the work. Those who were there will understand; but others remain in comparative ignorance until "that day."

An interesting feature of the occasion was a missionary meeting held on Tuesday afternoon, with special reference to the appointment of the presiding elder, Bro. Weems, to work in Mexico. He has endeared himself to the people there during the past years of his ministry among them as presiding elder, and many hearts were touched as, perhaps, never before with missionary zeal as he delivered to them his parting words of counsel and exhortation. Two Woman's Missionary Societies were organized on the occasion by Sister Weems, the district secretary—one for China Grove Church, and one for Tylertown Church, and steps were taken for the organization of a third, for the Waterholes Church. This may prove to have been the best work of the meeting. The China Grove Camp Meeting may now be regarded as established, and I believe it is destined to work a glorious redemption for that country.

W. B. LEWIS.

RIPLEY, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The anti-saloon cause is being more permanently established in our county. I mean Union county, and say "our" because half of my work is in New Albany, the county site—one church. My work consisting of two churches, Ripley and the one mentioned; hence I claim two counties as ours. Last Friday the vote was taken as to whether or not they would have any saloons. The vote stands 1,167 against sale, and 310 for sale, giving us a majority of 857; also 95 increase on our majority two years ago. We carried every box in the county dry. We think saloons are doomed and to be no more in Union county. The people rejoice over the victory and the prospect in the future. The observing people, both saint and sinner, say too much improvement has been realized to go back to the days of whi-ky. They say debt paying is much more universal and complete than before. Peace and good will abound, where it never did before. The people attend church and behave much better than ever before. Criminal cases in court are reduced to a per cent. not known since the war; also cost of courts less, and fewer paupers. I never knew a people to rise up all over a county so universally, and say, "We will not have it," as this one.

New Albany is the crossing of two railroads Gulf and Ship Island and Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham; and out of 308 votes cast there but 49 for saloons. Our church is in prosperous condition there; also the Baptist Church is doing well. And I want to say it a man belonging to any church at that place voted for sale of whisky, he has kept it to himself.

Yours in bonds of love,

H. W. BABB.

BLACK HAWK, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Our meeting at this place closed last Monday night. Many were reported converted. Eighteen names were added to our church roll, and the membership was wonderfully revived. This was said to have been, in some respects, the best meeting held here for some time. We were assisted by Bro. Ely, student from Southwestern University; Bro. Howell, of Sidon circuit, and Bro. Bell, of Batesville and Wesley charge. These brethren all did faithful work, for which they have the hearty thanks of this people.

Bro. Howell makes his home with us at this place, but is in charge of Sidon circuit, where he is doing a very fine work. He has held three meetings on his work, and, although he was alone at some points, he is able to report a gracious revival at every point. He promises great usefulness to the church in the future.

I neglected to say, in my report of the meeting at Acona, in this charge, that we were favored with the presence of Bro. Evans, former pastor of this work. The reception given him by his old parishioners was beautiful. It was really pleasant to witness the handshaking. Come again, Bro. Evans.

No more meetings to hold; but this pastor will be much-engaged getting ready for Conference. All collections will be up in full.

Our earnest prayer for this kind people is, that the Lord may pour of his richest blessings upon them!

Yours in the gospel,

E. G. KILGORE.

THIRD ROUND FINISHED.

MR. EDITOR: I have just finished my third round. The preachers are active in the main, and laboring with encouraging results. The summer (hat I so much dreaded has ended, and I have borne up under its heat and fatigue better than last year. I took a little better care of myself, though the last six weeks have almost fathomed me; several hundred miles in a buggy, "much water" to contend with, sprinkled often, immersion appeared imminent more than once. But, oh! how the people flock to hear the gospel! The congregations were larger at the churches visited than I ever saw at some places on the Seashore district before. I believe I have preached more and talked less in the last forty days than in any other forty days in the last forty years. After being alone and thoughtful, I have more strength in the pulpit than after being in company and talkful. But more than once I overtalked and underpreached myself within the aforesaid forty days. That is about enough about us, as I once heard a preacher say in his opening remarks. A presiding elder on this district has a fine opportunity for usefulness; there is before him a wide "open door." At some points the preachers had the meeting under headway when I arrived; so the most I had to do was exhort a little, open the door and receive in the new members. Five camp meetings are now before me, following each other in quick succession. Refreshing seasons are expected.

T. S. WEST.

MERIDIAN CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I have had a pleasant time on the Meridian circuit the present year. I have held four protracted meetings on my work, with good success. During the time of our revival thirty-six persons were added to the church, and the churches revived and a number were converted. On September 2 a large number were up for prayer. We have received a large number into the church during the year. We received $14 during the week of self-denial. We are to meet Wednesday to clean off the grounds for the purpose of building a house for the preacher who may be honored with the privilege of traveling the Meridian circuit in the future. We expect to make it a desirable place to live at. In a few weeks we will see all of the timber on the ground, and the workmen at work. Arrangements have all been made. We only ask for time. Meridian circuit is composed of good material, and if the ruling Power in his wisdom sees fit to let the work remain as it is, she will come to the front with the whole armor on. Pray for our success.

L. d. JONES.

MONTROSE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have just finished my fourth protracted meeting; and we have had good revivals at each meeting; taken into the church some ten or fifteen by profession of faith in Christ and baptism. The membership of the church has been graciously blessed; two-thirds of the membership professed a blessing, and we had a score of sinners at the altar for prayer, and several were converted and gave praise to God. But we are very much behind with our collections. We have it all promised; but the drought up here in the first part of the year, and now the severe gale and rain last week, have damaged the crops very badly, and the people are making very piteous complaints that they are not able to do much.

Well, Mr. Editor, I am trying to get up a good list of new subscribers for the old and precious ADVOCATE; and I have several names on my list that will take the ADVOCATE next year. I hope I will be able to bring you a good long list with money, if I can get to the Conference. Pray for us.

J. H. EVANS, P. C.

CINCINNATI CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my third protracted meeting, resulting in forty-one accessions, a great many conversions, and the church greatly revived. We believe that the spiritual condition of this circuit, on the whole, is considerably in the advance of last years. Truly God's Spirit has been working mightily in the hearts of this people—backsliders have been reclaimed, sinners convicted and many converted, peace and harmony restored to neighborhoods, church disputes and troubles settled, and in some cases where there was a coldness existing between church members, families and brothers and sisters all was forgotten, and they rushed together with warm embrace. Truly we have reasons to thank God; to whom be all the praise for the happy results of these meetings! We are indebted to several of the brethren, both local and itinerant, for efficient work in these meetings.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied thoroughly. I felt previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

I am fifty-five years of age. Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

"At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

Briefs.

Two thoughts from Coleridge may well begin this column: "Worldly pleasures are the devil's scaffolding to build a habit on, and when that is once formed and fixed, the pleasures are sent for firewood and hell begins sometimes in this life." * * * When one asked Coleridge, "How shall I find the highest and surest evidence of the truth of Christianity?" his answer was, "Try it for yourself."

Mr. Spurgeon states that his church has now 57 mission stations, with sitting accommodation for 4,900 persons, and 130 local preachers, and 22 Sunday and ragged schools with 584 teachers and 7,731 scholars; while between 80 and 100 mission stations, which had been commenced by the church, had already developed into self-supporting churches. Total number of members at the Tabernacle is 5,313. During the past year, 240 have been added by baptism, 43 by profession, and 74 by letter, while 142 have been dismissed to other churches, 37 have joined other churches without letters of dismission, 14 have emigrated, 129 names have been removed for non-attendance, 9 for other causes, and 64 members have died.

In regard to the number of words used Max Muller says:

We are told on good authority by a country clergyman that some of the laborers in his parish had not 300 words in their vocabulary. A well-educated person in England who has been at a public school and at the university, who reads his Bible, his Shakespeare, the Times, and all the books of Mudie's Library, seldom uses more than about 3,000 or 4,000 words in actual conversation. Accurate thinkers and close reasoners, who avoid vague and general expressions and wait till they find the word that exactly fits their meaning, employ a larger stock, and eloquent speakers may rise to a command of 10,000. The Hebrew Testament says all it has to say with 5,642 words; Milton's works are built up with 8,000, and Shakespeare, who displayed a greater variety of expression than any writer, produced all his plays with about 15,000 words.

The Missouri Conference has just held its seventy-second session. The statistics show local preachers, 147—a decrease of 7; members, 34,181—gain of 259, 1,559 adults and 461 infants baptized—a decrease in adult baptisms of 796; of infant baptisms, 59. Number of churches, 379 1-6—an increase of 15; parsonages, 80. Money expended on churches and parsonages, $47,925 41—increase of $14,167 50. Number of Sunday-schools, 321—a gain of 14; scholars, 20,273—gain of 681. The Sunday-schools have paid this year for missions, $1,016 75; literature, $5,481 24; for other objects, $317 20. Amount collected on Conference Fund, $3,968 11. Assessments for missions: foreign, $11,100—collected, $7,944 40; domestic, assessed, $5,550—collected, $4,227 33. Out of seventeen candidates for admission on trial, six were rejected. Verily, the sifting process has begun. Ten candidates were elected to deacon's orders. The assessment for church extension was $3,125, of which the Conference reported $2,249 61 collected. Dr. Morton, being on hand, went to work to raise the deficit, and he did it. So the Missouri Conference reports the church extension assessment paid in full.

Our Mission Work.

The "Forty Second Annual Report of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," came into our office last week. The report opens with the "Constitution of the Board of Missions," and an "Address to the Church," by the Secretary of the Board, Dr. I. G. John, in which he calls attention to several hopeful indications of "an upward movement of the missionary sentiment of our people," and shows that the "Bureau of Missionary Information," though hampered by want of means, has done immense service in disseminating "600,000 leaflets, or more than 2,000,000 pages of missionary matter." We join our wish with that of the Secretary, "that the Board will place larger facilities at our command in order that we may improve the quality of our leaflets and increase the volume of their supply." There is no use to try to disguise the fact that our people are wofully ignorant about the necessities of the heathen world, and of our operations as a church, by which we are endeavoring to supply their necessities by giving them the gospel. If instead of writing, "We will send the annual report to any one who will send his address and five cents in postage stamps," the Secretary had the means to print 500,000 copies of the report and scatter it broadcast through the whole church, then would our people learn what we are trying to do to evangelize the world, and then they would respond more earnestly and liberally to our appeals for help. We are evidently "penny-wise and pound-foolish" in some things. A few thousand dollars a year expended in a judicious dissemination of missionary intelligence would be a safe investment, and the returns, we think, would be largely in excess of what they are now or ever will be under our present system.

The report before us gives a summary of the domestic missions in the various Conferences; our Western work—that is, an account of what we are doing in the western part of our own country; a brief sketch of our foreign work; the Treasurer's report, and the Minutes of the last meeting of the Board. All of this is interesting reading; and if it could be put before our people, would do them an immense good. The Treasurer's report affords us a rare study. He has been at great labor to produce it, and we are studying it con amore. We have learned from it several things which have surprised us. It is curious to observe how the rate of giving for missions varies with localities. The Western Conferences, though younger, give more per capita than the Eastern Conferences. Denver reaches 64 cents per member; Los Angeles, $1 20; Montana, 97 cents; German Mission, $1 18; Illinois, 53 cents; Pacific, 50 cents; Mexican Border, 48 cents. There is not a Conference east of the Mississippi river that reaches up to the lowest of these figures, and only one on the west; and that is the Southwest Missouri, which paid last year 71 cents per member. Of the other Conferences, the range of giving is from 11 cents in the Western Virginia Conference to 47 cents in the Louisiana Conference. Taking the whole church together, the average for missions—foreign and domestic—is 30 cents per member. The amount raised for foreign missions reached the sum of $234,584 40; that for domestic missions, $92,426 75—the total being $327,011 15. The whole membership is put down at 1,107,477.

In regard to the offerings made during the "week of prayer" last year, this report confirms what this paper said at the time. We said then that the constituency of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was doing better in the matter of giving than any other part of the church; and now comes Dr. Kelley's report with the verification. The Mississippi Conference gave more during the "week of prayer" than any other, her offerings amounting to $1,988. Tennessee gave $1,945; South Carolina, $1,922; Baltimore, $1,846, and then little Louisiana, $1,796; Alabama, $1,658; North Carolina, $1,293, and then North Mississippi, $1,272. Our group of Conferences, containing 85,601 members, gave $5,056 during the "week of prayer;" and that is far better than any other group of contiguous Conferences in the whole church did. Here are the figures: Baltimore, Virginia and North Carolina, with 195,780 members, gave during that week $4,062. South Carolina, North Georgia and South Georgia, having 190,648 members, gave $4,060. Holston, Tennessee and Memphis, with 151,879 members, gave $3,058. Alabama, North Alabama and Florida, with a membership of 105,383, gave $4,030. The five Texas Conferences, with a membership of 119,136, gave $1,538. The Arkansas group (three Conferences), with 63,831 members, gave $830. The Missouri group (three Conferences), with 78,840 members, gave $1,219. These groups, excepting the two last mentioned, have much larger membership, and yet our constituency is ahead of the highest by nearly $1,000, not counting the $1,052 raised to send Bro. Newton to Japan, which amount does not appear in the report because it was not paid over to the Treasurer until after his report had been made up. We congratulate our readers upon this showing, and are vain enough to think that our paper had a little to do with bringing about that result.

There are other interesting items in the report to which we gladly call the attention of our readers. The report presents a schedule of church property in our foreign fields, which is quite gratifying. In Brazil we have 3 churches, valued at $53,288. In Central Mexican Mission we have 23 churches, 11 parsonages, and 13 schools—valued at $86,750. In Mexican Border Mission we have 14 churches, 4 parsonages, and 8 lots of ground—all valued at $34,584. In China we have 7 churches, 12 parsonages, 2 schools, 1 hospital, and 3 lots of ground—all valued at $121,153. The total value of our property in foreign fields, reported when the Treasurer made his report, is, then, $295,775. We have also property in Japan. Dr. Lambuth, in another column of this paper, gives an account of laying the corner-stone of a church in Kobe. We think this indicates substantial progress. It, however, sounds strange to read that we began work in China in 1848—just 40 years ago; and now are only able to report 233 members. Even in Brazil, where we have been at work only ten years, we show a larger membership; that being 259. But though the membership in China is the smallest in the church, they give more per capita, for missions than any of us, for last year they reached $1 27. If our home people would give that way, Dr. John would, doubtless, be compelled to call in help in the distribution of the funds. And why can't we give that way?

The report ends by announcing the assessments and appropriations for the current year. Assessments, $300,000; appropriations, $242,394 32, leaving a margin of over $57,000 for accidents and contingencies. We are gratified with the results shown by the report, and only repeat the wish that all the church might see it.

Bishop Duncan has changed the time of holding the German Mission Conference from November 7 to November 14.

The College Question Again.

BY REV. T. C. WIER, M. D.

This is a live question just now. Several brethren have been ventilating the subject, or, rather, discussing it, for the light does not yet shine through it. Among those who have written, Bro. Wyatt and Dr. Sullivan advocate the establishment of a male college in Mississippi. Bro. Honnoll argues against it. It is well to agitate the subject. It seemed a hard ruling when our last Conference session rejected seven young men for lack of educational qualifications according to the low standard required for admission. Now, I think it may have been just the thing to be done. The Conference was surprised. The church began to open its eyes. Something was needed. Something should be done. Most of our young men who apply for admission into the itinerant ministry are from the masses of the people; and so long as there is a low standard among the masses, and indifference in regard to education, our young men will come up deficient. We need something that will tone up the sentiments of the people and stimulate our young men with a more earnest desire for higher education. The high school and the college contribute to these ends. But the source of influence should be in our midst rather than without; within our State, our Conference, rather than beyond our borders. Brick and mortar are not everything; but they are something. The very sight of a brick academy or of a college building, with its group of boys and young men out on the campus, is suggestive and inspiring. The influence extends, in circling waves, to all the country round—to adjoining counties, to the borders of the State, and even beyond. Vanderbilt, Southern University and Centenary are good institutions—worthy and well qualified. But these educational fires are too far away for our people and our boys to feel the heat and see the light. Let us have in Mississippi a well-appointed male college; such an institution as shall inspire our young men with more earnest and enthusiastic desire for a better education. Let us bring the medicine to the patient rather than send the patient far away to get the medicine.

It is said there are persons ready to contribute money—thousands of dollars—to the establishment of a Methodist College in Mississippi. If this be so, and a hundred thousand or fifty thousand dollars are waiting for such investment, let us have the college, and let us begin at once. Given the conditions of that hypothetical claim above, and I am inclined to the opinion that the opposers—even my good Bro. Honnoll—would enter into the scheme with enthusiastic approval. Bro. Honnoll says that nine-tenths of our boys do not enter the high school. There is much truth, we are sorry to admit, in this declaration. Bill Arp, in a public lecture last year, said we were "educating ten girls to one boy." But, now, bring the college and the high school nearer to our boys, build them up in our midst; and who shall say that a much larger proportion of our boys will not avail themselves of the advantages afforded by such institutions? A male college at some eligible point in North Mississippi, well established, would be an inspiration to the ministry and membership of the entire Conference. Located at Kosciusko, it might draw its life from the two Conferences in Mississippi. Located at Holly Springs, it would be easily accessible, also, to West Tennessee, Arkansas and North Alabama.

We make these suggestions not as opposing existing colleges under the auspices of other Conferences. Dr. Hunnicutt, at the head of Centenary, will bring ability and energy to bear; and he should be sustained. Southern University, under Dr. Andrews, is already doing a grand work in the Christian education of young men. In the Vanderbilt we feel a generous pride, and claim a sort of hereditary right as one of its charter Conferences. But we would emulate the best results and strive for the best advantages by building up high schools and a first-class male college within our own borders.

SARDIS, Mississippi.

"The Girls and Boys."

BY PRESIDENT J. H. BRUNNER.

Under the above caption my friend, D. W. Foster, M. D., publishes, in the ADVOCATE, for August 23, an article to show that we ought "to establish all over the land manual-labor schools," and to "require every boy to do manual labor as well as to cultivate the intellectual faculties." A careful examination of the article does not show a similar requirement on the part of girls. Yet there is the admission that "more girls than boys are being educated," and reasons are given therefor.

We join issue with the Doctor when he pleads for manual labor by every boy in his class of schools:

First, there is incompatibility between hard bodily labor and assiduous mental toil. Let anyone make the experiment for himself. He may go out any morning, pull off his coat, delve into the soil, and tug away two solid hours; then return to his sanctum, covered with grime, take up his books and try to con his lesson. The more severe his manual labor has been, the less successful will be his mental effort. So was it found to be at Emory College, Ga., and at Emory and Henry College, Va., when these schools were run on the manual-labor plan.

Again, the labor in the manual-labor schools is a slip-shod affair—unsatisfactory and unprofitable every way. Better is the plan to put in full time while at work, and full time while at study. Both kinds of effort will thus bring better results. Perhaps, a hundred manual-labor schools have been started in this country with sanguine expectations. Disappointment has been the result in all cases. The schools have either died or been transformed into the ordinary study schools. Not a single one survives, so far as this scribe remembers, though his acquaintance extends over a dozen States. The impracticable is doomed from its birth. Poor boys succeed at our college. It takes but little to feed the body. Many of our students cook their own meals. Directly they are able to teach a public school, and thus get money to pay off old scores, and to begin another year. Nearly all our boys succeed in their after-school life. There is no better school for poor boys than ours, and others like it. A manual-labor school would not be half so good. There is no argument against success while all the manual-labor schools have failed.

Ours is one of "the little colleges." But it has many seals to its mission. I have not in hand the long roll of the mechanics and machinists, the carpenters and contractors, the farmers and tradesmen, the merchants, lawyers, doctors, bankers, railroad presidents, legislators, judges, congressmen, senators, and other distinguished personages, who were educated here. There is, however, a roll of Hiwassee preacher-boys; and the last name on the list is numbered ninety-one! A voice from above seems to call us to "hold the fort." "Occupy till I come." "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, 1888.

Notes.

Of the President's letter of acceptance the Standard, of Chicago, says: "In point of ability and dignity and propriety of utterance it is certainly in keeping with his own high place and with the importance of those public questions with which he has to deal."

We received, a few days ago, a contribution of ten pages of notepaper of six different colors, written with a pencil, and so dirty and blurred that we must positively decline any attempt to decipher the meaning. The most of our correspondents write on white paper with black ink, and we hope that all will yet come to that custom.

A correspondent writes: "I notice a statement in the Southern Baptist Record, of August 30, which says that the Baptists have increased 7,245 per day for the past 103 years in the United States. Is this statement true?" Of course not. The Record has simply made a mistake. That would be an increase of more than two and a half millions a year. In 103 years it would amount to 272,375,775 Baptists in the United States. Of course it is a mistake. Printers sometimes get figures wrong.

Dr. R. H. Rivers, of Louisville, Ky., has been confined to his room since the last of July. We sympathize deeply with our old teacher and pray for spiritual and bodily comfort. It saddens and rejoices us to hear the Doctor talk this way in the Central Methodist:

My physician says that my pastoral work is done. I love my work, and have often said: "Father, if it be possible let this cup pass." I have prayed for years: Let me cease at once to work and live. For fifty-five years I have been effective. I have never been on the superannuated or supernumerary list. Now to be laid on the shelf is a great sorrow; but I will not repine. No murmur shall ever pass my lips. Come what will, I shall humbly bow to his will. My way is clear. The clouds are all gone. The Lord is good. He will give grace and glory.

Rev. C. E. W. Smith, writing in the Pacific Methodist, on "Pulpit Plagiarism," closes a peppery article after this fashion:

The ministry demands a law and order league among them whose business it will be to arrest and prosecute these conscious or unconscious "limping pulpit orators" who are doing infinitely more than "crippling" their own "reputations." They are branding the entire ministry as guilty of fraud; and when these very men are, on account of their "superior preaching ability," often found in our best stations and in places of responsibility and honor, is it to be wondered that the people tolerate them and apologize for them, and that the world doubts the pulpit. They are always smooth-tongued fellows, who prophesy smooth things, because they know "the people like to have it so," and will thus add to their reputation of charitableness and salary, too.

In a letter to Gen. Fisk, the Prohibition candidate for the presidency, Bishop Hurst, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, closes with these words:

The vote next November will surprise the country, and some people will have their eyes opened for the first time to the fact that there is an aroused American conscience and a deep-seated determination which will never cease work until the saloon is dead.

I trust you may have the strength and the patience to meet the crisis. You have the prayers and best wishes of multitudes all over the land. If I had a thousand votes, they should every one go for the Prohibition ticket this fall. My cordial support of the Prohibition party has become so much a matter of conviction that I don't care who knows it. If anybody's boy can only be saved from death by the curse of rum, through any word or example of mine, he shall have them both with all my heart.

We notice that several of our church papers have published an unqualified approval of Dr. T. T. Munger's article on "Religion's Gain from Science," in the last Forum. We suspect that the editors have been imposed upon by a little slip of paper giving a resume of the article and sent by the publishers of the magazine. How a Methodist editor can endorse all that article, and yet hold on to the "standards," we can not see. In the main, the article is very good, but there is in it a positive denial of the "fall of Adam," and "eternal punishment." He says: "By establishing the antiquity of the race, and by including man in the physical evolution of creation, science has left no standing-room for such doctrines as that the fall of a single progenitor involved the race in sin and guilt, and that physical death is the penalty of original sin." The denial of "eternal punishment" is in these words: "The gospel itself by its own spirit of humanity is mitigating and sweeping away the horrible doctrine of eternal torture. It is, indeed, still held as nominal orthodoxy in some quarters, but it is the blackest of departing ghosts." According to our "standards," these are "dead flies" in a pool of fragrant ointment.

Personals.

We have seen at several places in the city an article of cotton cloth designed to take the place of bagging. It seems to be well adapted to the purpose, and being as cheap as bagging, or perhaps, cheaper, and several factories being engaged in making it, no doubt the planters will be supplied with sufficient quantity to wrap up their crops, and thus be able to drive the "Bagging Trust" to the wall.

I. C. Lanphier, the originator of the Fulton Street (New York) Noonday Prayer Meeting, recently celebrated his eightieth birthday. He has been conducting these meetings for thirty years and is still ably carrying them on.

A $27,000 bronze statue of Robert Burns was unveiled, August 30, in Washington Park, Albany, N. Y. Rev. Robert Collyer made a brilliant speech, there being present many Scottish societies from Canada and the United States.

Florence Nightingale is said to be a confirmed invalid at St. Thomas Hospital, London. She is sixty-nine years old. She has never recovered from a spinal affliction contracted during her services in the Crimean War.

The Alabama Advocate announces the death of Rev. G. M. G. Dunkin, of the North Alabama Conference.

Logan D. Dameron, manager of the St. Louis Advocate, donated $385 35 of the earnings of the paper to the Missouri Conference at its late session, for widows and orphans.

We notice that our Missouri correspondent, Rev. Dr. M. B. Chapman, has been stationed at Park and Arch Church, Hannibal, Mo.

The Methodist Times, of London, gives an account of a Bible class in Bristol which numbers 600. Seven years ago it began with thirty-five members.

Rev. A. B. Jones, of Huntsville, Ala., writes: "Our school opened better than ever. Ninety boarders and 25 pupils to date, and still they come."

Richard A. Proctor, the astronomer, died recently in New York, aged fifty-seven years.

The Democrats of New York have renominated Gov. Hill by acclamation.

Hon. Edward J. Gay has been renominated unanimously for Congress by the Democrats of the Third District in this State.

The Brookhaven Leader says: "Verily, the place to study human nature in all its undisguised meanness, is an assessment roll." The church has a "roll" of that kind sometimes, and on it the "idolaters" are discovered.

We received on Monday last an invitation to attend a reopening of the First Church in Independence, Mo. The church has been renovated at an expense of $5,000, and the reopening will take place September 30, Rev. Dr. Mathews, of St. Louis, officiating. Bro. W. B. Palmore, the pastor, has our thanks for the invitation.

The yellow fever at Jacksonville, Fla., seems to be on the increase, though the number of deaths remain about the same per day. Quite a number of trained nurses have gone from this city under the leadership of Fred Southmayd, of the Red Cross Society. Texas quarantined New Orleans for two days, though the health authorities here say that there has not even been a suspicious case in our city.

We hear that Bro. R. J. Jones, of Vicksburg, Miss., who has been quite ill, is convalescing and will soon be able to resume his regular work. During his illness his pulpit was filled by Dr. C. K. Marshall, who enters into every such opportunity with a zeal and eloquence that time does not abate.

Dr. Black's book, "Christian Womanhood," may be had of the author, at Meridian, Miss., or the Methodist Publishing House, at Nashville, at the following rates: Cloth, $1; Morocco, gilt-edge, $2 25, postpaid.

This from Bro. McCoy, of the Alabama Advocate, will apply to Mississippi and Louisiana:

Ninety thousand Methodists in Alabama, with a growing country, and led by as true a set of ministers as ever kneeled at an altar or ascended a pulpit, may expect God to hold them responsible for the accomplishment of a great work. He has given us the territory and put the resources at our command, and now, in the name of his Son, he demands of us the utmost zeal and the greatest possible degree of godliness. Let us do something worthy of the sublime gospel we have been called to preach.

The completion of the third large building of the NASHVILLE (TENNESSEE) COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES will open choice rooms for twenty-five (25) pupils in the boarding department. These rooms are on the second floor. Early applicants will receive very favorable terms. Apply early. Patronage at end of second week 220, of which 90 are boarders. Daily accessions. Now is the time to secure advantages.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev J. L. Wright, from Athens, La., writes, September 10: "Have been engaged in protracted services since the fourth of August, and have had encouraging success, there having been twenty conversions and twenty-two accessions. I am holding the second protracted meeting at this place, and the congregations are large and attentive, and 'the Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.' My health is not good."

—Bro. John A. Miller writes, September 11, from Simsboro, La.: "We are in the midst of a good meeting at this place, there having been to this time several conversions and eight accessions. God is with us."

—Rev. W. D. Bass, from Sparta circuit, North Mississippi Conference, writes: "I have held all of my protracted meetings, and they have resulted in 175 conversions and 122 accessions, and about 40 family altars erected. The revival blaze in the church was so great that it drew all denominations near the cross. There hundreds, young and old, praised the blessed Master. Collections ordered by the Conference are in good subscriptions."

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes from Lauderdale circuit, Mississippi Conference: "Our meeting at Brogan Chapel resulted in several conversions and eleven additions to the church. Our meeting in Lauderdale closed September 13 with fine results, after lasting seven days. At the former place Bro. Lee Barr, a Presbyterian elder, did good service, and at the latter Bro. Carley helped us mightily in the Lord."

—Rev. W. S. Shipman, from Shannon, Miss., writes, September 14: "Our stay in the hill country has been pleasant and invigorating. We return to our own good people in the Yazoo Valley to finish our work for this Conference year."

—Rev. F. A. Whitson writes from Okalona circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We have closed a fine meeting at Pine Grove, five miles north of Aberdeen, resulting in nineteen conversions and twenty-two accessions. It was one of the best meetings I ever attended. Our collections at that place are all up in full, and I think we will be able to build a church there."

—Rev. C. R. Godfrey writes from West Melville, La., September 11: "I have been here several days, preaching at night to large and appreciative congregations. Six additions and three baptisms to date. Health of the people good."

—Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh writes from Crowville, La., September 13: "At a meeting held by Rev. A. W. Moore and myself at Ogden's Schoolhouse, on the Winsboro circuit, we had forty-two accessions. A Bible class of twenty-two adults was organized, a prayer meeting and Sunday-school started, and a number of family altars set up."

—Bro. J. R. Roberson, writing from Houston, Miss., September 15, says: "Bro. R. H. Kennedy and myself have just closed another meeting of five days' duration, resulting in 50 or 60 conversions and 17 accessions. I have had up to date 125 conversions and 60 accessions, with one meeting yet to hold. I think the finances will come up in full. This has been one of the happiest years of my life."

Literary Notes.

Dr. Charles Mackay, poet and journalist, is now in his seventy-third year, broken in health and reduced in circumstances. A fund is being raised for him by a committee of which Tennyson is president.

"The relation of the sexes to government," will be discussed by Prof. E. D. Cope, in the leading article of the October Popular Science Monthly. Prof. Cope shows from psychological and social facts, which everyone has noticed, that women are not adapted mentally or physically for the functions of government, and that if they were to take an active part it would react unfavorably on the vastly more important interests of the home.

Mr. R. L. Stevenson's new work, "The Master of Ballantrae," will begin to appear in the November number of Scribner's Magazine, and will be continued late into 1889. It is to be illustrated by Mr. William Hole, N. R. S. A.

In the great town library of Konigsburg Prof. Tschakert has discovered a number of hitherto unpublished, indeed unknown, sermons and scholia by Luther. They belong to the important period 1517-21, and are undoubtedly genuine. The sermons were preached at or near Wittenburg, and give a clear idea of the conflict in which Luther was then engaged.

A volume of historical papers by T. W. Higginson, entitled "Travelers and Outlaws; Episodes in American History," is in press of Lee & Shepard.

Among the coming books is "Ireland Under Coercion," by William H. Hulburt. Mr. Hulburt's long career on the staff of the New York World, having made him well known, his book will, doubtless, be read with great interest here.

Dr. R. A. Young has a work in press entitled "Celebrities and Less." The contents are made up of sketches of celebrated personages, living and dead, beginning with Spurgeon and ending with Dr. McFerrin. So says the Nashville Advocate.

Ticknor & Co. announce, among their September books, "Western China," a journey to the great Buddhist centre of Mount Omei, by the Rev. Virgil C. Hart, B. D.; and "A Short History of the Secession War," by Rossiter Johnson, author of "The History of the War of 1812-15."

Herbert Spencer gives only a small part of the day to literary work. He is preparing materials for his own biography.

BOOKS.

SIBYLLA. Adapted from the German. By Cornelia McFadden. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis. Price, $1 25.

The scenes of the story are mostly laid in a small German village by the seashore and in Berlin. The time is the few years preceding and during the Franco-Prussian war. The characters are well drawn by the author, and are realistic and natural.

THE PROBLEM; OR, THE IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT IN POLITICS. By T. Villars, D. D., President of McKendree College, Illinois. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis. Price, in paper, twenty-five cents.

This work has been before the public since 1885, but this new edition contains valuable statistics, placed in an appendix, and will be found a valuable book.

CHRISTIAN WOMANHOOD. By Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference. Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.

Dr. Black has written a very interesting book on "one of the liveliest questions of the day." He treats the subject under five general heads in the historical method. He presents his thoughts with clearness and force, and his pertinent illustrations add vividness to the presentation. The picture which he paints of Pagan Womanhood is appalling in its darkness. The Outlook for the Christian Woman, which closes the book, is eloquent with hopes and expectations of what our religion will, in the near future, do for the women of the church and the land. Between these extremes the author shows clearly the position of woman in the family and in the church, and shows how, under the elevating tendencies of Christianity, she gradually arose from the position of a "nobody" to an exalted place in the thoughts and esteem and honor of enlightened men. Dr. Black has brushed away the illogical conclusions of prejudice which have so long obscured Paul's teachings on the subject of women "prophesying." His extracts from Methodist history show conclusively that our church is behind John Wesley on this subject.

We like this little book. We like its method. We like its conservative tone. We like its hopefulness. We hope it may be extensively circulated and carefully read.

Notice.

At the request of many friends of prohibition, I do hereby issue a call for a State Prohibition Convention to meet in the city of New Orleans, on October 4, 1888, to put an electoral ticket in the field for President and Vice-President; also any other work necessary for the good of prohibition in this State.

TWO BABIES.

BY MRS. GEORGE ARCHIBALD.

There is a little baby
Always gentle, always sweet,
Who doesn't lack a beauty
That can make a babe complete;
Who never cries unduly,
Who is never, never rude,
While anything she doesn't know,
No mortal baby could.
So winsome and so dainty
That the careless turn to look—
But oh! this perfect baby
Is a baby in a book.

There is a little baby
With sunshine in her eyes;
And many a limit the critical
Might coldly criticise.
Her nose is over-saucy,
Her temper does incline,
When her small world is going wrong,
To take a twist like mine.
And half the people pass her by
Nor deem her worth a look,
But oh! she suits me better
Than the baby in the book!

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to contribute a few lines to your most valuable paper. We have a very good Sunday-school, and about a dozen members in the Bible class. We have a splendid teacher; she talks about the lesson and instructs us very much. Her name is Mrs. Carr. The Presbyterians are now carrying on a meeting, and have organized at this place with seven members. We have a very good preacher—Bro. Randle—and you ought to hear his wife sing. She puts her whole soul and voice into it, and we have some fine singing. Hoping to see this in print, I will close. Yours, etc.,

ROBERT A. WOODS.

OAK RIDGE, Louisiana.

Out of Himself.

A lawyer of eminence in one of our cities had a son who gave him great anxiety. The young man did not drink; he neither gambled nor yielded to any vice to excess; but, with undoubted talent, he was light, fickle, "feather-headed," to use the expressive country phrase.

He had no governing motive, no strong foundation of any principle or hope. He was cheerful and affectionate in the family and in society, but he would not work; he had no ambition to succeed in the law, as his father had done, or in any other line of life.

There really seemed to be no reason why he should not begin to drink and gamble to-morrow, and let his shallow life run out into a muddy, miserable end.

One day some accidental circumstance led him to the county jail. He came out in a fever of indignation at the cruelties exercised upon the inmates, and their utterly neglected and wretched condition—for this was before the days of systematic prison reform. It was incredible to him, in his easy, luxurious life, that such misery existed at all, and that it existed in the midst of a Christian community.

The young man appeared to be startled into an erect, manly attitude. He called a meeting of his influential friends; he presented the case to them with fervid eloquence; he visited not only the jail, but the county almshouse and insane asylum.

His father was disconcerted and annoyed. He was a respectable, conventional member of society, accustomed to bear good-humoredly with social abuses from which others suffered. He certainly never had expected his son to break forth as a reformer or radical.

But the son was in earnest. He worked at this needed reform for two or three years, until it was accomplished, and then took up his profession with a grave, sincere zeal.

But this was not all. Not only were his moral perceptions awakened, but his soul, also, was roused from its lethargy. The obligation to man, his neighbor, suggested naturally his duty to God; and, humbly and seriously, he entered upon a truly and deeply religious life.

"From a frivolous boy he had suddenly become a Christian man," said his father, "and the jail has done it. How, I do not know. But the jail has done it."

A call to some great work, no matter what, provided it is unselfish, is the best help which can come to a young man when beginning life. It lifts him immediately out of his petty self-conceit, sets him on a height—a level of noble thought and feeling from which he never will willingly descend. It summons his scattered, idle, sleeping faculties, as the trumpet calls the disorderly troops in bivouac, drills, disciplines them, gives them a purpose in the world's great struggle.

Fathers can not always choose this call or purpose for their sons. But God in some wise sends it to every young man, though many refuse to answer the summons.—Youth's Companion.

A True Story of a Horse.

One bitter cold morning, last winter, as I was standing with my little Charley at the front parlor window, I saw a horse coming down the street, drawing a light wagon and driven by a young man. They came on, until they were just in front of our house, when the horse stopped, backed the wagon up to the curbstone, and refused to go any farther.

The young man began whipping the horse.

At last, when he found the horse would not go, he sent to the stable for the hostler, who came hurrying down.

Together they whipped the horse, but to no purpose.

At last I became worried and said to my little boy, "Charley, go down to the cook, and tell her mamma wants her to give you a large lump of sugar, and take it out to the man, and ask him to give it to the horse."

Charley was pleased and, going quickly to the cook, got the sugar and carried it out.

"Mister, mister!" I heard him say, "here is some sugar to make that horse go."

The driver gave him the sugar.

Then the men waited until the horse had finished it, and then the driver got into the wagon, pulled the reins, said, "Get up," and the horse went on without further difficulty.

Charley came in delighted. "If I were that man," said he, "I would carry a lump of sugar in my pocket when I had to drive that horse." "And now," continued he, "please give me a lump of sugar, too." And he got it.—Dumb Animals.

A BIBLE PUZZLE.—This puzzle has often been published, but perhaps some of our young folks have not seen it. It would be interesting and good practice for anyone, young or old, to find the answer. How many will?

A young student was asked, "How many boys are there in your class?" He replied: "If you multiply the number of Jacob's sons by the number of times the Israelites compassed Jericho, and add to the product the number of measures of barley which Boaz gave Ruth, divide this by the number of Haman's sons, subtract the number of each kind of clean beasts that went into the ark, multiply by the number of men that went to seek Elijah after he was taken to heaven, subtract from this Joseph's age at the time he stood before Pharoah, add the number of stones in David's bag when he killed Goliath, subtract the number of furlongs that Bethany was distant from Jerusalem, divide by the number of anchors cast out when Paul was shipwrecked, and subtract the number of persons saved in the ark, the remainder will be the answer."

There was evidently a vein of sly humor in the missionary agent who was advised by the pastor of a western church with whom he wished to make an appointment that there was so much religious interest among the people as to make it unwise to present the subject of missions then. The agent accepted the situation, mildly remarking that he would like to be notified when the religious interest should so far have declined as to make it proper for the people to consider the subject of missions.

THE COMMONPLACE WOMAN.

BY LOUISE PHILLIPS.

We have read, as you know, for ages and ages,
Of a willowy maiden devoid of a spine,
A fabulous, prehistoric young person,
Who on white of an egg and cracker could dine.

But I write to you now of a commonplace woman
Who's shockingly healthy and fearfully fat,
Who never has headache or nervous prostration,
Commonplace! What could be more so than that?

She doesn't "do" Kensington cut talls or rushes
Nor has she a screen with a one-legged stork;
She doesn't adore Charlotte Russe or blanc-manges,
But prefers mirmantic, commonplace pork.

She hasn't a quilt of crazy, silk patchwork,
Nor the tiniest bit of crocheted nareeme;
She can not perform Beethoven's sonatas,
Nor sing but the most commonplace little lay.

She hasn't a gift for the art decorative,
Painting Japanese monsters on Yankee stone jar,
That stands in a corner to look so aesthetic,
But that grieves to the soul the old household Lar.

She never paints song birds nor crickets on china,
To be drowned every day in our tea-cups, alas!
Or forms cabbage-roses of ribbon on velvet,
And naught does she know of the much-hammered brass.

She can not write poems that glow like a furnace,
Nor sonnets as cold as the Apennine's snow,
For if she chops up her ideas into metre,
There's a rush in the ebb and a halt in the flow.

She doesn't believe she was born with a mission,
Unless, I may be, to be happy and well;
Nor does she at all understand protoplasm,
And looks upon women who do, as a "sell."

But there's worse to be told of this commonplace woman,
Who owns neither bird, nor dog, nor pet cat,
They say that she's really in love with her husband,
Commonplace? What could be more so than that?

And when we all stand at the last great tribunal,
Where great and where small are assigned each a part,
May the angels make room for the commonplace woman
Who knows naught of literature, science, or art.

—Good Housekeeping.

CUMBERED HOUSEKEEPERS.—Good housekeepers are sometimes unmannerly. When Martha became so much cumbered about much serving, and so jealous about her sister keeping with Christ, she tried to get her away, even at the risk of making Jesus think he was giving them a great deal too much trouble to entertain him. Some houses are so clean that none feel welcome to set foot in them. Some mothers drive their husbands and sons to the places of dissipation, where they can have comfort if everything is not exactly so clean. Some bountiful entertainers get so red in the face, and so rumpled in their tempers, and so fussy in their preparations, that we wish we were far away until they could calm down. Some far-famed providers for the body neglect their own souls, and the souls of all their families, in their carefulness about everything but the one thing needful. They choose to do what they are doing—they are cross because others will not choose to do as they do—but they fail to choose the good part that shall never be taken away from them. Do you know any that answer to this photograph? If so, let Christ rebuke their well-meant kindness, but their ill-considered anxiety and bad manners.

WHAT TO READ WHEN THE DAY IS OVER.—It is wise at night to read—but for a few minutes—some books which will compose and soothe the mind; which will bring us face to face with the true facts of life, death, and eternity; which will make us remember that man doth not live by bread alone; which will give us before we sleep a few thoughts worthy of a Christian man with an immortal soul in him. And, thank God, no one need go far to find such books. I do not mean merely religious books, excellent as they are in these days; I mean any books which help to make us better and wiser and soberer and more charitable persons; any books which will teach us to despise what is vulgar and mean, foul and cruel, and to love what is noble and high-minded, pure and just. In our own English language we may read by hundreds books which tell of all virtue and of all praise; the stories of good and brave men and women; of gallant and heroic actions; of deeds which we ourselves should be proud of doing; of persons whom we feel to be better, wiser, nobler, than we are ourselves.—Canon Kingsley.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion and preparation, curative power superior to any other article of the kind.

WILLIAMS—Mrs. MARY JANE WILLIAMS was born in the parish of West Feliciana, Louisiana, January 27, 1828; moved with her widowed mother to the parish of East Baton Rouge in 1840, where she continued to live up to the date of her death, June 9, 1888. She was married to Dr. C. A. Williams, November, 8, 1846. She joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. Benjamin Jones in about the year 1857 or 58, and remained a consistent and faithful member until her death.

One who was most intimate with her, and had tenderly nursed her during her illness, writes thus about her: "She was sick just one week. It was the most peaceful death I ever witnessed. She remarked she had never believed that she could meet death as she then felt, saying, 'It is no more to me than going to sleep.' One morning, when asked by her husband how she felt, she replied, 'Not an ache or pain, passing away as gently as a lamb.' During the silent watches of one of the nights she repeated the twenty-third Psalm, emphasizing the fourth verse. At one time, whilst we all stood around her bedside, she said, 'Now you all see what you have to pass through.' Her last words were, 'My mission on earth is finished.' She was impressed from the commencement of her sickness that she would not recover, and so expressed herself. She was a gentle, consistent Christian, and we loved her very much. We shall sadly miss her; but our loss is her eternal gain."

Thus has passed away from earth one who adorned all the relations of life. Her home was made always attractive to her husband and children by the tender and unfailing ministries of her affectionate attention. She and her chief delight in the domestic circle, and cared but little for the great world outside. She dispensed a generous and gratifying hospitality, and never seemed more contented and cheerful than when she was surrounded in her pleasant home by relations and friends. She took great delight in caring for the ministers of her beloved church. Many a worn itinerant has found a most welcome rest from labor under her ample roof-tree, and has felt himself lifted anew for the Master's service by the expression of her sincere friendship and by the enjoyment of her helpful hospitality. She had a most sympathetic nature; the sorrowing and distressed always found in her a ready friend. The good Lord had showered many blessings on her pathway. She was permitted to live to a ripe old age, and was sustained by the blessed solace that she had striven to make life pleasant to her husband and children and friends, and that she had all along loved and served her Maker. Her husband, four daughters and two sons are left to mourn her loss; but they will have the blessed consolation of knowing that her association with them here on earth was ever a source of true pleasure, and that she is now waiting to welcome them to our Father's home on high.

C. G. ANDREWS.

HUNT—Dr. JAMES M. HUNT died lately in Vicksburg. He was well known, and his death was announced in the city papers. Several tributes to his memory were also inserted in those papers. As he was a Christian Methodist, an obituary may be admitted into the ADVOCATE. He had traits of character well defined and known to all. "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might," was carried into practice by Dr. Hunt to an extent greater than is usual among men. He was emphatically a man of work. Having lost his mother in Kentucky, he came to Vicksburg in the twelfth year of his age. When at school he worked at his books as though there was importance in the result expected. The writer knew him then and ever since. When a young boy he secured employment with Hardaway & White, druggists in Vicksburg. He commenced with the purpose of placing his employers as much under obligations to him for service as he could be to them for salary.—Mr. Hardaway lives, and states this to have been the case. After a few years the young druggist had prepared himself to enter a medical college, having worked for his employers by day and for himself by night. He had no time—perhaps, no inclination—"to go with the multitude" to club-rooms or billiard-rooms or, worse, drinking saloons. Having saved the means to pay his way, he attended medical lectures first in New York, then in New Orleans, where he graduated in 1857.

Dr. Warren Stone saw something in this young graduate, as he said afterwards, to cause the selection of Dr. Hunt to be assistant physician in Dr. Stone's private infirmary and the Charity Hospital. The war came on, and, upon recommendation of Dr. Stone to J. P. Benjamin, Confederate Secretary of War, Dr. Hunt received appointment to position as surgeon in the army in advance of other young physicians. At one time he had professional charge of surgeons and physicians with military authority added, which was necessary to enforce discipline among several thousand sick and convalescent soldiers and attendants, at the White Sulphur Springs, then a Confederate hospital.

Soon after the war he married Mary V. Cook, daughter of Rev. E. G. Cook, and settled in Vicksburg, where for twenty years he had most extensive and lucrative practice. In surgery especially he had acknowledged success. During all this time he was a man of work, observed and almost condemned by his friends; by day and night, for his patients; his wife and children not neglected. His attention to his family was matter of remark, as it was daily seen.

With his opinions and inclinations not favorable to religion, he finally gave way to better thoughts. Unknown to any except this writer, Dr. Hunt was successful in the attempt to control himself in the way of his better judgment when enlightened by the Divine Spirit, no doubt. His residence was adjoining the Methodist parsonage. The preachers were congenial with him, and they were in most friendly accord as visiting neighbors. Some of these pastors have died; others still live: Bishop Galloway, Revs. Carradine, Woodward and R. J. Jones.

A religious wife was also an helpmeet, and her influence, together with other agencies of grace, were blessed to his spiritual good. He became convinced, penitent and was converted. The writer was called to Dr. Hunt's bedside at midnight to find him a bright and glad convert. He commenced to serve the church as steward and trustee, and, though amused to such duties, he did what he could until he could work no more.

His wife and two grown children survive. His funeral was largely attended by kindred, friends and the public. Dr. C. G. Andrews, from Jackson; Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, and Rev. R. S. Jones, his pastor, united in the pulpit service in the Methodist church. E. G. C.

TURNER—Mrs. HARRIET CATHARINE TURNER (nee Kelley) was born November 14, 1833, and died August 5, 1888; professed religion in 1847, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Spring Ridge Church; was married to William H. Turner, February 13, 1851. She lived 55 years, and 41 years of this time she was a consistent member of the church, and was found faithful in the discharge of the duties that go to make a life of usefulness in the vineyard of the Lord. She lived to raise nine children—all of whom were trained in the nurture of the Lord, and are consistent members of the church, except the youngest, only eight years old, and, no doubt, the seeds of life have been sown in her nature, by a pious mother, that will yield the fruit of righteousness in days to come. She was a woman of deep piety and strong faith. She had borne the labors and afflictions of life with patience and fortitude, and by these had grown strong in the faith of him who is able to sustain his children even in the darkest hours.

She was a long and patient sufferer, but she bore her painful afflictions with resignation, often saying, "Let the will of the Lord be done." In her death her husband lost a true and faithful wife; her children, a precious mother, the church one of its brightest members. We deeply mourn our loss, but not without hope. W. W. WILLIAMS.

MORRIS—The following tribute of respect was prepared in behalf of the Woman's Missionary Society of Moss Point, Miss.:

In the death of Mrs. FANNIE MORRIS, who was called "up higher" on July 9, 1888, this society and our Christian community have sustained a much felt loss. She was one of those sweet characters whom all loved, because she loved all. The sick and needy, the bereaved, the rejoicing, found in her a helpful and sympathetic friend. She was the advocate of every good cause in her church and community, and supported it with her means and with her presence as far as her feeble health and household duties would allow. We miss her cheerful presence in our society and in our community. May we meet her again in that happy home where farewells are never spoken.

MRS. CLARA B. DRAKE, for Com.

PERRY—The following resolutions were adopted by Hickory Sabbath-school in honor of Sister F. W. PERRY, who died at the residence of G. B. Harper, July 26, 1888:

Resolved, That the Sabbath-school has lost one of its most faithful and efficient members and teachers, and we deeply deplore her loss and extend to the bereaved relatives our sympathy. May they be consoled by God's promise, which says: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labor and their works do follow them."

Resolved, That her zeal as a teacher was untiring; and may the seed of good sown in the hearts of her little pupils spring up to eternal life, and as, one by one, they are gathered home, may they appear as jewels in her crown!

Resolved, That while it is sad to give up those so devoted to good works, yet we would not call back one who has fallen asleep in Jesus, to earth's sorrows and afflictions. We humbly submit to his providence, knowing that he doeth all things well. May we all profit by her Christian example and meet in that beautiful home over there!

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded on the minutes of the Sabbath-school, and also be sent to the Newton Dispatch, Alabama Advocate, and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and a copy be furnished the family of the deceased.

The Word "Dollar."

Our word dollar dates back to 1785, when a resolution was passed by Congress which provided that it should be the unit of money of the United States. Another resolution was passed in 1785, August 5, providing that it should weigh 375.64 grains of pure silver. The mint was established in 1792, and was required to coin silver dollars containing 371.25 grains of pure silver. This was due to the influence of Alexander Hamilton. No dollars were coined until 1794, and then irregular. They are worth now $100 each. In 1794 the coinage of regular dollars began. Our coin was an adaptation of the Spanish milled dollar, a coin very popular wherever the Spaniards traveled. The coin was called "piaster," meaning a flat piece of metal. It is supposed that the Spaniards took the German "thaler," and called it by the name of "piaster." The word dollar is entered in Bailey's English Dictionary in 1745, and was used repeatedly by Shakespeare at the beginning of the seventeenth century, especially in Macbeth, ii. 2, 62: "Till she disbursed * * * ten thousand dollars to our general use." (See also The Tempest, ii. 1, 17.) The question where Shakespeare found the word dollar is answered by the fact that the Hanseatic towns maintained a great establishment called the Steel-Yard in London. The Steel Yard merchants were mostly North Germans, who would call the German thaler, as it was spelled, "dah-ler." These same merchants occasioned the word sterling, an abreviation of the word "esterling." As the Hanseatic trade was particularly brisk on the Baltic and in Russia, the standard coins of the Hanse merchants were called esterlings, and sterling came to mean something genuine and desirable. The word "thaler" means "coming from dale or valley," the first dollars having been coined in a secluded valley in Germany. Their reliability was known by being coined in a certain valley town where honest weight was understood and known to be given.—The Banker's Monthly.

A Cooking Clock.

The latest achievement in portable double-action furniture is the cooking clock, now on exhibition.

It is made of white wood, stained cherry, and is constructed after the style of the old-fashioned grandfather's clock. Here the resemblance ceases, however, for before one is through inspecting its multiform surprises one wonders whether some bright little automaton will not spring out of a concealed drawer or secret receptacle and offer you a diamond ring and a chromo.

In the first place, the lower part of this mighty engine of domestic economy contains a gasoline stove, which, when in use, is pulled out like a drawer from its resting-place. Below the stove is a receptacle for kitchenware, while above it is a china closet containing four shelves. Above all this is perched a calendar clock, back of which is attached a gasoline vapor tank, which is connected with the stove by a pipe concealed behind the case.

You might suppose that this collection of conveniences would have satisfied its enterprising inventor—but no. To the left, and fitted securely to one side of the case, is an argand burner, supplied with gas generated by the gasoline vapor tank above-mentioned. When cooking is in progress the woodwork of the stove clock is protected by a sheet of asbestos paper, which is placed back of the stove. When the stove, china closet, etc., are not in use they are pushed back into the case, the front of which is decorated with a handsome mirror.

Besides this multiplicity of useful combinations the ingenious inventor has found room within the magical case for a writing desk and a drawer for writing materials.

What more in the way of condensed comfort can one ask for in one article of furniture? With one of these stove clocks and a folding bed in a room, the occupant has a kitchen, bedroom and parlor all in one.—Jewellers' Weekly.

"One earnest gaze upon Christ is worth a thousand scrutinies of self. The man who beholds the cross, and beholding it weeps, can not be really blind nor perilously self-ignorant.—Dean Vaughan.

Scientific Study of the Bible.

Dr. T. T. Munger thinks that the Bible should be regularly taught in our universities. In an article in The Century, for September, he says: "There is now no public sentiment that needs to be regarded which complains of the scientific study of any subject. If in some regions and from some sources there should be complaint at treating sacred themes in a scientific way, it is a complaint that the university must be ready to meet and to endure. It will lessen as the conception, now rapidly growing, gains ground, that all education is conducted in the scientific or inductive method. The teacher who now wages a warfare in his class-room in behalf of free-trade, or protection, or evolution, is behind his age. The true teacher is one who gives the facts, the principles, and the laws of his subject. If it be said that such a theory of education reduces it to a cold and colorless thing, it may be replied that the true teacher puts the warmth and color into the facts and laws. He may hide as much conviction as he sees fit within such teaching, but he must not contradict the very law of education—namely, teaching the student to think and giving him matter for thought.

"This method can be carried into a study of the Bible. Objection might come from three sources—strict sectarians, who regard the Bible as a fetich too sacred to be touched except in their own way; atheists and infidels, who nourish a contempt for the Bible as an antiquated piece of rubbish; and the devotees of culture, who vary the monotony of their agnosticism by temporary zeal for Classicism, Buddhism, and, of late, Mohammedanism. To the first it may be said, We do not propose to undermine your sect, but to send your students back to you with a better knowledge of the Book that you revere. To the second it may be said, This is still a Christian nation and the Christian religion is a real factor and power in the life of the people. We do not require your students to become believers, but we do require of them to become familiar with a fact and a force which they will meet at every turn in their future careers. To the third it may be said, It is not improbable that, in your varying enthusiasms, you will soon come to take an interest in the Babylonian myths, or in the psychic element in the Hebrew prophet, or in a comparative study of Oriental and Western symbolism, in which case a thorough knowledge of the Book most intimately related to these subjects would not be amiss.

"In order not to leave the subject in a vague condition, I will indicate, or rather hint, the direction such scientific study of the Bible might take.

"Genesis: the nature, sources, and composition of the book.

"The Pentateuch: its authorship and composition.

"The Hebrew commonwealth: its nature and growth.

"An outline of Jewish history.

"The nature and meaning of such books as the Song of Solomon and Jonah.

"The theism in the Psalms.

"The argument in the Book of Job, and its literary features.

"The Proverbs, and their relation to Oriental thought.

"The Captivity, and its effect upon the nation.

"An analysis of the Prophecy of Isaiah, and its literary features.

"An outline of the life of Jesus Christ.

"The sources of the Christian Church as found in The Acts.

"Christian institutions; their origin.

"The forces in Christianity which led to its reception and continuance."

Now that the rush of the summer work in somewhat over, we desire to call attention to some matters looking forward to profitable work for the fall months, and through the winter. Write to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va., and they will show you how to do a grand work, which can be made a permanent thing.

There is plenty of hypocrisy in the church, but there is a good deal more outside of it; and many an infidel when denouncing the hypocrisy of his neighbors, is himself the biggest hypocrite of the whole. Many a man curses God in health, and prays to him in sickness; swears like a pirate in fair weather, and bellows like a calf in a storm. There is plenty of sham religion in the world, and a good deal of sham infidelity too.

Twenty-four Swedish maidens, ranging in age from 19 to 25, arrived at Castle Garden on the steamer Hekla, September 17. The Chinese Exclusion Bill was finally passed by the Senate on September 17. Senator Blair's motion to reconsider was defeated.

FOREIGN.

President Diaz, of Mexico, in a message to Congress, refers to relations with the United States, to the treaty on July 11 regarding the grazing of cattle, to the punishment of officers who crossed to Eagle Pass and Nogales, violating United States territory, and to the fact that the United States Congress had again taken up the Weil-La-Abra claims.

How Natural!—Both Mr. Bright and Mr. Gladstone sat for their portraits in recent years to the late eminent artist, Mr. Holl. To the former the artist ventured the remark, apropos of his being about to paint the latter's portrait: "It must be a very painful thing for you, Mr. Bright, that after all these years you should have found cause to sever your connection?" "Indeed it is," responded Mr. Bright, with a sigh; "to think that after we have trodden the same path together, shoulder to shoulder and hand in hand, we should be forced apart in the evening of our lives? And by what? By a bogey that has risen up within him and is beckoning him away from duty and sense—by a Frankenstein. Do your know, Mr. Holl, I seriously fear that my dear old friend's mind has really become radically undermined?" When the artist was at Hawarden, painting Mr. Gladstone, the subject of his portrait of Mr. Bright naturally arose. "Ah," said Mr. Gladstone, with much interest, "and how did you find him?" "Fairly well, and he spoke very affectionately of you, Mr. Gladstone." "Did he, indeed?" replied the sitter sorrowfully; "did he, indeed? That was a cruel blow. That after a lifetime of mutual esteem and of good work, undertaken and carried through together, we should be divided on so clear a question. Tell me, Mr. Holl"—and here his mouth twitched, for he was evidently struggling with great emotion—"tell me, did you notice anything in the manner of my old friend which would lead you to believe that his reason was becoming in any way unhinged?"

A TRUE REFORMER.

BY I. P. THOMBRINK.

The man who knows his cause is just
Is armed with forces strong as steel:
No fear disturbs his perfect trust,
Or cools the ardor of his zeal.

His faith is fixed in living laws,
That move the centuries along,
And plant the triumph of a cause
Upon the right, and not the strong.

He may be jeered and mocked of men,
And all his words may seem to wait,
The Truth be crucified again,
Between the forms of lust and hate.

But in his eye no fear appears;
He leans on One to whom alway
A day is as a thousand years,
A thousand years are as a day.

Preachers' Experiences.

THE RUNNING EXPERIENCE.

The topmost caption is indefinite, and, left alone, would threaten a verbal catnclysm; but it is not left alone; the expression that follows is a limiting and saving one in its nature. Certainly the world would not contain the books if all the experiences of a preacher were written. But we use a discriminating pen. We pluck a single rose as we walk over a field of flowers. We assume the bewildered air of the musician who has been called on for a song, and endeavors to extricate from a string of musical memories the individual melody called for. We could say more, "an we would," but we refrain. We settle on a single blossom; we take note of one peak in a mountain range continental in length. Out of multifarious experiences we single one for remark—the running experience of the preacher.

I suppose there is not a minister who follows these lines but will remember the experience. It has visited the life more than once, and sometimes with greater power than at others. It generally comes after a real or fancied failure in the Conference appointed work. You have toiled all the year and taken nothing, or the special ministerial hope is blasted, or you were put up for an occasion and you failed to meet expectation, or in your own pulpit, before a large, attentive congregation, you made the failure of your life.

Now, then, clear the track for the brother—the running experience is in him. He wants to fly, not with wings, but with his feet. He has an overmastering conviction that a race will be his salvation—that running is the duty of the hour, that there is and can be no other relief. Bob Acres' courage oozed out of his fingers, but this brother's agony of mind must be exuded by rapid motion through the feet. Therefore, he must run. Let everybody stand aside and permit relief to come to the brain and heart through the pedal extremities. A strange connection truly!—but we remember that we live in a world full of mystery.

We have heard of the relief that comes to anger by slamming a door, or kicking over a chair. Some call this procedure wooden profanity; but to us thoughtful and philosophic the door and chair are safety valves. Mental steam escapes through a shut door! What a paradox! We know of a famous Northern editor who eases his spleen by writing most bitter replies to his literary opponents, and then, after exhausting the vocabulary of sarcasm and wrath—tears them up! In this way the electricity is discharged into a waste-basket instead of a human heart. Let all editors and newspaper correspondents of a belligerent character pause here and consider. Is not this the more excellent way? For one, we confess to an emotion of pleasure when we hear of a mob burning some man in effigy. Better that straw should suffer than flesh. And the beauty of the whole transaction is, that the mob is satisfied. Nor is this all; so is the man! In view of these things we can not but repeat, How curiously relief comes to the tortured heart!

The running brother, it is well to remember, has not anger to contend with, but a fearful complication and combination of feelings. Wounded pride and vanity, sorrow over failure, pain over a lost opportunity, agony born of anticipated criticism and judgment—all these together forbid the thought of sitting. He is compelled to run; therefore, clear the track. He must run or explode.

It is an ancient practice. Jonah was decidedly given to it. As for Elijah, the Scripture mentions that on a certain occasion of trouble "he went for his life." Could a man go faster or run harder than that? The sense of failure seemed to give him wings. The first glimpse we get of Mark he was running. Trouble is evidently an assister of locomotion.

It would be curious and edifying to trace the apostolical succession of clerical runners through the centuries; but we can not for lack of space and time. We come down to latter days. And the first character we note is Dr. Olin, of blessed memory. He had, as he thought, utterly failed one night in the pulpit. He had but one consuming wish as he concluded, and that was for a clear, open field, and five seconds' start. He could not get this boon, but he, nevertheless, had to run, and he did run. Breaking out of the back door after service, he fled like one mad through a strip of woods to his study, plunged in, locked the door, and rolled on the floor in mental agony all night. We know of a certain editor who was once preaching to a country congregation underneath a large oak tree. He was enlarging on Naaman. He felt that failure was in him and on him, and that if he received in this world no more justice than he was doing the text and subject in hand, that he would be certainly hung. He confessed to me that the spirit of running was on him. He measured the oak tree with his eyes. His panting desire was to put that aforesaid piece of umbrageous matter between him and his congregation, and then make a beeline for the river or foreign parts.

What shall I more say? Time would fail to tell of the ecclesiastical Samsons and Jepthas who, at different times, have turned to flight from the armies of the aliens. Certainly it is easier for one man to run than a congregation. This is the reasoning of the failing brother.

I verily believe that a number of godly people are left lingering here in old age because unanointed for the work of saving our young preachers from the mad desire of flight that comes down uncontrollably upon them on certain occasions.

The writer is ashamed to say how many times he has been baptized with the running spirit. Sometimes it comes from seeing his sermons reported in the secular press. Once when he wrote an article for the ADVOCATE. As he perused the diffuse and shallow production, his yearning was for the editor's oak tree, that would be broad enough to hide him from the gaze of five thousand reading eyes while he made for Texas—the refuge of the unhappy. On another occasion it came on hearing his appointment read out at Conference. There were some peculiar things connected with that appointment, and so, when the lines were published of this ecclesiastical marriage of twelve months, there was nothing left to do but run. And so the writer, valise in hand, ran a third of a mile with a rapidity that he never expects to equal again, every step and every breath of that midnight race being a prayer.

After many trials I unhesitatingly pronounce running, under certain moral conditions, to be good—provided always you do not run out of the country. The mistake with some transfers is that they run in straight lines, which, of course, takes them far from home and out of the Conference. The idea is to run in a circle; say, for instance, around the square where you live. This plan keeps you at home and at the post of duty, while at the same time the running mania or appetite is gratified.

There is sound philosophy in a run which follows some failure in life. That disturbing quantity of blood on the brain is drawn from it to other parts of the body. A marvelous amount of spiritual electricity which was inactive in the pulpit is worked up and discharged into the circumambient atmosphere in the flight, and the soul gets as clear as the sky after a thunderstorm. Then, in addition, the pleasingly sad thought arises in the mind as the eye surveys the rapidly moving legs: "Well, I can run if I can't preach."

Ahimaaz ran by way of the plain and outran Cushi. The effect was that the run relieved his distress in a great measure, and he communicated no bad tidings.

Altogether, we believe in the run. It is an antidote to complaining and despair. It is the thing to do after a failure—don't fret, but run. And the greater the pulpit failure, the harder we must run. Some of us, of course, will have to run very hard.

It would be a good idea for every church to have a long narrow alley near it, so that the preacher, instead of groaning all over the community about his pulpit failure on the Sabbath previous, should be turned loose and allowed to run off the sense of defeat by a solitary trot or gallop up and down the aforesaid enclosure.

And let every Annual Conference be held in proximity to some broad, smooth road or avenue, broad enough for a number of disappointed brethren. And then, when the appointments prove to be disappointments, let the melancholy band of disappointees, instead of abusing the Bishop and inveighing against the presiding elders all the rest of the year—let them take a turn or two on the road at a regular slap-dash rate, and thus "cleanse the foul bosom of that perilous stuff which weighs upon the heart," and so enter upon the year's work as bright as a May morning, when the storms of March and the showers of April are over.

The Panic in Meridian.

MR. EDITOR: Were you ever in the midst of a general panic? If not, you have missed a rare experience. I am now passing through such an experience.

I have witnessed panics before. I know something of the scenes that used to be enacted in an unprotected Confederate town when it was announced that "the Yankees are coming." I have also seen a whole army seized with consternation on being waked at night by the guns of an attacking foe. But I have never witnessed anything comparable to the panic through which this city has just passed.

About dark, on Wednesday evening, September 19, the news flashed over the wires, "Yellow fever in Jackson."

Our city Board of Health at once established a quarantine against Jackson, and ordered that no more trains should run on the V. and M. R. R. The incoming train was not allowed to come nearer than Chunkey. The news from Jackson spread over the city with lightning-like rapidity, and everybody seemed to accept it as a foregone conclusion, "If Jackson has the fever, Meridian can not escape." Just at this juncture three ubiquitous characters found a rare opportunity for the exercise of their gifts. I refer to the malicious liar, the man of vivid imagination, and the man of boundless credulity. All three wagged their tongues incessantly, and, though they differed vastly in details, all of them told stories similar in outline. "Meridian is full of Jackson refugees, some of whom are sick, some dead, and some dying." This was the burden of their story. Before midnight the whole city was panic-stricken. Many left that night by train, and many others by private conveyance. The rumble of buggies and wagons was heard all night.

When morning came the excitement grew more intense, and from that time on the scene baffles description. Day and night nothing was talked of but flight and preparations for flight. Every train was crowded to its utmost capacity with panic-stricken fugitives, and every wagon, dray, buggy and vehicle of every description in the city, and hundreds from the surrounding country were brought into requisition to aid the hegira. The people went in all directions, and took quarters wherever they could. Many farmers crowded their own families in order to shelter the refugees. Some took up their abode in churches, school-houses, empty barns and negro cabins. Some stretched cloth tents, and others hastily threw up shanties of the roughest and rudest character.

My estimate is that about eight thousand people have left the city, leaving not more than four thousand here. Of these, a large majority are blacks. I think five-sixths of the white people are away. It is now Sunday night. The exodus has not yet ceased, though the volume of it has vastly diminished.

We are having many new experiences. One is a Sabbath without worship. The Board of Health has issued an order prohibiting all religious services for thirty days. So you see we pastors are having a vacation.

We are likely to be without newspapers. The News has suspended for want of printers, and the Democrat and the Baptist Record are likely to do the same. Moreover, after to-night we are to be entirely isolated. The Board of Health has ordered the stopping of all trains on all our railroads after to-night. That is why I am writing to you on Sunday. Without mails, and with all our home newspapers suspended, we will feel lonely, indeed.

We are amused at the tidings we receive by telegraph from various quarters. It seems that the whole world has quarantined against us on the supposition that we are smitten with the pestilence, whereas, the fact is, we have not had a case that is even suspicious. Meridian was never healthier than now.

Almost the only sickness is a few cases of typhoid fever, one of which happens to be in my own family—my dear little Cora. Pray for her recovery.

Yours in haste,

W. C. BLACK.

MERIDIAN, MISS., Sept. 25, 1888.

Rev. S. J. Hawkins.

Dr. J. H. McLean, of Georgetown, Texas, has contributed to the Texas Advocate a memorial paper on the death of Rev. Samuel J. Hawkins, part of which we transfer to our columns. Bro. Hawkins was a member of the Louisiana Conference for seven years, and we feel that it is due the oldest members of our body to give them this tribute to the memory of a former co-laborer in the work of the Lord:

My acquaintance with Bro. Hawkins began with a visit to the Louisiana Conference in 1865, of which body he was then a member. Intimate acquaintance was not formed until his transfer to the Trinity (now North Texas) Conference, at its organization in 1867. I visited him on his first work in this Conference, Spring Hill mission, and, despite the most discouraging financial conditions, he and his faithful wife manifested a moral heroism and devotion to duty quite unsurpassed in these later days. The ministry was his loved employ, his life-work, his heart-work. In this, and this alone, he found satisfaction, nor once coveted any man's silver or gold. The true inwardness of the man appeared when, upon surveying the possession of a prosperous relative, he remarked, "I would not exchange my circuit for all you possess." In his ministry he found true contentment and happiness; in secular life, with the holy fire burning in his bones, he could have found no peace. He was no secularized preacher. All his thought and care were drawn to the church. From the pulpit he offered "beaten oil." He was a workman that needed not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth. I should characterize him as a scriptural preacher, making free use of the sacred text. He loved a "thus saith the Lord" for his positions, and generally furnished it. He was not only instructive, but at times pathetic, deeply so. He was somewhat of a controversial turn of mind, and felt impelled by vow and duty "to drive away strange doctrine." He was accordingly well posted on the leading doctrinal issues and popular errors of his day, and with holy boldness declared his mind. He had, in an eminent degree, the courage of his convictions, not counting the cost when a duty was to be discharged. Whether in formal debate upon mooted church doctrines, or in discussions incident to deliberative assemblies, he was always courteous and fair, contending rather for truth and right than for victory. He put conscience in what he did. He was a lover of books—not an omniverous reader, but generally along the line that would serve him in his ministry. He could become so abstracted in thought as to appear absent-minded, and somewhat eccentric. Amusing incidents of this phase of his character were sometimes given, which he never failed to receive pleasantly. A good and useful man has fallen. An instructive, faithful minister of the gospel is gone. His Conference is poorer. He was of good parentage, talented on the maternal side. His mother was a sister of Dr. Ralston, author of "Elements of Divinity." He was the sixth of thirteen sons of John M. and Polly G. Hawkins, and was born in Carroll county, Tenn., August 21, 1830; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in his sixteenth year; was licensed to preach in his twenty-first year, and at twenty-two was received on trial in the Memphis Conference; ordained deacon by Bishop Paine in 1854; elder, by Bishop Kavanaugh in 1857. He served three years in the Memphis, eleven in the Louisiana, and near twenty-one in the North Texas Conference. He filled missions, circuits, stations and districts; was chaplain of Col. C. C. Gillespie's regiment, Confederate army; was, in connection with other church work, for three years editor of the Home Advocate, an enterprise of that worthy layman, G. A. Kelly. At the time of his death he was one of the most honored and conspicuous members of his Conference, being a curator of the Southwestern University, member of the Board of Publication, and associate editor of the Texas Advocate. His sickness was brief, and he died in peace, at Sulphur Springs, July 31, 1888. He was serving the Sulphur Springs district at the time of his death. The station preacher, Rev. W. H. Hughes, faithful and unabating in his attentions (of whose kindness the wife of the deceased writes most affectionately), telegraphed the preachers of the district of the death of their presiding elder, and with one accord they attended the funeral services, each paying tribute in affectionate speech to the fidelity, ability, and devotion of their honored leader. The deceased was twice married: in 1855 to Miss Mildred E. Trotter; she dying, in 1862, he was married to Miss Emeline M. Burke. Of the first marriage there is a surviving daughter, Mrs. Palmer; of the second, four sons and one daughter. Two of the sons are graduates of the Southwestern University and established in business. It is to be hoped a similar privilege awaits the others. Thus has ended the life of a kind, affectionate husband, loving father, faithful minister and devout Christian. He has left to his family not gold coin, but, what is better, a golden character, a Christian life and example. Let them rejoice in it and be thankful. Ex-Gov. Hawkins, of Tennessee, brother of the deceased, in writing to the bereaved wife, recounts in rapid succession the death of his mother, his brother, Ashton, and adds: "Now our dear brother, Sam, is gone; but, thank God, in the midst of these sad bereavements, we feel assured they are together in heaven." Comfort yourselves happy, bereaved one, that you can join that heaven company.

O mothers of America! ye who sometimes feel that your sphere is circumscribed and your opportunities for good limited because the scene of your most protracted efforts is bounded by the four nursery walls, if you could only feel that you are guiding, instructing and educating the future statesmen, judges, ministers, politicians and merchants of this vast republic, would any hint of being circumscribed, bounded, or hampered as to splendid opportunities for good enter into the grand consideration? Yet that is just what you are doing. Your son is going to become a conscientious voter, an honest business man, a Christian citizen, very much as you influence him. Your daughter will become in time very much such a mother to her children in turn as you are to her. Mrs. Stowe likes to speak of a mother as a queen, and talks of "the crowning glory of motherhood." Why? She grasps with her strong mind the mighty power of women in teaching and uplifting the man-child she has given the world; in uplifting and guiding, with all womanly, motherly counsel, the embryo woman soon to act her part as one of the daughters of America. The masses are made up of individuals; hence their training and culture, their true uplifting, depends chiefly on the start they have in life.

(Pittsburg Christian Advocate.)

The mistake most generally made by such professors of Christianity as seem to fail in Christian attainments lies in the attempt to separate Christian character from the usual routine of daily life. The temptation, so often experienced and too frequently indulged, to throw the devout and consecrated character of Christian life aside when engaging in the ordinary business or answering the common demands of society, brings one of our greatest dangers before us. Such a laying aside of devotion and consecration is ruinous. True Christliness carries the likeness of Christ always, and acts as the Master himself would act under the circumstances then existing: "Because as he is, so are we in this world."

God sometimes washes the eyes of his children with tears, that they may see, the more clearly, to read aright his providence and his commandments.—T. L. Cuyler.

FAITH AND WORKS.

BY MARY E. PAYENDORF.

I ask thee, God, O Lord, for faith alone;
But let my faith be seen in act and deed,
That I may show, where'er I may be,
That love is there is not an empty creed.

Help me to grow in my patient day by day,
Let me do right as seen as in the sight,
Put far away my selfishness and pride,
And lead my heart to Father, with thy light.

Help me each day more Christ like to become,
Give the divine a fuller, wider scope,
So let my life bear witness to my faith
By deeds as well as words of love and hope.

And give me grace to heal the wounded heart,
To aid the weak that stum bled by the way,
Not harshly judge those who, in sin's dark path,
Grope blindly on, far from the light of day.

No, Lord, I ask thee not for faith alone:
But, with my heart fixed on the things above,
May I work on, with earnest, hopeful zeal,
Trusting in thee and living all-saving love!

THE COMMISSION OF JOSHUA.

Joshua, i. 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness.—Eph. vi. 14.

TIME.—B. C. 1451, about April.

PLACE.—The plains of Moab (Abel-shittim), east of the Jordan.

1. Now, After the death of Moses—That is, after the expiration of the thirty days of general mourning for him. The servant of the Lord—Like "man of God," a sort of official title; but also applied to patriarchs, prophets, kings, and even to the Messiah. Lord spake—Whether God spoke directly to Joshua, or through an angel, or by the urim of the high-priest can not be determined. Unto Joshua—His birth is put at about 1531 B. C., in Egypt. He was a descendant of Joseph, in the eighteenth generation from Ephraim. He combined remarkable military qualities with sincere humility and a simple-hearted trust in God. The son of Nun—Nun was of the tribe of Ephraim; beyond this fact nothing more is known of him. Moses' minister—That is, his immediate attendant, of whose services he availed himself in a variety of ways as Elisha of those of Gehazi. Observe that Joshua is not spoken of as Moses' servant, but as minister; "adjutant," we should now say, in so far as Moses was not lawgiver, but commander-in-chief. The formal installation of Joshua in this position is reported to us in Numbers xxvii. 15.

2. Moses my servant. Is dead—These words are equivalent to saying, "The death of my servant Moses has left the people without a leader and a head to conduct them into the promised land. It is necessary that his place should be immediately filled. Thou hast been selected for that office, and the time has now come for thee to enter upon the active discharge of its duties." Arise—When it is considered that Joshua was now ninety-three (?) years of age, that he had to govern a very perverse and rebellious people, and was going to contend with a warlike and formidable enemy, it will, perhaps, appear that nothing short of the divine assurance he now received could have sustained his courage in such an arduous station. Go over this Jordan—One of the most singular rivers in the world, which "has never been navigable, and flows into a sea that has never known a port." The name "Jordan" signifies descender. The word fitly describes the headlong current of the river, which has a fall of fifteen feet per mile, and if we subtract the Lake of Gennesaret and the lake and attendant marshes of Huleh, of thirty feet. Between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea, however, the average fall is much less. Just after leaving the Sea of Galilee its fall is over forty feet. The various explorers bear testimony to the swiftness of its current. Thou, and all this people—Numbering over six hundred thousand. Unto the land which I do give to them—Hebrew, am giving. That is, the land of which I have promised them the inheritance, and of which I am now in the very act of putting them in possession.

3. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon—It was God's purpose that the whole land should belong to the children of Israel; a purpose which, as usual in Hebrew prophecy, is signified by the use of the perfect tense here. The conquest was intended to be complete. Not a foot's breadth was to rest in the hands of its former owners. But here, as elsewhere in holy writ, we may mark the way in which man's sin and want of faith has marred the purposes of God. In the Book of Judges we read that the Canaanites were not only not driven out, but that the children of Israel made marriages with them, worshiped their gods, and practiced their abominations. Jerusalem remained in the hands of the Jebusites until the time of David, while the Philistines remained in possession of their portion of Palestine until it was reduced under the power of the King of Babylon. That have I given unto you—The perfect refers to the counsel of God as having been formed long before, and being now about to be carried into execution. As I said unto Moses—The words here used are a literal repetition of the promise made in Deuteronomy xi. 24. Indeed, nearly every sentence in this address to Joshua occurs somewhere in the course of the foregoing history, especially in the Book of Deuteronomy.

4. From the wilderness—The Arabian desert, or Desert of Et Tih, where they had wandered. This was in the southern boundary. And this Lebanon—Spoken of as "this Lebanon," because visible from the neighborhood in which Israel was encamped, as indeed it is from nearly every part of Palestine. Even unto the great river . . . Euphrates—This is the term most frequently used in the Bible for the Euphrates, a word of Aryan origin, denoting "the good and abounding river," the largest, the longest, and by far the most important of the rivers of Western Asia. All the land of the Hittites—This nation was descended from Cheth (A. V. "Heth"), the second son of Canaan. They are here put for the Canaanites generally. The Hittites, or Chittites, seem to have been the most considerable of the tribes which inhabited Canaan. We find them in possession of Hebron in the time of Abraham, but their more usual dwelling-place was in the valley. Unto the great sea—As the Euphrates was the greatest river, the Mediterranean was the greatest sea known to the Jews. Shall be your coast—Your boundary, your limits. These boundaries included a larger territory than the Hebrews ever possessed, except for a short time during the reigns of David and Solomon. The breadth, from Lebanon on the north to the desert on the south, is 140 miles; the length, from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, is about 400 miles, making an area of 56,000 square miles, equal to the States of New York and Vermont. But Canaan proper, or Palestine, was only 140 miles by 40, an area smaller than the State of New Jersey.

5. Shall not any man be able to stand before thee—Able to resist thee, to maintain his ground before thee, to throw any effectual bar in the way of thy success. As I was with Moses—To assist him against all his enemies, and in all the difficulties of governing this stiff-necked people, which Joshua might justly fear no less than the Canaanites. So I will be with thee—He is admonished that his sufficiency was not of himself. It was solely in consequence of God's being with him, upholding and prospering him, as he did Moses, that he was to be rendered thus invincible. Will not fail thee, nor forsake thee—Literally, I will not be weak toward thee, relax toward thee. God is ever the same; if this attitude to us be altered, it is not he who has changed, but ourselves.

6. Be strong and of a good courage—Be strong to grasp and hold, and firm-kneed to withstand hostile assault, appears to be the meaning hid in the original. It is four times repeated in this chapter. Joshua, though a person of great courage and resolution, whereof he had given sufficient proof, yet needs these exhortations, partly because his work was great, and difficult, and long, and in a great measure new; partly because he had a very mean opinion of himself, especially if compared with Moses; and remembering how perverse and ungovernable that people, even under Moses, he might very well suspect the burden of ruling them would be too heavy for his shoulders. For unto this people shalt thou divide, etc.—Which supposeth the full conquest of the land. That honor and assistance which I denied to Moses I will give to thee. The Lord would inspire Joshua with strength of soul by disclosing to him the grandeur of his mission. He reveals to him that his agency is the last link in the chain which unites prophecy and fulfillment, hope and fruition; that all the glorious possibilities of his nation hinge upon his own personal valor and fidelity.

7. Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses . . . commanded—The true secret of prosperity in any enterprise, great or small, lies in obedience to the divine commands. Turn not from it to the right hand or . . . left—Hebrew, Turn not from him—that is, from Moses; where his person stands for his writings. So our Savior says, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets"—that is, the words of Moses. The metaphor is taken from a man's pursuing a journey, who goes straight forward in the direct road, if he knows it, without turning aside into by-paths that lead he knows not whither. That thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest—Whereby he instructs him in the true art of government; and that his greatest wisdom will lie in the observation of all God's commands, and not in that pretended reason of state which other princes govern all their affairs by. And this plainly shows that God's assistance promised to him and to the Israelites was conditional, and might justly be withdrawn upon their breach of the conditions.

8. This book of the law—We may quote thus an early authority for the genuineness of at least some portions of the Pentateuch. There was a "book of the law" in Joshua's time, according to this early testimony, and we may conclude from verses 3-7 that Deuteronomy formed a part of it. Shall not depart out of thy mouth—"Not to depart out of the mouth," is to be constantly in the mouth. The law is in our mouth, not only when we are incessantly preaching it, but when we are reading it intelligently for ourselves, or conversing about it with others. Shalt meditate therein day and night—By constant meditation the good treasure of divine truth must be deposited in Joshua's heart; that from that abundance his mouth might speak, as occasion required, for the conviction, direction, or encouragement of the people; and likewise that he might know the duties of his important station. That thou mayest observe to do, etc.—Literally, keep to do, thus impressing on us the care necessary in deciding on our actions. "Men," says Calvin, "never act skillfully, except in so far as they allow themselves to be ruled by the Word of God."

9. Have not I commanded thee—"Have I not" is a rhetorical mode of saying, "Behold, I have," the assurance being clothed in the form of an affirmative question. I, whose authority is paramount, whose power is infinite, who am able to carry thee through all difficulties and dangers, and whom thou art bound implicitly to obey. Be not afraid, neither . . . dismayed—Repetition is a remarkable feature of Hebrew composition, and is designed to give emphasis to what is commanded or related. The Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest—Imagine a soldier with his commander-in-chief always at his side, cheering and encouraging him, and how naturally would he thereby be stirred up to deeds of valor which he would not otherwise be able to exhibit?

Methodist Doctrinal Preaching.

An article appeared in the ADVOCATE, of August 30, arraigning the Methodist pulpit for not fearlessly teaching and preaching the peculiar doctrines of our church. Bro. Miller, the author of this article, charges us with being entirely too timid in proclaiming the tenets of our church, and makes a comparison with the Baptist Church as regard to this matter, decidedly in favor of the latter, giving us, in conclusion a fraternal admonition to a bolder stand and more decided course. It occurred to me that this charge was too sweeping. Possibly a view from the other side may give the rather sombre picture a more attractive coloring:

Baptism in our church, if I read Methodist history and her polemical literature aright, seems ever to have occupied a secondary place as a doctrine. As a church, we have generally avoided controversy upon this ordinance, teaching our people that it was a sacrament, and its mode of administration a mere matter of choice on the part of the candidate. Repentance, justification, regeneration, witness of the Spirit, adoption, and holiness of heart and life—these are the peculiar doctrines of Methodism. And our pulpits ring with these themes. Our literature teems with these subjects and teachings thereon. Our theological works abound with them; they are woven inextricably into our hymnology; are the burden of our prayers, the glory of our Christian life and experience. I maintain that no church teaches her peculiar doctrine more clearly than ours, and that no class of men are more dauntless in proclaiming them than her ministers. I have heard some say that "we are too charitable." One might just as well say of a beautiful woman, "She is too lovable." Why, it is this very point of Christ-like liberality that has made the Methodist Church what she is to-day, and has infused a broader, more catholic spirit into the Christianity of this age.

I do not think there is much danger along this line. It may keep some narrow-minded people outside the fold of the Methodist Church; but we must have a broad, substantial platform if we expect broad, liberal men—who dare think and act for themselves—to stand thereon.

S. J. DAVIES.

From the Work.

PLATTSBURG, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Since my note of August 23, I have had two wonderful meetings. The first resulted in quite a number of conversions and four accessions to our church; the church wonderfully revived, and almost every member testified that they had reconsecrated their lives to God and his service. One very encouraging and happy feature of the meeting was the disposition of Baptists, Presbyterians and Congregational Methodists to unite with us in efforts for the salvation of the community.

The result of the second meeting, which lasted only four days, was thirty or more conversions and twelve accessions to our church. The preaching was done by the Rev. J. C. Long, of the Mississippi Conference. And what a power he is in the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan! Oh, that we had more such men in the local ranks of our ministry! From the very first service the fire began to burn; the congregations increased and the interest grew and deepened until Wednesday night, when not exceeding half of the congregation could get into the house. A compromise was made by seating the congregation in the church yard on benches, wagon seats, chairs, hacks and buggies, while the man of God, in clear, soft, yet arrow-like words ringing out through the calm air, stood in the church door. Notwithstanding the confusion of the audience—by moving into the yard, and of erecting scaffolds upon which to build torches after the hour had arrived for preaching—the first words of the man of God brought a profound silence. For one hour he held the great throng perfectly spellbound. In the conclusion an appeal was made to the ungodly. The result was, the congregations were plunged into a state of unrest, and penitents came, weeping, by the dozens. Some were converted, while others went away quenching the Spirit. Until it is done in eternity, will the result of that meeting not be revealed.

Before the services closed, the people of the different denominations showed their appreciation of Bro. Long by presenting him with a purse of reasonable value. God bless Bro. Long!

Thus closed my protracted series for this season. The harvest to date has been fifty conversions, thirty accessions to our church, fourteen adults and eleven infants baptized. To God be given all the praise!

HICKORY FLAT CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As I am tired of other employments, I will write a few lines to your (our) good paper. At the last session of the North Mississippi Conference I was read out to Hickory Flat circuit, which is a newly formed work, on the K. C., M. and B. railroad. At 4 o'clock, the morning after the adjournment of the Conference, I boarded the train en route to my new field of labor. According to previous arrangement, Rev. H. C. Morehead fell in company with me at Grenada, who at that time lived within the bounds of my charge, and with whom and his kind family I spent several days very pleasantly, and to me very profitably. This being a new work, there was no "plan" handed to me at Conference, and I had to arrange the appointments myself, which was a very difficult task.

I was not long in learning that my work was in a bad condition, spiritually. No prayer meetings, no class meetings, no Sunday-schools. You may imagine my feelings under these circumstances. But, worst of all, the brethren, while they gave me a warm, hearty reception, seemed to entertain no hopes of my succeeding with the work. To me this was a dyke across my pathway; but I was determined not to be obstructed by it, and if I became discouraged, I promised myself not to let anybody know it. Well, inexperienced, not having been in the itinerancy but one year, I was not acquainted with the best methods of pastoral management, and knew how to do nothing else but to preach and to visit. So I went to visiting the people pastorally and preaching the best I could, at the same time putting on as pleasant, smiling face as I could, and talking as confidently of succeeding as if the noonday of heaven's invigorating light was pouring its beams upon me. The Lord attended it with his blessing. He opened the hearts of his people to receive "the word of truth, the gospel of our salvation." And then followed an outpouring of the divine Spirit and a harvest of souls.

I closed my last protracted meeting the second Sunday in this month. They were occasions of great good and much joy. We all feel that we have been made better and more useful. In evidence of this we had 37 conversions and 36 accessions to the church, a prayer meeting organized at every appointment, two Sunday-schools and one class meeting. The Lord has blessed us, whereof we are glad. I feel like I had just come down from the Mount of Transfiguration, with the glory of the vision still lingering around me, filling my soul with hopes of immortality. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

TOPISAW CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: At the request of our pastor, Rev. J. G. Sibley, I will give you an account of our protracted meeting at Pleasant Grove Church. Bro. Sibley commenced on Saturday, the first day of September, and carried on the meeting till Thursday evening, which resulted in a general revival of the church—such as we have never experienced before. There were sixty-two accessions and a number of conversions. I did not get the exact number, but think there were over fifty. There were several who had been members for years who professed conversion at this meeting; and the conversions ranged from little boys and girls of tender years to old men and women, and most of them professed religion. Oh, sir; it was a glorious time—truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord! Our church was crowded to overflowing, and the interest increased from Sunday to the close of the meeting. Crowds of penitents flocked to the altar at every service; many came weeping, and returned rejoicing. The pastor was aided by Bro. Willie Dowson, a young local preacher, and this writer.

CARROLLTON CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I began my protracted meetings on the Carrollton circuit, North Mississippi Conference, the fourth Sunday in July, at Enon, and continued nine days; had a fine revival in the church, several conversions and ten additions. Bro. Evans, our presiding elder, was with us three days, and did some good preaching, and looked well into the spiritual and financial condition of the circuit.

Our second meeting was begun the first Sunday in August, at Eden Church. Here we had the assistance of Bro. T. W. Lewis, who did some very fine preaching and altar work. The church was powerfully stirred; three additions. In this community everybody belongs to the church. We have at this place a very fine Woman's Missionary Society, which is doing much work for the Master.

Our next meeting was held at Marvin, where we had a most gracious revival—such as had not been there for years. Twelve additions to our church. Had no help except one good sermon from Bro. Lewis.

My last meeting was begun at Smith's Chapel, on the night of September 5, and closed on the night of the sixteenth. We had the valuable help of Bro. W. S. Lagrone who, by his good preaching and genial disposition, won all hearts to him; and his good work will last for years to come. We had some twenty conversions and twenty-eight additions to our church. On the last night of the meeting we organized a Woman's Missionary Society with thirty-eight members. We feel like saying, "Glory to God," and, starting out for better and higher things.

Carrollton circuit is destined to be one of the best appointments in the North Mississippi Conference.

R. A. BURROUGHS, P. C.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The good work is still going on among us. On Friday night, before the fourth Sunday in August we commenced a protracted meeting at Goshen Springs, which continued one week. The visible results were three adult baptisms, ten conversions, eight accessions to our church, and God's children edified.

On Sunday, September 2, we engaged in a four days' meeting at New Providence, resulting in one conversion, one accession, the baptism of two beautiful little girls, eight or ten backsliders reclaimed, and the church, to some extent, revived.

Last Sunday, at Union, was a day of interest among us, where I read and delivered a lecture on the general rules of our church, baptized one infant child, five adults, and received into full connection eight persons who were not received during our protracted meeting at this church.

I have other meetings to report, but time and space fail me. I will go to Pelahatchie to commence a series of meetings Friday next. We expect to have a revival there. Pray for us that God may open the windows of heaven and pour us out such a blessing that we will be unable to receive it.

Thanks to Bros. Kendall, King and Adams for valuable assistance rendered in the above meetings; and to God be all the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Your brother,

J. N. TUCKER, P. C.

SIDON CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This is my first year in the itinerancy, and the Lord has, indeed, blessed us in a peculiar manner, whereof we are glad. There are six appointments in the charge. We have held protracted services at only four as yet. Have had forty-four accessions to the membership: ten, however, by letter, the others on profession of faith in Christ. The entire membership have had their faith strengthened and their hopes brightened, and I am confident that many of them are altogether on a higher plane, from a Christian standpoint, than ever before. Many who had started hitherto and run well for a while, but had fallen into sin again, have renewed their vows to God and received a fresh supply of the Spirit, and are now "happy on the way" to glory. To God be all the praise now and forever.

We are under obligation to Bro. Kilgore for valuable assistance given at Tchula, and Bro. W. W. Moss and our faithful presiding elder, R. P. Mitchell. At the other three appointments where we have had meetings, we failed to get any help from the itinerant ranks, but were rendered valuable assistance from the following local brethren: Bros. A. J. Freeman, W. W. Yeager and Robert Bell, to all of whom we tender our thanks. May the Lord continue to bless Israel!

Fraternally yours,

J. T. HOWELL, P. C.

WEST MELVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Our pastor, Rev. C. R. Godfrey, came down to this place on last Saturday to fill his appointment on Saturday and Sunday, and preached on night and Sunday at eleven A. M. and at night, and the prospect for good to be accomplished was so promising that we prevailed on him to continue the meeting, and last night, September 14, he had to close the meeting in order to go to another appointment. The congregation larger than I have ever seen at this place; attentive and appreciative; church wonderfully revived; membership all started afresh in the performance of their duties. Eight were added to the church, and three were baptized. Eight were at the altar when the meeting closed, and I think if the meeting could be carried on until Monday night, a great deal more good would be accomplished. We expect to pay our preacher every dollar of the assessment, and Bro. Godfrey will get all the assessments made on this charge. He is a worker, I tell you. We have a prosperous Sabbath-school of seventy-five members. Bro. Jones is our superintendent.

W. P. PAYTON, Steward.

DOUGLAS CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: After nine days' duration we closed one of the grandest meetings last night that Vienna has ever known. I do not know how many were converted, but I think I would be safe in saying forty. Eighteen joined the church last night, and twenty-seven had previously joined, making a grand total of forty-five new members for Vienna Church. Except one sermon by Bro. Parker, the Lord used three boys to lead in this grand work, to wit: Bro. Charlie Stuples, Bro. Eugene Steed and the writer. I would fail to do justice not to mention Bro. Willie Gaskins, a young Baptist brother, who preached his second sermon for us, which the Lord blessed wonderfully. "Praise the Lord for his wonderful works toward the children of men." Yours in Christ,

W. J. PORTER.

Evangelism.

The Missouri Conference, at its late session, had the subject of "Evangelism as related to the preachers and people of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," before it. The committee to which the subject was referred brought in quite an elaborate report, of which the following is an epitome:

1. We are profoundly and sadly impressed that all attempts to incorporate modern evangelism upon our Methodist economy have not only been failures, but have been attended with multiplied and ever-increasing evils.

2. We do, in the most solemn manner, discourage, upon the part of both our preachers and people, all appeals to or co-operation with all professional evangelists; and we do, in the same solemn manner, exhort all to return to the old paths, and, by works of faith and labors of love, prove the faithfulness of God's promises and the efficiency of their own ministry.

3. Let our presiding elders prove more generally and fully the truly evangelical function of their office, and let them see to it that their preachers are made helpers one of another in all the demands of the church within their respective districts, recognizing the principle that the least of foreign help introduced from any source whatever, the best it be for all concerned.

We think of parting; let us think of meeting. We think of going away; let us think of arriving. And as the voice of death whispers, "You must go from earth," let us hear the voice of Christ saying, "You are but coming to me."

The Advocate and Education.

BY "BAP."

The late number of the Advocate, September 13, is certainly a model number, particularly on the educational line. The original paper from "Barnabas" and the reprint from the Nashville Advocate, under the nom de plume of "Onesiphorus," are each, in the main, well-conceived, timely and strong. That papers of such length and scope could be entirely satisfactory to every reader was hardly to have been expected.

"Barnabas" does not think there is antagonism on this line between the Church and State. I believe there is. It is not an avowed, open antagonism, but it is antagonism nevertheless, and the most potent and dangerous form. If "Barnabas" should preach a sermon (I guess he is a preacher) against some one of the prevailing sins of the day—Sabbath breaking—and immediately his congregation should get up a Sunday excursion or prize fight, I rather think that he would say the world was antagonizing his work. This species of antagonism he alludes to in the paper before me.

Our church schools condemn card playing as vicious, and leading to idleness and gambling. The State schools—many of them tacitly encourage this by permitting it to be indulged in by the students in their rooms. Our church schools condemn dancing—a vice to which the unconverted are much inclined—believing that it encourages unchaste and dangerous contact and intimacy between the sexes. Many State schools encourage this indulgence by appropriating public money to the extent of hundreds of dollars for the "annual hop." This list of specifications might be greatly lengthened were it necessary to do so, but here is antagonism, pure and simple. And, what is worse, it is a form of antagonism which appeals to the whims of the giddy young, if not to the baser instincts of the unregenerate life. But is there not also antagonism along the financial lines? I take it that to oppose is to antagonize. Do we find opposition at this point? Read the announcements of those schools. "Free tuition" is written all over them. If it does not mean that these State schools intend to oppose all other schools by means of this inducement, or that the patronage of other schools is to be bought for the upbuilding of these State schools, and the price paid is the annual amount of tuition fees, what does it mean?

Let "Barnabas" get out in the farming districts of the country and begin to offer his services for less than the established price of labor, and he will soon find that the interpretation of this sort of conduct is "antagonism of labor." If I offer to teach my neighbor's children for such rate of tuition as gives a support to my dependents, and he, having a year's supplies on hand, and a promise of more when these are out, comes up with an offer to teach them for nothing, I take it as an act antagonistic to my interest. Just so these State schools go about this whole business of education.

Take, for example of this theory of antagonism, two schools not far apart—names not given. One of them, having no endowment, lives only by the tuition fees. This is the church school. The rates are moderate: $30, $40 or $50 yearly. Yet this is the only revenue of the school, and its life depends on it. The other—the State school—has a large endowment. Tuition is not necessary; it can live without it. Virtually, it pleads cheapness, less expense, and underbids the church school, thereby antagonizing the whole financial system. There is a wrong here—oppression, if you please—and there is somewhere a remedy for this wrong, which will not be hard to find, though the application of it may be most difficult.

The State has no right to teach the classics at public expense. In Louisiana the rate of tuition paid in the "common schools" is about fifty cents per scholar, while the rate paid in, at least, one of her classic schools is over four hundred dollars per scholar. These boys and girls who cost the State fifty cents each per annum are the children of the very poor, and children whose only means, in many instances, of acquiring an education is this fifty cents a year. Those boys, though, for whom the State pays two hundred and fifty times as much tuition are, as a general rule, the sons of wealthy or, at least, well-to-do parents who are able not to pay tuition only, but from two hundred and fifty to three hundred dollars yearly board! Has the State any right to make such discriminations, especially against her poor children? To say that the poor are just as welcome at the State schools of high grade as the rich, is to beg the question. No one has any rights in the premises—except, perhaps, a very few "beneficiaries"—until their rights are paid for, and the State knows the poor can never pay for such rights. Whenever the State comes down to her legitimate work of imparting to her children a "common-school education," the difficulties will vanish. Not only this, but other difficulties will vanish. These State schools of high grade are, more or less, a part of the political machinery of the executives of the State, and sometimes become a powerful lever in political emergencies. Then they are made to pander to the ecclesiastical whims of the management, so that herein may arise another and more direct form of antagonism.

But this will do for the present, and when "Barnabas" gets in the sum of his thoughts on this question I may have more to say on this and parallel lines.

Announcing the Hymn.

When I first began to worship among the Methodists, about sixty-seven years ago, they used a hymn book bound in one volume containing two books, each one with its own paging. The preacher announced the number of the page, with the addition of the first or second book, as the case might be. We soon became familiar with this order and had no difficulty in finding the hymn. But about this time—1821—a hue and cry was raised to have a tune book published containing an appropriate tune for every hymn in our book, which was accordingly done, and the "Methodist Harmonist" was spread all through the church, which was greatly improved and enlarged by order of the General Conference about 1833. And just here our trouble commenced. We had to take our hymn book and tune book both to church, and the preacher would announce the page of the hymn and the number of the tune, and by the time he got through the numbers we were so mixed up in our minds that we often lost both and had to watch the first line of the hymn as read by the preacher and turn to our index to get the page.

The "Methodist Harmonist" soon fell into disuse, and the preachers returned to the practice of simply announcing the page of the hymn. But of late (for what reason I do not know, for I see no reason in its favor) many of our preachers have resumed the practice of announcing in quick succession both the page and number of the hymn, begetting in our minds the same old confusion, so that, if the numbers have more than one or two figures, we lose them both and have to resort to our index to find the hymn or not take any part in singing. When it was customary for the preacher to line out the hymn, we could take out to sing without the number; but since the practice of lining out has been dropped in most of our churches we can not sing without our hymn book, with the number of the hymn before our eyes.

Some of our preachers have a singular way of announcing that we will sing under page so and so, instead of on the page. Look in your dictionary, brother, and learn that page in relation to a book means one side of a sheet of paper, and not the figures which at the top simply give its number. To sum up all in a few words: I think we should leave page out of the pulpit, and let it be for private use, and only announce the number of the hymn. It is sometimes the case that there are two or three hymns on one page; but every hymn has but one number. Let the page alone and give us the number of the hymn distinctly, and we ask no more. Let us have uniformity in this matter. It will save both time and trouble.

On the Seashore.

We have been on the grounds since July 2; enjoyed all the camp meeting services, met and parted with many friends, and stood the siege when the elements waged war in a storm. There was no damage done to the grounds more than the washing away of both bath-houses with a part of their piers. I am told a larger crowd than usual remained this year for the whole season. The fact that the crowd was here demanded more bath-houses. They have been erected and, with their well-ventilated sides and tops, afford bathing comforts for the many bathers.

This is our first season on the coast, and we find many fine things to be enjoyed by "ye folks from the hills," many of whom have never seen a live crab. One does not grow lonely. All the season we have enjoyed excursions to the different islands; along the coast, east and west, from Ocean Springs to Bay St. Louis; out on the water to witness the regattas, and to Beauvoir, to be presented to Hon. and Mrs. Davis. What with meeting friends at train, and seeing friends off, perhaps to meet them no more, the hours and days of grace are all gone, called into eternity, where we will one day go to meet and be judged according to them. There is no place in this whole Southern country where a more quiet Sabbath can be enjoyed. The excursion trains cause some little sensation, but that is among those, and those only, who attend their arrivals and departures. We not only have services of ladies' prayer meeting Tuesday afternoon, social prayer meeting Thursday afternoon, but we have church services on each Sabbath at eleven A. M. and five P. M. The grounds have a reputation for freedom, hospitality and many congenialities.

We are not frightened at the cry of yellow fever, and would very much love to remain and watch the last September sun as he sinks behind the tree-tops; yet our "tickets of leave" have expired. As we turn our faces homeward there are shadows of regret that we go so soon; yet in our hearts there is a reflection of gratitude and love for the glorious old camp ground, its shades, dashing waters and hallowed associations.

May we all meet here again and tent through many seasons; yet, hoping our call be not so short as dear Bro. Kimball's, who dined with us on the eve of his departure from this earthly camp ground, and within eight days "summoned to pitch his tent on God's camp ground in the glory land."

Affectionate wishes for the ADVOCATE, its readers and editor.

Providence Camp Meeting.

I was placed in charge of the Providence circuit about the first of June, and since that time I have been striving hard to advance the cause of Christ on this work. The Lord has graciously blessed my labors, and I have enjoyed religion this summer more than I ever did before.

Our camp meeting at Providence was a grand success, attended by a mighty outpouring of the Spirit. An influence for good went out from the camp meeting that will be felt for years to come. Very few ministers were present, there being only three itinerant preachers in attendance besides the pastor. We feel deeply grateful to those three, as well as to the few faithful local preachers who assisted. There were many conversions and twenty-five applications for membership.

Bro. McLaurin took up a collection for the American Bible Society, which amounted to about thirty dollars.

Accessions since June 1, eighteen, with twenty-four applications pending. This includes those who applied at camp meeting. I expect to make a full report on every collection at Conference. We give God the glory, and praise him for his blessings.

Yours faithfully,

WM. L. LINFIELD.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by six physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

Briefs.

The Brazil Conference was held, by Bishop Granbery, in San Paulo, July 27. Three preachers were admitted on trial, and three remain on trial. Fourteen preachers were stationed. Number of members, 288; local preachers, 4; total, 292; infant baptisms, 31; adult baptisms, 36; number of Sunday-schools, 11; teachers, 33; pupils, 339; schools: 2 girls' colleges, 4 missionaries, 13 assistants, 143 pupils.

The Western Virginia Conference held its thirty-fifth session recently, Bishop McTyeire presiding. The statistics are as follows: Admitted on trial into the Conference, 7; admitted into full connection, 7; number of members, 19,276—an increase of 1,921; infants baptized, 387—adults, 1,491; Sunday-schools, 266; teachers, 1,925; scholars, 12,288; amount collected for Conference fund, $709 70—deficit, $490 30; collected for foreign missions, $952 98; domestic, $498 60; collected for church extension, $284 99; number of church-houses, 195—valued at $253,395; number of parsonages, 34—valued at $32,925.

The Evangelist says this about business growing out of electricity:

In the United States there are 5,351 isolated plants and central electric light stations, producing every night 192,500 arc and 1,925,000 incandescent lights. There are employed for the motive power of dynamos steam engines aggregating 459,495 horse-power, and the capitalization of electric companies during the last six months has increased $42,210,100. There are now being operated in this country 34 electric railroads, comprising 138 miles of single track, while 49 other roads, with an aggregate length of over 300 miles, are in course of construction. Careful estimates show that no less than 17,500,000 passengers will be carried by the electric roads of the country during the present year. The increase of the business is strikingly illustrated by the fact that there are single factories employing as many as 1,500 persons in making electric motors. There are eight journals devoted exclusively to electricity and its dependent industries in the United States.

The missionary assessment upon our patronizing Conferences are as follows: Mississippi, $7,800; North Mississippi, $9,450, and Louisiana $6,800, making a total of $24,050 to be raised among 85,601 members, which is about 28 cents apiece. Last year these three Conferences raised for foreign and domestic missions, $27,944, which was $12,095 above the figures of the year before. Our constituency is evidently improving in this direction, and we exhort the pastors not to let the work slack. Keep the church enthused with the missionary spirit, and let us set an example of giving to the whole church. The North Mississippi Conference last year paid its full assessments, and let our other two Conferences resolve to come up to that point this year. We wish to show the church a trio of Conferences that can look the Board of Missions in the face and not blush at the remembrance of delinquencies. And we believe we will do it. Make it a point, brethren, to get a contribution for missions from every member in the church; and don't even refuse the pennies.

Consolation in Christ.

The sacred writer represents Simeon as one of the devout Israelites, who was "waiting for the consolation of Israel;" and when we see him in the temple with the infant Jesus in his arms, and hear his sincere prayer, "Lord, lettest now thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation," we will not be far wrong to say that he had come into possession of the "consolation" for which he waited. In that beautiful sight, where devout old age touches innocent infancy and finds consolation in the touch, we have a prophetic object lesson of the effect which communion with Christ would have upon all truly humble souls.

In a world of trouble and sorrow, coming as the result of sin, there can be no greater blessing than consolation to the troubled heart, comfort to the sorrowing soul. There is no blessing oftener needed by the care-worn spirits of this vale of tears, nor one more graciously promised, nor more abundantly bestowed. The last discourse of Christ to the disciples revealed to them their Master in a new light, even as the source of their consolation after he had left them; for he said on that sad Thursday night: "I will not leave you comfortless. Peace I leave with you." Paul confirmed the same thought when, out of the depths of his own experience, he said: "As the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ." Not only as the source, but also as the giver of consolation, Paul speaks of Christ, saying: "Our Lord Jesus Christ hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace." The writer to the Hebrews represents those "who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before them," as having "a strong consolation."

We clearly see the reason for this consolation in the mission and work of Christ in the world. Paul states it broadly when he says: "Christ came into the world to save sinners." When we read that he came to give light by opening blind eyes, to bind up broken hearts, to set the captives free, to give joy for mourning—not to curse, but to bless; not to destroy, but to save—to open the infinite resources of grace to penitence and prayer, to proclaim the blessed fatherhood of God, and also that his life here was in strictest accord with the purpose of his coming, comfort can have no firmer ground upon which to stand. The man who can read the life of our Lord—who can listen to his heart-touching words and behold his merciful works, and not find consolation in both—has not yet entered into the rich experiences of the Christian life. In the atonement made for the sinner by the sacrifice of himself Christ appears as the Redeemer and Ransomer; and in those offices he brings consolation. What larger, deeper comfort can a human soul have than comes from this fact as stated by Peter: "Who himself bare our sins in his own body on the tree"? And, then, when his resurrection confirmed the reality of all his claims and the efficacy of his death, and became the earnest, the pledge of our own resurrection, the consolation deepens and broadens. And, lastly, he is represented as our Intercessor "at the right hand of the throne of the majesty on-high." He pleads his own life and sufferings and death in our behalf. And we are assured—

> "The Father hears him pray,
> His dear anointed One;
> He can not turn away
> The presence of his Son."

So, in whatever aspect we look at our Lord, we find there is consolation in him. His own blessed words are: "In me ye shall have peace." "Consolation in Christ!" Blessed word! Blessed fact! Rich and glorious experience! It sweetens sorrow, allays care, mitigates trouble, strengthens faith, brightens hope, gladdens solitude, and opens in the humble soul perennial springs of joy.

Our Missouri Letter.

THE MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

BY M. H. CHAPMAN, D. D.

The seventy-second session of the Missouri Conference met at Gallatin, on the fifth instant, and, after a very pleasant session, adjourned on Monday night, the tenth. Bishop Hendrix presided to the very great satisfaction of the Conference, and endeared himself more than ever to the members of the body by his Christian spirit and marked executive ability. Dr. John D. Vincil was elected secretary for the twenty-sixth consecutive time; and J. H. Pritchett was in his usual place as statistical secretary.

The beautiful little city of Gallatin overflowed with hospitality, and the attendance on the sessions of the Conference and the religious services was very large. Towns the size of Gallatin entertain the Conference much better than larger cities. It is an event with them, and all throw open their homes, extending such a hospitality as is unknown to the inhabitants of a city. It is the first time that the session of our Conference was ever held at Gallatin, and it was a great occasion to that whole section of country. I have never seen a larger or more interested attendance on all the sessions of the body.

We had quite a number of visitors. Dr. Barbee was there to tell us all about the Publishing House and to make the acquaintance of the Missouri preachers. I think it was a mutual case of love at first sight. Of course, Dr. Morton was on hand, and although we were $800 behind on our church extension assessment, the deficit was all brought up; and, setting the tune for the other Conferences, we sent our good Secretary on his way rejoicing. Dr. J. W. Lewis, the newly elected State agent of the American Bible Society, was on hand to represent the interests of that great organization, while Dr. Bounds and Mr. L. D. Dameron represented our own organ, the St. Louis Christian Advocate; and Dr. J. E. Godbey was present in the interests of the Southwestern Methodist. Rev. E. J. Stanley—who went from us to Montana some twelve years ago, and who has done so much for Methodism in that pioneer region—was with us looking for recruits. We were also glad to see Rev. W. C. Dunlap, Commissioner of Education for the colored people; Rev. C. H. Briggs, presiding elder of the Kansas City district, and Rev. C. L. Chilton, pastor of Washington Street Church, at Kansas City—all of whom did some good preaching for us.

The transfer subject was one of the "burning questions" of the session. We lost more and received more by transfer than ever before at one session of the Conference: Julian C. Brown went back to the White River Conference; W. B. Johnsey was transferred to the Arkansas Conference; J. W. Johnson to the West Virginia Conference; W. T. Bolling and J. E. Squires to the Denver Conference, and J. B. Pamall to the Montana Conference. These are all good men, and we could ill afford to spare them; but we received some good ones in their places: A. G. Dinwiddie came to us from the Tenuessee Conference; W. F. Packard and J. E. V. Humphries from the Denver Conference; L. P. Siceloff from Southwest Missouri Conference; J. H. Jackson from West Virginia Conference; J. M. Dempsey from White River Conference, and J. D. Hammond from the St. Louis Conference. There is no prejudice in the Missouri Conference against transfers who came to us to take "pot-luck;" we gladly welcome all good men, but we do object to men coming to us only to fill a certain appointment, and then, when they are through with that, leaving us for other pastures. Against such a policy we enter an earnest protest: and we are very glad that nothing of this kind was done at our recent session.

A paper was adopted asking the Parent Board to increase the assessment for foreign missions fifty per cent., so as to make such assessment half a million of dollars; also a paper calling on the Board of Missions to appeal to the United States government to use its influence to stop the importation of spirituous liquors into Africa.

Seven thousand nine hundred and forty-four dollars and forty cents was reported collected for foreign missions, and four thousand two hundred and twenty-seven dollars and thirty-three cents for domestic missions—an increase of nearly a thousand dollars.

The statistics show: Local preachers, 147; members, 34,181—a gain of 259; 1,559 adults and 471 infants baptized; money expended on churches and parsonages, $47,925 41; number of Sunday-schools, 321; scholars, 20,273. The Sunday-schools paid this year for missions $1,016 75.

The next Conference will be held at Palmyra.

It was a cause for profound gratitude that no member of the Conference had died during the year. Most of our preachers are vigorous young men in the prime of life. But we propose to make proper provision for our superannuated preachers, and for the widows and orphans of those who fall in the battle. We already have a "trust fund" of about $8,000; and at this session Rev. C. I. Van Deventer, one of our oldest and most highly esteemed men, was appointed an agent to increase this fund to $25,000.

Altogether, we had a most pleasant and profitable session. But in the appointments there was the most lively stirring up that we have ever had since I have been in the Conference. Four of the nine presiding elders were changed, while of the twenty-four stations we have, only six had their former pastors returned. The man who was not changed this year was out of the fashion. I trust that we shall with this year enter upon a new era of prosperity and progress.

HANNIBAL, MO., Sept. 18, 1888.

"Problem of Methodism."

BY REV. B. F. WHITE.

I thank God for this book: approximating perfection in its line of thought, plan of exemplification, thorough demonstration, and happy solving of this before perplexing, but now simple doctrine of Christian perfection. Let all understand that we regard Mr. Wesley as human, not divine. Let all know that we accept from Mr. Wesley only those doctrines that are taught in God's Word, and those phases of these doctrines that are consonant with both common sense and divine teaching.

I wish to ask Dr. Rush, and all others of the "residue" faith, what per cent. of our sins are pardoned in justification, and what per cent. of purity is given us in regeneration. Is it fifty per cent. in one and sixty per cent. in the other, or is the per cent. equal? If equal, is it greater or less than fifty or sixty per cent.? Does God pardon our "little" sins or our "big" sins in justification? Does he cleanse one corner of the soul or three corners? Come, give us some reliable figures on the subject: How much am I saved in justification and regeneration? Is it half, or more, or less? These are vital questions. We wish to know our spiritual latitude and longitude at this important period in our Christian life. "Without holiness, no man can see the Lord." Nothing can enter heaven that defileth, "but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." When I was "regenerated," "born of the Spirit," made a "new creature in Christ Jesus," was my name not "written in the Lamb's book of life"? In regeneration we are undoubtedly radically and thoroughly changed in our spiritual natures. Please tell me if I am changed from sin at all, how much I am changed, or how much of me is changed, and what I am changed unto?

In the work of justification and regeneration I become a Christian in the first acceptation of that term. I, being a Christian, though but a babe, may grow in grace, spiritually develop into Christian manhood, and thus experience and enjoy Christian perfection through my probation. Perfect in degree, as I use the means of grace afforded me in the providence of God. In regeneration all my sins are pardoned; I became a "new creature in Christ Jesus," thus stepping on the ladder of Christian perfection. Being on the ladder, I am in Christ, and, gradus per gradum, step by step, I climb, developing in both inward and outward Christian character: ever approximating Christ. Or I may, saltus per saltum, leap by leap, climb this ladder. Inwardly becoming stronger, firmer: outwardly more and more conformed to the spirit within. This latter-day phase of Christian perfection (the same, or about the same, as that professed by Maxfield and others, and taught by Wesley in his thirteenth and fourteenth sermons) seems to have a superabundance of the "feeling" at the expense of the reasoning. Persons of overbalancing sympathy, and rather lacking in the reason, are generally carried away with it, and, sad to say, often go entirely astray. Paul "reasoned of righteousness," etc. Scripture teaching, with sanctified or Spirit-guided common sense, will always lead the inquirer right. Let charity ever, as a mantle, be thrown over the weak.

This leads me to say of the article, of this week's issue of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, by Mark Gay Pearse, that as Paul ever "reasoned," so must we. The world is flooded with infidel literature, and our periodical literature, culling from all sources, keeps the public mind fully informed with every phase of infidelity. The pulpit is not responsible for it. The public mind, being surcharged with infidelity of every shade, simply demands that the pulpit shall "produce its cause" "and bring forth its strong reasons." Spirit-guided reason takes hold of eternal truth, as revealed in God's Word, and, comprehending both the reason and the experience, finds they harmonize, demonstrating God to be their brother.

ALEXANDRIA, Louisiana.

Yellow Fever.

Since our last issue there has occurred the most frightful and far-spreading panic on account of yellow fever that the country has ever known. The publication of the fact that several cases had broken out in Jackson, Miss., seemed to run the people wild. Shot-gun quarantines have been established everywhere. Some sections have applied to governors to call out the militia to maintain the quarantine. In other places we hear railroads have been torn up to stop travel. Some roads have ceased to sell tickets at all. There never was such a scare. In the meantime, the fever has held on and increased in Florida, and is repo in several places in Georgia Alabama. We are possessing souls in calmness and qui waiting the developments of future. Up to this writin Tuesday, the twenty-fifth— city is very healthy, and, cording to the authorities, th has not occurred even a su cious case of yellow fever. counsel our friends abroad cultivate calmness of mind, read trustingly the ninety-f Psalm.

Notes.

This, from a noted Englishman, food for thought:

"I have personally no prejudic says Canon Wilberforce, "aga those engaged in the liquor trade; I am utterly tired of seeing this bri world turned into a jail or a hell order that the great brewers and d tillers may become millionaires peers."

The St. Louis Advocate says th are five ministers in the bounds of St. Louis Conference—four being l erants and one, who was an itinera but now local—whose united a reach 419 years, and their aggreg service in the ministry reaches years. "Two of them rarely attem to preach, while the other three on pretty much as heretofore."

Hon. F. A. McLain, who is distr attorney in Amite county, Miss., answer to the arguments of a co mercial traveler in favor of whisk recently said: "I have been pros cuting attorney in this county years. The first three years we h free whisky, the last three we ha had prohibition, and I must hone confess that the cases on the crimin docket have decreased seventy-five p cent." One established fact is wor a thousand baseless theories.

The New York papers record thi

The unusual spectacle of a m walking into Mayor Hewitt's offic depositing an envelope containi $12,000 for the Jacksonville sufferer and walking out again after refusi to give his name, was seen on Monda "Just say that it came from American," was all that he wou say. The money was in three go certificates; one of the denominati of $10,000 and two of $1,000 eac Mayor Hewitt said that he was c tirely without information as to wh had given the money, and th man who brought it was not recogniz by anyone who saw him.

We have received two articles late which began rather significantly One began this way: "As I am tire of all other employment, I will pen few lines for the ADVOCATE." Th other began: "As I am suffering with lumbago and can't go to preachi ing, I will advance my ideas of th gospel." Which teaches that when man is tired and racked with pain h is in good condition to write for th church paper. We wonder if Horac had reference to such communication when he wrote to the Pisos:

> "nonumque prematur in annum
> Membranis intus positis"?

We have heard quite a number o strong reasons why a man should no shave the beard from his face, bu anything like the following we never heard before, and we are not pre pared to say that it is not a good reason:

Mr. Stead, of the Pall Mall Gazette, advises business men, who live in a perpetual world of excitement, to give up shaving. He maintains that "If instead of reaping the worthless stubble of the chin, we devoted a quarter of an hour every morning to sober, serious reflection, in thinking over the solution of the social question, a great change for good would come over this misguided world."

Dr. John E. Edwards contributes an article for the Raleigh Christian Advocate on the delinquencies of church members, and closes with these statements:

"The failure of the pastor, in many instances, is chargeable, in great measure, to the fault-finding, captious members of the church. They discourage the preacher, impair his influence, weaken his hands, and then complain of his want of efficiency. Shame on such church members! They lend no support to the Sunday-school; give nothing to the support of the pastor; never go to the prayer meeting; take a sort of pleasure in hearing and circulating reports detrimental to the church and its prosperity; go to other churches, and speak well of their pastors, or it may be, stay at home on Sunday, read secular papers, or lounge in idleness. No wonder their pastor is discouraged. No wonder the congregation is small. No wonder the Sunday-school languishes. No wonder the prayer meeting breaks down. No wonder a poor report goes up to the Conference. Still, in all these charges there are some faithful members. There are some good women who do all in their power to keep up the church work. Some true and faithful men who stand by the pastor, and hold up his hands. But for these the church would languish, and languishing it would die. Hold on, ye faithful ones. God will turn the captivity of Jacob. "Who hath despised the day of small things?" "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight." A better day is coming.

Personals.

Whitworth College opened last week with over 100 boarding pupils. The buildings have been repaired and refurnished, and the institution is better equipped than ever. The formal opening at the college chapel was largely attended by citizens of the town and friends from a distance.

Rev. W. W. Hopper, from Jacksonville, Texas, passed through our city last week en route to St. Tammany and Palmer Creek Camp Meetings. He gave us a pleasant call.

A brother, writing from a circuit in the Mississippi Conference, says: "The ADVOCATE has a wide circulation among our people and is doing a fine work." There is no encouragement equal to that which comes from a knowledge of the fact that we are doing good.

Bro. Robert Babington, of Franklinton, La., gave us a call last week on his way home from a summer visit to friends and relatives in the Old Country. He visited England, France, Ireland and Scotland. He had a pleasant trip and returns in splendid health. Bro. Babington has been a member of the Mississippi Conference ever since laymen were admitted and has several times been a member of the General Conference.

The Colorado Methodist has been purchased by a committee of the Denver Conference, and the name changed to "The Rocky Mountain Methodist." Rev. George Needham is business manager and Rev. Boone Kenton, editor. It is to be an eight-page paper, published twice a month at one dollar per annum. We wish this new movement the largest success.

Marshal Bazaine, who figured in the French effort to found an empire in Mexico under Maximilian, and who commanded the French division which was surrendered at Metz during the Franco-Prussian War, died at Madrid, Spain, September 23.

Rev. J. W. Medlock, who has been sojourning at Pass Christian for the benefit of his health for the past two weeks, passed through the city last Monday en route home, much improved.

By telegraph, Monday evening, we were pained to learn of the death of the youngest daughter of Dr. W. C. Black, of Meridian, Miss. She died of typhoid fever. Dr Black and family have the sympathy and prayers of the whole church in this great bereavement.

ENDURING WORK.—There is comfort in the fact that no true work which we have done for our fellows has been lost, nor has its influence been weakened by lapse of time nor its out-going power been circumscribed by impassable lines. When men work in the mechanical department, hardly has the ring of the hammer and the rasp of the saw died out of hearing before the stateliest edifice begins to crumble. Men build their imposing speculations, and lie down to dream that their theories are wrapping the world in good, but they wake up in the morning to find out that darling the slight humanity, pursuing the track of its own imperious wants, has marched past all their theories and speculations. But when men do solid and substantial work in the spiritual department it is permanent work. That work which, through spiritual agencies, touches and reconstructs and renovates sinful souls, abides in the indestructible characters of men and women and children moulded after the pattern of Jesus, and stamped with the image of God. Every sinner who, through these means and agencies, is transformed into a saint, becomes a monumental column reared by the Holy Ghost to the memory of the workers; and on its lofty peak and adown its shaft of beauty the light of the city of God will shimmer forever.

WHO WROTE THE PSALMS?—Those secular papers, which a few weeks ago were so scandalized, and whose State pride had been so cruelly mortified by the publication of the fact that several boys were found in Mississippi who could not answer the question, "Who wrote the Psalms?" have missed the opportunity we opened to them of administering consolation to the poor lads. They could have done it easily enough. There is nothing truer than an old adage, which says, "Misery loves company;" and if those papers had made use of their opportunity, those poor fellows would have found themselves in such honorable "company" that the edge of the reproach would have been completely turned. We throw the Mississippi boys this crumb of comfort. A college professor of our acquaintance tells this story of a Louisiana boy: When asked, "Who wrote the Psalms?" he replied, "Samson." When asked, "Who wrote the Pentateuch?" he opened his eyes in wonder, and said, "Why, I always thought that meant the infernal regions."

Postal Card Reports.

—Dr. W. B. Murrah writes from Brookhaven, Miss., September 20, concerning the opening of the session at Whitworth College, as follows: "Yesterday was a grand day at Whitworth. More than one hundred boarding pupils were present the first day. This is said to be unprecedented in the history of the institution. The trains to-day have brought a large number. The successful opening of the session is all the more remarkable as it is known that many who expected to come could not do so on account of the recent disaster to the crops."

—Rev. C. T. Munholland writes from West Monroe, La.: "I have just closed a meeting at Bowman Chapel of spiritual power, reaching all classes. One man, seventy-three years old, was converted and joined the church. There were seventeen accessions and as many conversions. The church was wonderfully quickened and many family altars erected. I was assisted by Bros. Parvin and Patterson."

—Rev. T. B. White writes, September 19, from Homer, La.: "A ten-days' meeting just closed: Eight recruits to the army of the King. The embattled hosts refreshed and flushed with victory. Rev. J. E. Greene, of Clouston, Texas, stood in the forefront of the battle and led the hosts. Armed with such a blade, with, 'Holiness to the Lord,' on the banner, and preached and exemplified in the life, it is no wonderment."

—Bro. T. L. Mellen writes: "Wesson and Beauregard are pretty well represented at the church colleges this session. Our four young local preachers are now at school—Wiley A. Ferguson and Henri Mellard at Centenary, Will T. Woodward at Kavanaugh, and Will L. Wellman at Hiwassee. Besides these, Miss Lucy Wellman, of Beauregard, leaves to-day for East Mississippi Female College, to fit herself for the China mission work. I am proud of these noble young people whom God has called through my ministry to do his glorious work."

—Rev. John F. Wynn writes, September 21, from Montgomery circuit, Louisiana Conference: "I send a short report of two protracted meetings. Four days at Sanders, resulting in an addition of twelve members and several conversions. Closed at Atlanta last Wednesday night. About thirty conversions and reclamations, and an accession of twelve new members. We had some precious meetings previous to these, resulting in about forty accessions and about as many conversions. Rev. R. M. Walker assisted me in most of these services."

—Rev. T. J. Upton writes from Lake Providence, La., September 20: "We have just closed a meeting at this place, resulting in fourteen accessions to, and a general revival of, the church. Bro. W. P. Kinghall, of Harrisonburg, an old and tried friend of mine, did most of the preaching, and did it very effectively. His youngest son, Robert, preached three telling sermons to the children. He is endeavoring to follow his father and brother as they have followed Christ."

Literary Notes.

"Antrefois: Tales of Old New Orleans and Elsewhere," by Prof. James A. Harrison, whose youth was spent in this city, and the author of "Greek Vignettes," "Spain in Profile," "The Story of Greece," etc., will appear in the course of a few weeks in Cassell's Sunshine Series of American fiction. The stories relate to the ancien regime in Louisiana, and deal intimately with Creole life.

The popular writer for the juvenile magazines whom the little folks love as "Margaret Sidney," is known outside of literature as Mrs. Daniel Lothrop, wife of the Boston publisher.

Volume I. of Murray's great historical English dictionary, which only carries the work through A and B, contains 31,254 words, of which 22,232 are stem words. As 5,982 of these are marked obsolete, and 870 are imperfectly naturalized, it leaves 15,380 words in A and B now current.

C. L. Webster & Co. announce for publication a volume of army anecdotes collected by Gen. Grant and left by him in manuscript.

D. Lothrop Company will publish "A Young Prince of Commerce," by Selden R. Hopkins, a work adapted to give boys a clear understanding of the principles of trade.

Cupples, Upham & Co. will publish shortly a new work by W. H. H. Murray, descriptive of the northwestern side of the American continent, illustrated from sketches by J. D. Woodward.

Lippincott's Magazine, for October, will publish the last manuscript that came from the busy pen of the late E. P. Roe. It is an autobiographical sketch, giving many interesting anecdotes of his literary career. Its title is taken from a phrase of Matthew Arnold: "A Native Author called Roe."

A volume of miscellaneous essays by Matthew Arnold, not hitherto collected, will be published about the end of this year. It will contain several articles from manuscripts.

Under the title, "Ethics and Economics," in the October Popular Science Monthly, Mr. Robert Matthews will give a thoughtful view of our social outlook, maintaining that the doctrine of individualism, which has just been having its day, involves too much selfishness, and that each member of society must, in future, pay attention to his duties, as well as insist on his rights.

Pope Leo is writing a history of Rome in the middle ages. Particular attention will be given to the period of Gregory the Great.

A new work entitled "Dogmatic Theology," by Prof. W. G. T. Shedd, will shortly come from the presses of the Scribners. It will be in two volumes, and is destined to take a high rank among standard works of theology.

The sixth volume of Dr. Philip Schaff's great work of "The History of the Christian Church," upon which years of labor have been spent, will shortly be ready with the Scribners. This volume covers the Reformation period in Germany, between 1517 and 1530, and will constitute Vol. I. of the "History of the Reformation."

We notice that the Scribners are to issue a new edition of those favorites of our boyhood days, the histories of J. T. Headley. They will be recalled by their titles, among which are "Washington and His Generals," and "Napoleon and His Marshals."

Scribners will also publish soon a new book of stories, by Frank R. Stockton, entitled "Amos Kilbright; His Adscititious Experiences, with other Stories;" "Men and Measures of Half a Century," from the pen of Hon. Hugh McCulloch, replete with reminiscences, sketches and comments based on a long public career, especially during his official relations with the administrations of Presidents Lincoln, Johnson and Arthur; "The Five Talents of Women," a book for women and girls, by the author of "How to Be Happy, though Married;" Miss Henrietta Christian Wright's "Children's Stories of the Great Scientists."

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

GOLDEN KEYS.

A bunch of golden keys is mine
To make each day with gladness shine.
"Good morning!" that's the golden key
That unlocks every day for me.

When evening comes, "Good night!" I say,
And close the door of each glad day.

When at the table, "If you please"
I take from off my bunch of keys.

When friends give anything to me,
I'll use the little "Thank you!" key.

"Excuse me," "Beg your pardon," too,
When by mistake some harm I do.

Or if unkindly harm I've given,
With "Forgive me" key I'll be forgiven.

On a golden ring these keys I'll bind,
This is its motto: "Be ye kind."
I'll often use each golden key,
And so a happy child I'll be.

Woman's Department of Church Extension.

Dear Children: Let me tell you a short story and see if you think the children I tell you of love others as God loved them.

Once quite a number of boys and girls were going from school to their favorite play-ground, laughing and talking and having a merry time. That was all right, I love to see children happy; but on their way they passed by a pit against which they had been warned. It was not as deep as a well, still it was so deep that even a man, if he should fall in could not get out without help. Besides, the water stood a foot deep in it, and a very poisonous kind of snake had several times been seen in it. It had often been said by the people living near, that the pit ought to be filled, but nobody thought it his business to attend to it, so it was not filled. It was in a lonesome, out-of-the way place, where people rarely ever passed. The children, however, when school closed, on bright, pretty days in early summer, often went by not far from it, on their way to a place beyond where they were fond of playing. On the evening I am telling you of, as they were passing some little distance off as usual, they heard a strange voice crying, "Come and help me!" The children stopped. One girl called, "Where are you?" in a funny way, and they all laughed. "Please come and help me!" said the voice. "Are you roosting in a tree?" called back one of the boys, and the children all laughed again.

"It is a wicked fairy making believe it is somebody in trouble to get us to come to that old snake pit and fall in," said a little girl fond of fairy tales. "Yes," said one of the boys, "that pit is right over yonder in those bushes." "I'm going," said a very timid girl, running off, and the whole party scampered after her laughing. The voice cried out after them, "O please come and help me!" They did not stop to hear it, but ran off to their play-ground and only thought of the strange voice in the woods as a matter for fun making.

The voice calling to them for help was that of a poor little boy who had fallen into the pit. He heard them talking and called to them. He did not know who they were, but thought anybody would have heart enough to help him. They did not know his voice because he was a stranger. His mother, a poor widow, had moved to the town only a day or two before. The little boy had gone into the woods to pick up a few sticks to make his mother a fire to cook by. Being a stranger and not knowing of the pit, he had fallen in. He was very much frightened; and when he heard the children going by he was glad and called, thinking they would help him. He cried bitterly when they ran off laughing at him, and thought them very cruel to leave him so. They could not have gotten him out by themselves, but they could easily have run for a man to come with a rope and save the boy. They did not stop to think, but ran away and played until it was time to go home, and would perhaps have forgotten all about the voice in the woods had they not met on their way home a strange woman who asked if they had seen a little boy. No, they had not; "but," said one of them, "we heard a curious voice crying in the woods near the old snake pit." "When did you hear the voice?" asked a man coming out of a house near by.

"Soon after school was out," they said.

"And you did not run for help?" said the man angrily. Then he said more gently to the woman, "Madam, I am afraid your boy has fallen into the pit." He got a strong rope, called to two men to go with him, and went as fast as he could to the pit. The woman who was the mother of the little boy in the pit went with him; some of the children followed, and they never forgot to their dying day the pale face of the boy when the man was drawn up out of the pit with him in his arms, nor the shrieks of the heart-broken mother.

It was thought the boy had been bitten by a serpent and had perhaps fainted from fright. He was found unconscious, in a sitting posture, leaning against the wall, with his head just above the water. He came to only to mourn, "They won't help me," and died that night. Do you not think those children must have been very unhappy when they remembered they could have saved that boy if they had tried to help him? Did they do as the Savior would have done? He came from heaven and died to save us from the horrible pit of eternal death.

Well, children, somebody is calling to you for help. Over in the Western wilds there are some little Indian children who have never heard of Jesus. They are in danger of falling into the pit of sin where Satan, like a poisonous serpent, will kill them. They are calling to you to help them. They want you to send men to tell them of Jesus. Faith in Jesus is like a strong rope that will lift them out of the pit of sin and save them before it is too late. Do not run away to play and forget they are calling to you for help, lest when your play is over you find they have gone into eternal death because you did not love others as God loved you. Listen to them. Do all you can to help them, and God will bless you.

Mr. Editor: As I have not seen any letters in the Advocate from this part of the country, I will try and write you a letter. I wish I had sufficient education to write correctly. I trust I will some day have it, as we are to have a ten months' school. It is to begin the first Monday in December. Bro. W. P. Meador is our preacher. He is a nice young man and, we all believe, a good one. I wish you could have been with us at our protracted meeting. Bros. E. J. Taylor and A. B. Cox assisted Bro. Meador. We all enjoyed the meeting very much. I hope we will have our new church completed before our next protracted meeting. I will answer Luther King's question: "Advocate" is found in I John ii, 1. I will ask the little cousins a question: Where can the word "argument" be found in the Bible? Your little friend,

ELLENDER D. GRAVES.

Richton, Miss.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy eight years old. My papa takes the Advocate, and I like to read the little cousins' letters. We have no Sunday-school, but I get my lesson at home and mamma hears it. I am reading the History of the United States, and find it very interesting. I have a nice blackboard at home, and can solve examples in addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division. Our pastor is Rev. George T. Ashley. We like him very much. I have never written to the Advocate before, so I had better stop for fear of that dreadful waste-basket. With much success to the Advocate.

Fingers before Forks.—It is difficult to realize what a modern invention the table fork is. Queen Elizabeth never heard of one. She had, it is true, a few dainty forks, perchance with crystal handles, for eating preserved fruit at dessert. But long after her time dinner forks were unknown in England. The very earliest now to be found belong to the same nobleman whose hour-glass salt has been already spoken of, and these are not older than the middle of the reign of Charles II. The few early forks of the reign of George I. are three-pronged, and but few of our neighbors can show us four-pronged forks much before the reign of George III., from which time their fashion has remained unaltered to the present day, except for their handles, which have followed the fashion of spoons, finishing up with the familiar fiddle pattern of nineteenth century use. Before the days of forks the ewer and basin, which have now generally disappeared, were much in request after every course; whereas now the basin alone, with a little rosewater, makes its appearance at civic feasts after dinner, as a matter of fashion rather than necessity. These fine old basins have no doubt been melted up to supply the forks whose invention rendered the washing of the fingers superfluous.—Murray's Magazine.

In the Dining-Room.—High basket chairs in the dining-room are the very handsomest and the most sensible. How often a lame back or a nervous head can be relieved thus while sitting through a prolonged meal. Buy a wide or broad dining-room table. A narrow table will always look mean (like a railroad restaurant or a hotel), no matter what you put upon it. Under the damask a cover of white Canton flannel, cloth or felt should always lie. It breaks the hardness and softens the appearance of the entire table. Serve the soup dish not to the rim, but only half full, that the appetite may be stimulated, not satiated. Have a round, upon which to rest the feet, on your dining-table. Some people are short and sit uncomfortably at table because there are no foot stools.—Good Housekeeping.

A child's character is often judged by his propensity to cry; but he is not so often judged by his propensity to laugh. He is berated as a "cry-baby" because, perhaps, he is supersensitive; he is not so often commended for his fine sense of humor and delicate appreciation of congruity, and incongruity, as manifested in his laughter. Yet, as Carlyle says, laughter is "the cipher key wherewith we decipher the whole man." If we are afraid lest a child show weakness in his weeping, we ought to be no less afraid lest he fail to show strength in his laughing.

Home.—One is forever hearing of men and women who go away from home to have a good time; whereas, the proper place for good times is right in the home. The ways of having them are as many as the sands of the sea; but there is one reliable method for starting a "time," and that is to do something to please another member of the family rather than yourself. A little exhibition of unselfish affection, a favor extended, a reasonable indulgence granted, may start a train of events which will brighten a whole day and make an evening merry. It involves less trouble and far more fun than a picnic.

The banana is mentioned by Dr. B. W. Richardson as one of the best of foods. It may almost be looked upon as condensed milk, its composition being seventy-four per cent. water, twenty per cent. fuel, five per cent. flesh-formers, and seven-tenths per cent. mineral; while milk contains eighty-six per cent. water, nine per cent. fuel, four per cent. flesh-formers, and seven-tenths per cent. mineral.

Medical experts, by the use of the Microscope, have recently discovered and classified, specific living germs in the blood of all persons suffering from Malaria, and say that to cure the patient these germs must be killed. Thirty years ago, Dr. Shallenberger advanced this theory as the correct one, and prepared his "Antidote for Malaria," to destroy these poisonous germs. If you have Malaria in your system, a few doses of this medicine will destroy the poison immediately, and not injure an infant. Sold by Druggists.

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my Arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry, scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. GALL.—FRANCES X. RIGGS, wife of Jasper Gall, passed safely and peacefully into eternal rest, on September 9, 1888, aged sixty-three years and four months. For many years—in fact, ever since the beginning of Methodism almost in this neighborhood—Sister Gall has been its living, moving and inspiring genius. Thoroughly converted when quite young—while the people called Methodists worshiped in a corn house—she never lost the clear evidence of it or failed, when occasion offered, to yield a loving testimony for her Lord. A born organizer, a marvel for management, with a heroic soul that never knew defeat, she guided the infant church through perilous places to safety. The church here owes, under God, its present standing and strength and much of its past usefulness to her self-sacrificing work. She was a model mother. She died leaving all her children and many of her grandchildren in the church. Her home was always the preacher's retreat. In it he was always sure of a welcome, the tenderest sympathy if in trouble, and the heartiest encouragement if in a strait. The fruit of all traits in her character, so seldom seen in these days, was the giving of her time, talent and means without measure to the cause of Christ. She was one soul that patterned after the children of Israel when giving to the Tabernacle. The preacher, like Moses, had to restrain her. For many years, no beneficent or charitable meeting ever was called but she presided, and, under her control, multitudes in distress have been relieved. For ten or eleven years she has been an invalid and confined mostly to the house, often to her couch. But still from that home or from that couch there went out an influence as potent almost as that which the preacher exerted from the pulpit.

She was closeted with God in the cleft of the rock, and a light shone from her upon those who visited her during these years. Her going has left a great shadow, in which stands sad-hearted her aged partner, the sharer of her joys and sorrows, her hopes and fears. After forty-six years of loving companionship this separation is indeed severe. But it will not be long. The thick shadow will soon be parted by the downcoming of God's angel to call the bridegroom home. Sister Gall's last illness was not long, but very severe. It made no change in her disposition. There were still the quiet trust in God, the loving thoughtfulness for others, the absolute self-forgetfulness. Her heart and mind both remained clear to the end, with brief interregnums caused by medicine. These last days she had reached the top of Hermon and found it easy to step from its summit to the arms of God. A few days before the transit she called all her children, grandchildren and friends and addressed them individually, giving to each one loving counsel or godly admonition, and gained from each a promise to meet her in the skies. This hour will surely never be forgotten by them, or his vows unkept. I was called to see her—her own pastor, Bro. Medlock, being ill—and to my questions as to the future and the present she answered: "I have perfect peace. Nothing to fear, saved through his blood." She then repeated with me the twenty-third Psalm, and I sang, at her request, "Nearer my God to thee;" prayed with her and left her quite on the verge of heaven. This was Friday. On Sunday morning, just after the bells had rung for Sunday-school, without a struggle her soul discarded the body and ascended. Glory be to God for such a life! May a double portion of her spirit be given to her son and daughters that they may continue in the work her tired hands have laid down!

ALFRED E. CLAY.

FAISON—On July 25, 1888, Mrs. ANN M. FAISON, of blessed memory, passed into eternal rest at her home in Sunflower county, Miss. She was born June 18, 1811, and as she entered on womanhood she was married to Mr. John Walls, November 29, 1860. Soon after her marriage she was left a widow with one child, who passed away in infancy. On February 8, 1863, she was again married to Mr. George M. Faison, which union was hallowed by the birth of seven children—five of whom survive her. Sister Faison was reared in the association of the Methodist Church, and when she was fully come to years she cast her lot with that people with whom she remained until her untimely departure.

In the death of this good woman the church loses a pious and useful member. She was filled with fervent charity for the poor, and so far as she could command the means she was ready in practical sympathy to relieve the necessities of those in distress. She was a devoted lover of her church. She took great interest in all her enterprises and was a liberal contributor to all her causes. She felt that a burden lay upon her outside the ordinary cares of a large household. This burden was light and joyous to her: the service of God was her delight. She looked with great care into the interests of the society to which she belonged. More than a month before she died she was making arrangements to move to Oxford, Miss., where she contemplated sending her children to school. But she couldn't bear the idea of leaving home and giving up her church. She said she felt more needed in her church at home and didn't intend to move her membership. She was an earnest lover of the cause of Christ. No less than the interests of church did she esteem the welfare and happiness of her pastor and his family. The parsonage had in her a warm and practical friend. She has a hallowed place in the memory of every preacher's family that had lived at this parsonage. Her home was always open to us, and cheer and happiness always greeted the visitor at the threshold. She had a happy household and was so anxious to rear her children right. She was especially anxious about her little daughter, that she should grow up pious, useful to the church and the world. And she prayed that Addie should not be caught in the meshes of worldly fashion and frivolous poisonous society influence. She thought that her husband could more especially look after the boys. Her children are just at the age to need the wise direction and counsel of a mother, when the pure and holy influence of a mother's society are needed to pilot the craft of childhood to the mooring of firm and settled character. Sister Faison was a good wife, a devoted mother, and a kind and generous neighbor. God only can supply her place. The world misses such lights when they go out. How much she suffered no one but she and her ernecilled Redeemer knows. Days and weeks passed of pain and suffering; but the wave of life has rolled back into the ocean of eternity, where on its calm and unchanging bosom no storm can ever disturb its gentle rest. "If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." May God sanctify this brief separation to eternal good of the children, husband and friends of the sainted dead!

SMITH—Died at his residence, in Holmes county, Miss., WHITING W. SMITH, aged seventy-five. The deceased was born in Virginia, November 15, 1813, and died September 8, 1888. On February 15, 1837, he was happily married to Mary White, of Jackson county, W. Va. (then Va.). The issue of this union was ten children—six of whom, together with the mother, survive. Early after his marriage he removed to Southern Illinois, near where Sandoval now stands, and there reared his family. He there united with the Church of Christian Disciples, and continued in its communion until 1877, when he removed to Mississippi. Here he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived consistently until summoned hence.

The deceased led a hard and checkered life during his earlier years as a captain of a flatboat; and afterwards he became the owner of a steamer upon the Mississippi. At one time he had amassed quite a fortune, but he lived to see nearly all of this swept away, and about the same time his naturally robust physique began to give way under the strong tension and exposure. Still his faith and patience were strong; and while the outward man perished, the inward man grew stronger daily. There were no doubts, and when the summons came he fell gently asleep. On the night of Wednesday, September 5, he lay down to sleep; next morning he was found in a state of coma. Saturday, the eighth, he entered into rest.

CAMPBELL.—Little BERTIE ETHEL CAMPBELL, only child of Richard B. and Kate Campbell, was born December 3, 1887. In August, 1888, near Rehoboth, her spirit went back to the God who gave it. Oh! how the baby form will be missed. Weep not, dear parents, another jewel "adorns the bright crown." "The rose that climbed the garden wall has bloomed on the other side."

Unconscious Christianity.

BY REV. JOHN H. BARROWS, D. D.

The only Christian men that count for anything in the battle against this world's indifference, skepticism and hostility are those who are believed to be governed by Christian principles in their daily affairs. Christ in the heart, manifested amid the temptations and crosses of life, as a spirit of unselfishness, courtesy, truth, kindness, generosity, firmness in the right, is an evidence of Christianity which men can not ignore or overcome. Do not think that you are unable to carry Christ into your daily life, because you are so absorbed in business, that it is impossible to have the mind full of him. The loving husband may be too busy to be thinking all the while of the wife at home, and yet she may unconsciously be present in his life through the whole day, giving tone, sweetness, hope, inspiration and courage to him in all his trials and toils. You may be loving Christ and rendering him the best service when he is not consciously present to your mind, by simply doing your duty. He may have so entered into your spirit that the joy and hope and uplift and power in the midst of toil and temptation which you experience are like the tide-waves rolling in on the beach, rolling in response to solar and lunar influences, though not knowing that it is the sun and the moon that have gotten hold of them.

Get the Lord Jesus Christ in the heart, let his words abide in you, and it will be impossible that his blessed power should not be flowing through and from you. The child's toy steamboat is placed on the water; the match is put to the little lamp beneath the tiny boiler, and in a minute the steam is pushing at the piston, the wheel is turning and the boat is gliding over the surface of the tiny lake. There was no effort on the part of the boat to move. It simply responded to natural law, and illustrated it as perfectly as the mightiest ocean steamer on the crested Atlantic. If we have the spiritual life of Christ within us; if we surrender ourselves to his divine influence, then there can be no lack on our part of Christian movement and manifestation, and often when we are making no effort to glorify our Master we shall be glorifying him most.

Men have come to resent and resist direct influence, obtrusive attempts to make them different and better. As the silent, impalpable, noiseless forces are the most potent in nature, so frequently in grace. It is what we are, often more than what we do and say, that leads others to God. It is the persistent power of a life that is governed by higher motives and sees diviner rewards, and is pervaded by heavenly atmospheres that makes your Christianity a fine and transforming force among men. If we have each morning been walking amid the flowery paths of paradise, will not the fragrance of our garments be suspected by the children in the household, the friends who meet us in the parlor, and even the men with whom we associate in the roaring exchange? A holy life does not pass through this world unnoticed. One of the favorite phases of our time in certain religious circles is "separation from the world." We can not have too much of it, if you mean by it the dwelling of the soul with Christ. But there may be a separation from the world by which the world and ourselves shall both suffer. Christianized personalities are needed in every sphere and every development of human life. Of course, if you find that as you touch the world's pleasures, you do not sanctify them, but they secularize and lower you, you must either let them alone or bring to them a fuller divine life. I know those who are so healthful and natural and so replete with the love and life of Christ that in the crowded and brilliant fashionable reception they are not dazed by its glitter, they are not hardened by its formalities or its heartlessness; they are looking out with Christian love and joy on the happy throng, and if one was found there who was saddened and depressed by his own spiritual barrenness, and desired direction and counsel and sympathy, they would be in the spirit then and there to suggest such truths as these: The Christian soul to be happy and right must not for a day cut itself off from God; if your fashionable life of constant social dissipation has taken away your taste for the bread of Heaven, it is a snare of your soul's enemy, if it has been such a tax on your strength and time that the healthful habits of your body and mind have been deranged; if it has robbed you of the hours you have been wont to give to mental peace and holy meditation on higher things; if it has led you to forsake your Christian work or to do it with diminished relish and efficiency; if you are conscious that you have been made by it less prayerful, less unselfish, less thoughtful of others, less willing to do hard duties, less fitted for spiritual work and enjoyment, then by persisting in it, you are grieving your divine Friend, sacrificing your own soul on the altar of vanity and folly and sin, you are not Christianizing the world, the world is enslaving you.—The Treasury.

The confidence of people who have tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, in this preparation, is remarkable. It has cured many who have failed to derive any good whatever from other articles. For diseases caused by impure blood or low state of the system it is unsurpassed.

Nature and revelation are alike God's books. Each may have mysteries, but in each there are plain, practical lessons for every-day duty.—Tryon Edwards.

Smith (with smiling face)—What have you got the blues about?

Jones—Nothing to do. Times are dull.

Smith—Well, now, old fellow, I am glad I struck up with you. You sit right down and write to B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., and they will put you in a way to make money faster than you ever did before. I was out of work, too, but began a little correspondence with them and now I am growing fat and rich. Too busy to talk longer now.

A contemplative life has more the appearance of piety than any other; but the divine plan is to bring faith into activity and exercise.—Cecil.

Scientific.

Mechanism of the Heart.

In the human subject the average rapidity of the cardiac pulsation of an adult male is about seventy beats per minute. These beats are more frequent as a rule in young children and in women, and there are variations within certain limits in particular persons owing to peculiarities of organization. It would not necessarily be an abnormal sign to find in some particular individual the habitual frequency of the heart's action from sixty to sixty-five, or from seventy-five to eighty per minute. As a rule, the heart's action is slower and more powerful in fully developed and muscular organizations, and more rapid and feeble in those of slighter forms. In animals the range is from twenty-five to forty-five in the cold-blooded and fifty upward in the warm-blooded animals, except in the case of a horse, which has a very slow heartbeat, only forty strokes a minute. The pulsations of men and all animals differ with the sea level also. The work of a healthy human heart has been shown to equal the feat of raising five tons four hundredweight one foot per hour, or 125 tons in twenty-four hours. The excess of this work under alcohol in varying quantities is often very great. A curious calculation has been made by Dr. Richardson, giving the work of the heart in mileage. Presuming that the blood was thrown out of the heart at each pulsation in the proportion of sixty-nine strokes per minute, and at the assumed force of nine feet, the mileage of the blood through the body might be taken at 207 yards per minute, 7 miles per hour, 168 miles per day, 61,320 miles per year, or 5,150,880 miles in a lifetime of eighty-four years. The number of beats of the heart in the same long life would reach the grand total of 2,839,776,000.—The Medical World.

GOOD AND BAD NEWS.—Bad news weakens the action of the heart, oppresses the lungs, destroys the appetite, stops the digestion and partially suspends the functions of the system. An emotion of shame flushes the face; fear blanches; joy illuminates it, and an instant thrill electrifies a million of nerves. Surprise spurs the pulse into a gallop. Delirium infuses great energy. Volition commands, and hundreds of muscles spring to excite. Powerful emotions often kill the body at a stroke. Chilo, Liagoras and Sophocles died of joy at the Grecian games. The news of defeat killed Philip V. One of the Popes died of an emotion of the ludicrous on seeing his pet monkey robed in pontificals, occupying the chair of state. The doorkeeper of Congress expired on hearing of the surrender of Cornwallis. Eminent public speakers have often died in the midst of an impassioned burst of eloquence, or when the deep emotion that produced it had subsided. Lagrave, the young Parisian, died when he heard that the musical prize for which he had competed and struggled was adjudged to another.—Science.

WHAT IS STEAM?—When water once begins to boil, it is impossible to raise its temperature any higher; all access of heat is absorbed by the escaping, as so called, latent heat, and is given out again when it condenses. We often speak of seeing the steam escaping from the mouth of a kettle, but this is incorrect—steam is an invisible vapor, and we can no more see it than we can air. What we do see are the minute drops of water into which the steam condenses on coming into the cool air. If we boil water in a glass flask, we shall notice that nothing can be seen in the interior, and by observing the steam escaping from a kettle, we shall notice that there is quite a distance between the end of the spout and the point where the cloud becomes visible. This cloud of steam is of exactly the same nature as the clouds which float in the sky, and which are formed by the condensation in cool upper regions of aqueous vapor in the air.—The Safety Valve.

Consumption, Wasting Diseases

And General Debility. Doctors disagree as to the relative value of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites: the one supplying strength and flesh, the other giving nerve power, and acting as a tonic to the digestive and entire system. But in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites the two are combined, and the effect is wonderful. Thousands who have derived no permanent benefit from other preparations have been cured by this. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable and is easily digested by those who cannot tolerate plain Cod Liver Oil.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The nomination of Mr. John Fitzpatrick to be marshal for the Eastern District of Louisiana was withdrawn, September 20, by the President for further examination. This action grew out of the charges made against Mr. Fitzpatrick since his name was sent into the Senate.

Judge Thurman addressed a delegation of colored Democrats in Columbus, O., on the twentieth instant. The record of the rival parties on the slavery question was compared, and an emphatic declaration was made of the equality of the races before the law.

Yellow fever is now in Jackson, Miss. The announcement of the fact by distinguished physicians of the place has created a panic. It was reported on September 22 that four-fifths of the white people had fled the city, and that stores and newspaper offices had closed and banks suspended.

Official information has been received in Washington by the government that the Emperor of China has rejected the recent treaty with the United States.

Fourteen deaths and 118 new cases of yellow fever were reported from Jacksonville, Fla., on September 22.

Decatur, Ala., on September 23, had two new cases, but no deaths from yellow fever. There are hardly 150 people left in the town; two-thirds of these are colored.

At a meeting of the socialistic labor party at the Labor Lyceum, in New York, September 28, it was decided to nominate candidates for national, state and municipal offices.

The Mexicans at Rio Grande City made an attack upon the United States troops at Ringgold Barracks, on September 24, in an endeavor to capture Sebree, the custom-house officer who shot and killed Editor Garza in Rio Grande City, Saturday afternoon. The Mexicans engaged are citizens of Texas. They made a demand that Sebree be turned over to them, but Col. Clendenning, commanding the United States troops, refused to do so, and warned the Mexicans to keep off the United States government reservation.

It is reported that the yellow fever is wearing itself out. There is a marked decrease at Jacksonville. No new deaths were reported from Jackson, Miss., and Decatur, Ala., on the twenty-fourth instant.

FOREIGN.

A riot occurred in the Dublin Barracks, September 20. A number of men belonging to the "Black Watch" regiment quarreled over politics in the "Canteen" with some of the men of the Fifth Dragoons. The two factions finally abandoned words for blows and a desperate struggle ensued, during which thirty men were wounded.

General Boulanger arrived at Tangier, Morocco, September 21. He paid a visit to the Pasha's palace. Subsequently he started for Gibraltar.

A dispatch from Cairo says that a force of 4,000 rebels is in the vicinity of Suakim. The governor has applied for additional troops.

The London Daily News says it hopes and firmly believes that there will be an ever-increasing distance between the followers of Mr. Chamberlain and the Gladstonians.

The publication of the late Emperor Frederick's diary is everywhere recognized as an event of the greatest national importance. Official and political circles, however, that are intimately versed on the innermost history of the construction of the empire have been astounded by the publication, while the whole German people are stirred to their very depths by revelations which show the real greatness of the deceased Emperor Frederick, his influence in creating the empire, and his noble aims for its future.

The Czar's unexpected appearance in Poland amid the troops concentrated toward the Galician frontier has caused excitement in Austrian circles. His presence, however, has not been accompanied by any movement of troops.

The Berlin police will institute an action against Herr Kinnert, the socialist member of the municipal council, who, at Thursday's meeting of that body, opposed the motion to place a bust of the Emperor in the municipal chamber.

In a speech, September 23, M. Goblet said that France ought not to forget the lessons of the war. A blind policy had led her to irreparable losses. Unless she desired a repetition of those disasters she must preserve her dearly won liberty and not give herself into the hands of a dictator. United people could again become great without recourse to arms.

Much alarm is felt in Havana on account of the numerous strikes that are occurring in various trades, the movement being a result of the cigar makers' strike. The authorities have resolved to take the severest measures to prevent a disturbance. Good order prevails at present.

One hundred and fifty square miles of land in the Burdwan district of Bengal, India, are flooded. The crops in Bombay and Decan are threatened by drought. The government is preparing to take measures of relief.

The triple alliance having made overtures to Spain, Premier Sagasta has informed the council that Spain must retain liberty of action.

The Swiss press is unanimous in protesting against the report that Switzerland is favorably disposed toward an alliance with France.

The Egyptian government has refused to grant permission to Italy to recruit Soudanese for the defense of Massowah.

The remains of Marshal Bazaine were interred, on September 24, in Madrid, Spain. The funeral was attended by the sons of the deceased and a few friends.

To turn gray hair to its natural color and beauty, use Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, the best and most reliable preparation that science has given us.

A STORY AND A LIFE.

BY BESSIE CHANDLER.

And the book. "Twas by a master written,
Ne'er was all extant among the sons of men;
Save he reached the end his hand was sudden
Fell from his lifeless fingers dropped the pen
Ne'er another hand took up the story,
Weaker hand in every way;
'Twas finished, shorn of half its glory—
Saddest book that I have read and viewed to-day.

Story of my life is wrenched and broken,
Snapped all asunder is its golden thread;
Death in silence for a sign or token;
Walk among the living, and am dead.

Come the end? I ask my self and tremble.
Reading the solemn "Yes" my soul may hear:
Is the finished? Will the rest resemble
That first part, that I have loved so dear?

Yet all at once there comes a thought of glory—
Brighter than sunshine from the noonday sun—
He is the author of my half-told story,
And he will finish what he has begun!

Mortal man has power to make or plan it;
All the lines written only in God's mind.
I will not trust him, knowing he began it,
And hope some day the ending I shall find?

He holds its twisted threads, its links unbroken,
In his strong hand, that can not die, nor bind;
I can wait until this word is spoken,
"It is finished, for me my half-lived tale.

Woman's Place in the Church.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

If there is any question at present agitating the minds of ecclesiastics, more vital to the welfare of the church than this, I know not what it is. Vital, not so much because woman's place has not been accorded her in the church, as because a recognition of woman's place in the church reaches out into all the forms of society peculiar to our American polity. Whatever peculiar environments may be placed about woman in the church must, at least, in so far, as the morale of the questions would guide, be placed about her in the State. If she may publicly relate her religious experience in the church, I see not what reason or consistency would keep her from relating her political experience on the forum.

The only objections to the exercise of woman's fullest privilege in the church is based on one or two allusions to this subject by the apostle. Here are the Scripture texts on which the moral aspects of the question are argued, viz: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak: but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." (I Corinthians xiv, 31, 35.) "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." (I Timothy ii, 12.)

It is very certain that these quotations are to be taken with qualifications, or without them. If without, then the church must explain, and in some way justify its disregard of this injunction through all the ages. If with qualifications, the qualifications must be such as to harmonize the Scriptures. It is positively certain that qualifications were intended, and such, too, as permitted the right kind of woman not only to "speak in the churches," but even to preach, "to teach" or "prophesy" in the churches. "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head." (I Corinthians xi, 5.) It is conceded by all that the word "prophesieth" is expressed in its full meaning by the term preacheth. There can be no question that speaking was necessary in order to prophesy. Hence, it is equally clear that the apostle did not intend to place all women under prohibitions as to speaking in the church. If he had so intended, he would not have given them instruction how to prophesy. Moreover, in this place he recognizes co-equality between man and woman. "Neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man." (I Corinthians xi, 11.) "For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman." (I Corinthians xi, 12.)

Now, since there are certain prohibitions placed upon woman touching the question of her place in the church, it is important to know the reason, especially in view of the fact that these prohibitions are not of a general character. I have examined carefully the "Comprehensive Commentary," together with such other authorities as have been accessible to me, and I fully believe that the reason for the prohibitions of woman's rights in the church (for if she had no such rights, she could not use the privilege, whether "covered" or "uncovered") is to be found in the fact of the coming in of women of doubtful character, or, what is worse, of no character at all. Women whose ambition lead them to excesses in word and in deed, were even more dangerous to the church in those days than they would be at present. Hence the apostle concludes his lecture about the women at Corinth with these exhortatory words: "Let everything be done decently and in order."

One of the most significant facts, however, in connection with this question of woman's prophesying, either with or without her head being covered, is, that "if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such customs, neither the churches of God." (I Corinthians xi, 16.) If in A. D. 1 a woman might "pray or prophesy," provided her head was covered, because that was the fashion (St. Paul nor the churches of God had any such custom), I fail to see any reason why she may not do so in A. D. 1888, with a hat or bonnet on her head, because such is the present fashion. The appearance of strong probability is added to the idea that feminine excesses lead to the prohibitions of woman preaching by the peculiar phraseology of the apostle. "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." (I Timothy ii, 12.) Now, if this passage be carefully examined, it will be found to have no allusion whatever to woman's place in the church, but, contrariwise, simply and solely, to her excesses in her domestic relations. Authority must be vested in the man or in the woman over every household, and since both man and God hold the man responsible for the preservation of the household, it is both philosophical and economical for authority to be vested in the man without the interference of the woman. Both can not be "head over all" to the family, and herein the woman becomes "a helpmeet" to the man, and not an usurper over him. It is both unwise and dangerous to array one part of God's Word against another part of it, or to trample any of its provisions under foot. Both of these things are done by him who insists on an unqualified application of I Corinthians xiv, 34, to the Christian women of the church of the present day.

That the church has never insisted on such application of this text has been clearly shown by its usage from the time Hannah More, or Hester Ann Rogers, or Mary Fletcher began their great work for God on to the time when the last blessed woman was sent out with the gospel to the heathen. The church has ever deemed it woman's privilege to speak and to pray "in the churches," and, until the question began to be pushed out in the political arena, nobody objected to it.

A very striking illustration of the overzealous disposition of some who clamor for "blessed woman's exalted position" in American civilization may be found in the following language of one of our sages of the quill, viz: "The glory of American civilization is the place it accords to woman. It has placed her where God originally placed her—at the very source of life and at the fountain-head of character. It has placed in her hands the highest and holiest interests of Church and State." Herein is another contradiction of the Bible: "It has placed her where God originally placed her at the very source of life."

Seeking to apologize for the stinted measure of woman's privileges, accorded by "American civilization," this editor forgets his Bible. "The man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man." So it seems that "American civilization," according to this editor, has placed woman just where God did not. "originally place her!" "Adam was first formed, then Eve." So God placed man, and not woman, "at the very source of life." But if he means that "American civilization" has placed woman "just where God originally placed her," by placing her in a state of motherhood, it may be suggested that even savage tribes have done the same. But we naturally inquire: What are "the highest and holiest interests of Church and State" which "American civilization" has placed in woman's hands?

The answer doubtless comes up from this sage of the quill: This "highest and holiest interest of Church and State is the training of our children according to the tinest feelings and divinest instincts of woman's heroism and devotion." But, hold! "do not even publicans and sinners the same?"

The truth of the matter is—and nothing more can be made out of it—"American civilization" has accorded to woman the right to be a wife, a mother, a nurse! Noble offices these!—but not nobler in "American civilization" than among heathens, only as these offices are more nobly filled, on account of the higher moral fitness of the wife, mother, or nurse. I am willing to admit that "American civilization" is beginning to "place woman just where God originally placed her," viz: as the equal of man, socially, ecclesiastically, and civilly. The recent action of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Presbyterian Church (Northern), creating the office of deaconess, is a pointer of better things to come.

A Chatty Letter.

MR. EDITOR: For the past two months your excellent paper has been a welcome visitor to our parsonage-home in Cape Girardeau. It ought now, I suppose, to go to Prof. W. D. Mooney, Collierka, Tenn., as our son's holiday is over, and he is again in Collierka Academy.

It was my privilege, last week, to look in upon the school, observe the methods of teaching, and take note of the workers, including the teachers and the large class of pupils—young men and girls; a large per cent. of the first-named coming from the South, as distinguished from Tennessee. So while my friend, "Gilderoy," and others are discussing the propriety and the necessity of a training-school for boys in local bounds, I would say that at Collierka is one of the best wells "of English undefiled," and delicious draughts from the older fountains can be had. The principals are Methodists and teachers devoted to the work. It is their vocation.

The library building is the best I have seen; the books wisely chosen, and just the sort that the young men need in preparing for public debates, which are a feature of the institution. Some of the students "are well up," too, in current literature, and have their opinions (on the merits) of the popular writers.

By the way, George Kennan's contributions to The Century on Siberia—the country and its political phases—have awakened much interest and provoked earnest thought on the problem of government. His last article, "Exile by Administrative Process," presents some novel features and is full of interest to the American politician and to the philanthropist. With the developments of the Immigration Investigating Committee, and the surplus population crowding into our country, out of much of which it will be impossible ever to make citizens, the question naturally arises, "What will he do with it?" Much of it already belongs to Rome; but a large pauper population is a direct tax upon Protestant Christianity. "Excess of injustice in political matters lead up to and foretell revolutions," as Mr. Kennan has shown; but the same result is inevitably reached by an excess of liberality—a liberality that looks rather to the peopling of the country than to the material with which the country is peopled.

After an absence of more than a score of years, I have journeyed again in the South—a land to me more dear than all the world beside. It is gratifying to note that how from the baptism of blood she has arisen like the fabled immortal maiden whose inner life nor fire, nor sword, nor persecution, nor death himself had power to kill. Like the trees that grew in that garden when the world was young, the life was within—the old life—making all that was fairest and best and loveliest in the new.

I was in Birmingham, walked her streets, rode on her dummies, and saw her great rolling mills and furnaces, and talked with the workers in iron. In the light of the furnace-fires they seemed great giants, tossing here and there balls of red-hot iron—unshapely masses—to be rolled and flattened and shaped for use. As I looked, my thoughts were enlarged as to the grace of utility, the immense labor by which results are reached; and, as Bro. Barbee would say, I had an "intelligent appreciation" of what the Wesleys so often sung—"Affliction's furnace," and the burning up the dross of base desire—"dross," the scum or extraneous matter of metals thrown off in melting. "How long," said I to a skilled workman, "will the man keep that iron in the fire?" "Why," he replied, "till it is as pure as the fire can make it." And he continued: "I don't know how it is, but we have to do so much really dirty work before the iron is fit for use." "What do you call what he is doing, shaking the iron about in the fire?" "We call it puddling. It is just like churning. You know when the butter begins to come, there is a little lump, and, as you continue to churn, other lumps gather around that until you gather it into one ball."

So I had another lesson and another illustration that I did not get from Swinton nor French; and I got from Mr. Houlden in his talk how that by puddling, purifying is going on; that we are chosen in the furnace of affliction; that the wicked are put away like dross. David knew all this; and I sometimes think he took a bit of comfort in the thought. I mean about the wicked—his enemies and God's enemies—being consumed.

Everything and everybody in Birmingham was astir; but I saw none of those sharp contrasts and miseries of active life that one somehow expects to see in a manufacturing city. It may be that Birmingham is too new; there may be a better reason. Of one thing I am sure: the negro sings in the South with more melody than anywhere I have been. He looks happier.

One night on the dummy there came a rumor of yellow fever in Memphis, and there was much talk among the passengers. I remarked to Sister J. A. Parker, a preacher's wife: "Bishop Galloway, who is familiar with the fever, and has probably had it, said to me once: 'I do not dread it more than a case of malignant typhoid fever.'" A gentleman sitting opposite said: "Madam, may I inquire if you know Bishop Galloway?" I replied, "I do." "Well," he rejoined, "I do, too. I taught him his Greek and Latin in Canton, Miss. He was a bright young man. I found no fault with him out this: he would not study theology; couldn't get him to write his sermons, and his lack of training here shows now. His style is too redundant, madam, too redundant." "I infer you are a Presbyterian," said I; and then our ways lay apart, and I saw him no more. I hesitated a little about giving this incident, with the criticism on the Bishop's preaching, so different from that of the cowboy of the West—"My! didn't he go it high; but kept the critters well in hand, and give you something to catch on every time!"

Just before I left Dr. John Mathews, of Centenary Church, came out to the Cape and lectured for our Parsonage Society. You, of the Crescent City, know Dr. Mathews. You have probably not known him so long as this scribe. And I doubt if Southern Methodism has in her ministry a more remarkable man. He lectured for us on superstition; humorous, wise, witty. I know those two words are close kin: but they are different. Some very wise men have no wit, and are too wise to laugh at a bit of philosophy if it is in the witty or even humorous style. They represent that class of Grecian wise men, of whom ——— was the head. The world was so wicked that his tears were forever flowing, and tradition tells that he died at last of bilious-ness or dyspepsia—about the same thing with a more lengthy and learned name. Well, I had been somewhat bilious, "or affected by malaria;" but the lecture cured me of that, though it did not satisfy me on the subject of dreams, about which I am superstitious; nor did it make our society rich. This was not the fault of the lecturer. You have heard of the old woman who had to taste bread afore she was willin' to resk her taste and her money, and then was mighty slow in buying.

MRS. SUE F. MOONEY.

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Missouri.

Mansfield Female College.

MR. EDITOR: The opening of this college was very encouraging—better than for years. The local patronage especially has been more united than formerly, and if it had not been for the panic occasioned by rigid quarantine regulations just at the opening, the foreign patronage would have been greatly increased. This, at present, is partly withheld until the excitement is abated. Still those within easy reach of the college are coming in every day, and the prospect is bright for a much larger boarding establishment than this institution has known for many years. There is one feature connected with the present cheerful outlook that is very encouraging. It is the fact that the friends of the college everywhere are more hopeful and are more disposed to picture a bright future, and believe that the college will spring at once into the prosperity it formerly enjoyed. This is attested by the encouraging letters that are coming to the president from all parts of the State. Many have already accepted the proposition looking toward reduction of expenses, and have joined the Band of One Hundred to patronize this institution, some this year and some next year. There are some who have already sent off to other institutions, who have written to state that they will patronize this institution next year. All this ought to gladden the hearts of the friends of this institution, and arouse them to redouble their efforts in its behalf. The health of Mansfield never was better, and pupils here are safe from the inroads of contagious disease. The fever excitement is abating, and soon the boarding department will be filled.

A fine meeting is in progress here, and many of the pupils of the institution are deeply interested in it. It is a good omen for the institution, that as soon as the pupils come here they are caught in a revival, and they commence their studies by first dedicating themselves to the service of the Lord. Methodists of Louisiana, this is the place for your daughters. Concentrate all your patronage here, and believe in this college, that it is going to be the grandest institution in the Southwest. Those who have not yet done so, let them send in their names to be enrolled among the one hundred patronizers from abroad.

Ease signifies weakness, or, at least, strength unused. Generally, he who does anything easily is doing less than his best. Not until we feel the burden of overcoming a difficulty can we know that we are doing as well as we might do. It were better to have it said that you write well than that you write easily; for though you may write comparatively well with comparative ease, it would be a greater achievement to write better with comparative difficulty.

(Sunday-School Times.)

One may measure his own growth by looking back upon his own record of his likes and dislikes, his thoughts and convictions, his moods and his acts. Have you an old scrap-book of your own making? Have you a once favorite volume which five, ten, twenty, forty years ago your pencil marked? How many passages that pleased you then please you now? How many statements that you disagreed with then do you agree with now? How many that you agreed to then do you agree to now? How many of those scraps that you thought worth pasting in a book seem puerile and as so much rubbish now? Few of us there are who have not some such record of our past selves; and there are few of us who are not half-ashamed of our own measure as thus disclosed. In the light of such revelations of one's past self to his present self, it would seem that one would have no room for over self-confidence, lest the future should pass like judgment upon the present when the present shall have become the past.

(The Examiner.)

"The man who, with a soft step, a downcast look, and a voice that is 'child-like and bland' (when they are not otherwise), comes to us with what he calls his 'humble advice,' is a safe man to be let alone and dismissed as soon as Christian courtesy will allow. Nine times in ten he is a man who has failed in everything he has undertaken, and so has plenty of time to advise other people. He is the special terror of pastors, whom he generally feels called upon to advise without either an invitation or a knowledge of the subject. Generally the less he knows the more he advises. He comes the oftenest, and is the most in earnest, upon the private and family affairs of the pastor, and, next to these, upon the manner in which he should discharge his pulpit and pastoral duties. He is one of the thorns in the pastor's flesh, one of the agencies by which the pastor is kept humble, or, it may be, in a mixed state, where he is not quite happy nor ever wholly miserable. It is well for the pastor to write the word 'patience' over against the name of this meddle some pair of shoes."

It is a true instinct when men are led to regard the beauty of the world that comes to them through the eye, and the moral light which shines from behind upon the soul, as coming from one center, and leading upward to the thought of one Being who is above both. In this way all visible beauty becomes a hint and a foreshadowing of something more than itself.—J. G. Sharp.

MILTON'S LAST POEM

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten with God's frown,
Afflicted, and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong,
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and bare, yet thus not wholly so,
Age, sorrow, come with me.

O holy light!
Whose beams are first seen when thou art most near;
When night comes on, how welcome is thy sight,
Thy rising most dear.

Thou sun of this great world
Both seeing and seen to others, and the light
Shines upon every land but this poor place,
And there is more than night.

On hooded hare
I recognize thy purpose clearly shining;
My vision thou hast dimmed that I might see
Myself—myself alone.

I have naught to fear.
This darkness is a shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred; here
Can come no evil thing.

CROSSING THE JORDAN.

Joshua iii, 5-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—When they passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee.—Isa. xliii, 2.

TIME.—B. C. 1451, in the early part of April.

PLACE.—The east bank of the Jordan, opposite Jericho.

CONNECTING LINKS.—Joshua's orders, preparatory to crossing the Jordan; the sending of the two spies to Jericho; the removal of the camp from Abel Shittim to the bank of the Jordan.

5. Joshua said. Sanctify yourselves—They are to wash their persons and their garments, and to abstain from everything that might indispose their minds to a serious and devout attention to the miracle about to be wrought in their behalf. The special manifestations of God's presence should be awaited by his people in a posture of deep humiliation, penitence and prayer, and by diligent efforts to "cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit." To morrow—The tenth of Nisan, the anniversary of the day on which forty years before the Israelites had "taken to them" "every man a lamb" as a paschal victim. The Lord will do wonders among you—They were not distinguished from the ordinary course of God's providence. We may observe that, while among the Canaanites all was terror and confusion, in the camp of Joshua all was confidence and faith.

6. Joshua spake unto the priests. Take up the ark—To wit, upon your shoulders; for so they were to carry it. And pass over before the people—That ark which before was as the heart is now as the head: it was to the midst of Israel words they camped in the desert; now, when the cloud is removed, it is in front of the army; that, as before they depended upon it for life, so now they should for direction. They took up the ark—As the crossing did not take place until the next day, this statement is made by way of anticipation.

7. This day will I begin to magnify thee—God had before put distinguished honor upon Joshua on several occasions; but it had not been in so public and solemn a manner; now he designs to magnify him as the successor of Moses in the government. He was to be the visible instrument of working a mighty miracle in the eyes of the nation; and from his circumstantially foretelling how the waters should be cut off, as soon as the feet of the priests should touch them (verse 13), it was demonstrated that the secret of the Lord was with him. As I was with Moses—As Moses was declared to be sent immediately from God with an extraordinary commission by the miracles which he worked, more especially that of dividing the Red Sea in two parts, so was Joshua both sent and accredited in a like manner.

8, 9. Command the priests—They were to lead the way and must receive their orders before-hand. When ye are come to the brink ... stand still in Jordan—They were first required to pause on the brink of the stream till the channel was laid dry; and then they seem to have advanced and taken their station in the midst of it, till all the people had passed over. As the entire bed of the river below the resting-point of the ark would become dry by the waters running off toward the Dead Sea, the congregation might pass over in that direction, having the ark on their right. Moses divided the waters of the Red Sea with his rod: Joshua was to do the same to the Jordan with the ark of the covenant, the appointed symbol and vehicle of the presence of the Almighty God since the conclusion of the covenant. Wherever the ordinary means of grace are at hand, God attaches the operations of his grace to them; for he is a God of order, who does not act in an arbitrary manner in the selection of his means.

10. Hereby ye shall know—It seems that the Israelites had no intimation how they were to cross the river till shortly before the event. The premonitory address of Joshua, taken in connection with the miracle as its result exactly as he had described it, would tend to increase and confirm their faith in the God of their fathers. That the living God—This title is applied to God to indicate that he is not dead, like the "dying vanities" of heathenism, but the source of all life. No local deity, no limited being, but master of all powers of nature—master of all tribes of men; able to open a path where a pious agreement denied; so that his and Israel's future would not depend on their own wisdom, strength or merits, but would depend entirely on the favor of God. Is among you—Is present with you to strengthen and help you, as the phrase signifies. Will without doubt drive out ... Canaanites—O. Josh. decedes, dwelling in the valley of the Jordan, in Edraelon, and on the sea coast. Hittites—Descended from Heth, the second son of Canaan, and settled in the time of Abraham in, and round Hebron, then called Kirjah-Arba. Hivites—Ewald explains it as midlanders, and supposed links "they loved peaceful occupations and trading pursuits in well-ordered communities and fortified cities, and located themselves principally in districts the most suitable for peaceful civil life, and such as have from the earliest times possessed the most flourishing inland cities. Perizzites—The rustics, or agriculturists, dwelling partly in the south, and partly on the slopes of Carmel. Girgashites—Eusebius affirms that they dwelt east of the Jordan, and many writers incline to locate them east of Lake Gennesaret. For here, according to Matthew viii, 18, lay "the country of the Gergesenes," identical with the name of this tribe, as given in the Septuagint and Vulgate Version. Amorites—The mountaineers, descendants of Canaan, and the most powerful of all the tribes specified; their home was in the district between Hebron and the Dead Sea, but they also occupied the country from the Arnon to the Jabbok. Jebusites—Uniformly placed last in the formula, by which the promised land is often designated. They were a mountain tribe, and occupied the strong fortress of Jebus (Jerusalem).

11-13. The ark ... of the Lord of all the earth—The description of Jehovah as "Lord of the whole earth," which is repeated in verse 13, is very appropriately chosen for the purpose of strengthening confidence in the omnipotence of the Lord. The expression, "passeth over before you into Jordan," is more precisely explained in the course of the narrative. Take you ... out of every tribe a man—Emphasis is put on now. The selection of these twelve men is to take place immediately, not after they cross the Jordan. The purpose for which they are selected is shown in chapter iv, 4, 5, where it will be seen that a visible memorial of this miracle is provided for before it takes place. The waters ... shall be cut off from the waters that come down from above—So as to disappear; namely, at the place where the priests stand with the ark of the covenant. This took place through the waters standing still as a heap, or being heaped up, at some distance above the standing-place. They shall stand upon a heap—Being, as it were congealed, as the Red Sea was (Exodus xv, 8), and so kept from overflowing all the country.

14, 15. When the people removed from their tents—The word used for "removed" in this chapter signifies originally to pull up stakes or tent-pins, and has reference, therefore, to the removal of a people who dwelt in tents. The priests bearing the ark—There was a space between the ark and the people of about three-quarters of a mile, so that all could see the sacred symbol of the divine presence. For Jordan overfloweth all his banks—The original words may be more properly rendered, "fills all its banks;" its channel, snow-fed from Lebanon, is at its greatest height—brimful; a translation which gives the only true description of the state of Jordan in harvest as observed by modern travelers. The river about Jericho is, in ordinary appearance, about fifty or sixty yards in breadth. But as seen in harvest it is twice as broad. All the time of harvest—The barley harvest is here meant, for the wheat harvest was not fully completed till Pentecost, or fifty days later in the year, and the Israelites crossed the Jordan on the tenth day of Abib or Nisan—that is, four days before the passover. We may suppose that this season was chosen expressly, in order that God might have the better opportunity to convince his people of his almighty power; that they were under his immediate care and protection; and that they might never cease to confide in him in view of the most appalling dangers.

16. The waters ... from above stood—So deep is the depression through which the Jordan flows from the Lake of Galilee to the probable site of this miracle, that the arrest and upheaving of its waters for many hours would not cause extensive overflooding of the adjacent country. Very far from the city of Adam—Situated, it is thought, where now we find the ford Damieh, with remains of a bridge of the Roman period. Beside Zaretan—The situation of which is unknown, but it is thought to have been near Succoth, at the mouth of the Jabbok. By some it has been identified with the modern Sartabeh, an isolated hill some seventeen miles above Jericho, where high rocks compress the Jordan valley within its narrowest limits, and seem almost to throw a barrier across it. Those that came down toward the sea of the plain—Known now, though never in the Scriptures, as the Dead Sea, into which the Jordan flows. It is called the Salt Sea on account of the intense saltness of its water, which contains twenty-six per cent. of saline properties, so that the human body floats upon it like a cork. It is forty-six miles long and ten broad. The Jordan and several minor streams flow into it, but it has no visible outlet, the evaporation from its surface, ever sultry, carrying off its waters. People passed over—The water being cut off from above, the whole channel down to the Dead Sea was turned into a dry bed. It was not a narrow, but a broad passage, therefore, and the people could pass over quickly. Right against Jericho—It is probable that the people crossed the river at what was afterward called Bethabara, or house of passage, which seems to have derived its name from this very circumstance. It was here that John baptized, and that Jesus, as well as Joshua, began to be magnified.

17. Priests ... stood firm—Stood fixedly and immovably in the same place and posture, neither pressed upon by the waters, nor sinking in the mire, nor shifting their position. It is probable, too, that they continued bearing the ark on their shoulders during the whole time of their standing. On dry ground—Not hard and dusty ground, but dry only in the sense of being drained of water. Until all ... were passed clean over Jordan—This could easily have been accomplished in half a day. If the people formed a procession of a mile or upward in breadth. The typical significance of the narrative is very impressive. Whether we consider (1) the solemn inauguration of Joshua to his office; or (2) his attestation by the waters of the Jordan; or (3) the choice of twelve men, one from each tribe, to be the bearers of the twelve stones, and the builders of the monument founded therewith, we see types of the other "Joshua," who was solemnly inaugurated and divinely attested by the rushing waters of the same stream, and who ordained his twelve apostles to be the pillars of his church, and the builders of the spiritual temple. The Jordan is now passed, and Canaan is attained! Their departure from Egypt and their arrival in Canaan are signalized by parallel miracles of sea and river. Both at their exit and at their entrance Jehovah leads them through a watery gate, by cleaving the waves asunder.

Prohibition in Mississippi.

Just at this juncture I deem it proper for me, as chairman of the Mississippi State Prohibition Executive Committee, to say a few words to the public concerning the status of the prohibition cause in our State.

The line of battle has changed somewhat within the last few months. The enemy has taken possession of some of our territory, and we in turn have captured some of his strongholds. Local option elections have been held in eight counties—Yazoo, Lauderdale, Lee, Choctaw, Prentiss, Pike, Union and Carroll. Three of these—Prentiss, Lee and Lauderdale—voted for the sale. The other five voted against the sale, and one of these, Pike, has heretofore belonged to the enemy. So, then, so far as extent of territory is concerned, there is little change. It is apparent to every attentive observer that our cause is constantly growing in favor with our best citizenship. The victories achieved by the enemy have been won by methods so unscrupulous as to excite loathing and disgust on the part of many who have not been accustomed to train in prohibition ranks. Infamous falsehoods have been circulated among ignorant colored people. They have been told that the prohibitionists are trying to put them back into slavery—and much more of the same sort. Artful appeals have been made to their race prejudice. By such methods the ignorant masses of the colored people have been wielded almost solidly against our cause. Now, it should be a cause of congratulation with us that the enemy had to resort to such methods to win. To us defeat should be far more welcome than victory won by such methods. Thus, through the medium of these local option contests, the people are beginning to realize, as they never did before, the inherent vileness of the liquor traffic. All this means victory for the right in the end. We think it is perfectly safe to say that, at least, two-thirds of the white people of the State, and a majority of the intelligent property-holding colored people, are opposed to the liquor traffic. In a State like ours we firmly believe that intelligence will rule in the end.

A few more words are necessary concerning the methods of prohibitionists. There are prohibitionists and prohibitionists. Some of our number have seen fit to carry the question into national politics by putting out an electoral ticket representing Fisk and Brooks. This is an innovation upon our time-honored methods, and upon all our previous declarations of principles. Our last State Convention reaffirmed our former position of non-partisanism. I believe that that convention voiced the sentiment of a large majority of the prohibitionists of the State. Our people have heretofore preferred, and still prefer, to carry on their warfare against the saloon power outside the entanglements of partisan politics. Believing this, the State Prohibition Executive Committee will, under my administration, continue the non-partisan policy of my distinguished predecessor, Bishop Galloway. The Mississippi Prohibition Bureau will pursue the same policy. Friends of the cause may rest assured that not a dollar that finds its way into the Bureau treasury will be used for third-party work.

Just here I wish to utter a word of caution. Let there be no bitterness among ourselves. Although our third-party friends differ with us as to methods, they are as true prohibitionists as ourselves, and as thoroughly conscientious in what they are doing. We may still rely on them to help us in our local option contest, and to aid the temperance cause in any way in their power. Let us seek to be on good terms with all parties—Republicans, Democrats and third partyites.

Practically, this third-party campaign will amount to nothing in Mississippi. A few hundred or, perhaps, a thousand or two votes cast for Fisk and Brooks will be only a sort of political amusement, like the candidacy of Belva Lockwood. Meantime, let us not allow the wrong-headedness of these third-party brethren to diminish our zeal in the good cause. Let us take the wind out of the sails of third partyism by working with increased vigor along all non-partisan lines.

If our friends will rally to the support of the Prohibition Bureau, grand results can be achieved within a year or two. We need and ought to have, at least, a thousand annual memberships.

The College Question.

MR. EDITOR: Many of your correspondents have given expression on the important subject of Christian education, and especially the importance of locating and building a college for the education of the boys of our own North Mississippi Conference. I have seen nothing upon this subject which indicates a difference of opinion as to its importance. Most of your correspondents, so far as seen by this scribe, are evidently in sympathy with the plan of locating and building within our own bounds. All are not of the opinion that this is the best course to pursue if we meet successfully the demands that are upon us as a church.

We have institutions of learning of the highest order, manned and run by the State, in which many captivating inducements are held out to the boys who will and can avail themselves of a collegiate course. In the items that are considered in making up the mind to send to or patronize a college, the cost is by no means overlooked; nor is the number of the faculty, together with the age and standing of the institution, matters of small importance. We are forced to meet State competition.

The question is, Can we most successfully do this by dividing our strength or by concentrating our money and patronage upon those institutions that now have a hopeful existence? The doctrine, that "if we will build for ourselves, we will succeed," is hardly warranted by the facts and history of the past.

Let us make the Southern University, of Greensboro, Ala., and Centenary, of Jackson, La., stand forth as monuments of success, and of the wisdom of the church in projecting them; filling their halls with our boys, giving them such strength and prestige among the institutions of learning that they may be able to successfully compete with any institution of learning in the land. What we need, in order to be able to do our part in educating the boys of our country, is strength, concentration.

Until we can point with pardonable pride to those church schools we now have, in vindication of the wisdom of the church, we can hardly afford to go before our people with the plea for more brick in the shape of another college building. Let us be careful to maintain that which we now have, and not, by our haste and anxiety on this important subject, force the untimely existence of another sickly institution, which must prove damaging to the educational interest of the country, as represented by us as a church.

From the Work.

ROBELINE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I am sure you and many of your readers will be pleased to hear of what has taken place among us recently, and of what the good Lord has wrought among this people. In the first place, I will state that Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Baton Rouge, national organizer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was with us on August 7 and 8, and delivered two lectures on reform in general and prohibition of the liquor traffic in particular, which were well received by her large audience and heartily endorsed by our most substantial citizens. What seemed especially to impress her audience were her stubborn facts presented in an earnest and unaffected manner. Her style and delivery disarmed many who were present to criticise. I do hope that all of our noble sisters who are engaged with her in this glorious work will imitate her in this respect, and thus allay much of the opposition to be met with in some localities. As the result of her lectures, a local Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in Robeline, with the following officers: Mrs. James H. Hill (Catholic), president; Mrs. W. C. Cox (Baptist), vice-president; Mrs. R. W. Freeman (Methodist), vice-president; Mrs. R. S. Isbell, recording secretary; Mrs. John Dunckelmun, corresponding secretary; Mrs. James H. Caldwell, treasurer. Since the organization, several have joined, and I hope much good will be accomplished. Mr. and Mrs. Goodale passed through our town on September 14, during my absence from home engaged in a protracted meeting, at which time Bro. Goodale delivered a lecture highly eulogized by all who heard it. Of this and other matters connected therewith I will write more at another time.

On August 18 I commenced a protracted meeting in Provencal, and continued it for ten days with the most gratifying results. Bro. Cassity was with me Saturday and Sunday, as it was the time of my third quarterly meeting, and preached with much earnestness and success. The good Lord was with us from the beginning, and, as the meeting continued, the congregations and interest increased until the whole town and community were brought under the saving influence of the gospel. Provencal was never before so moved, religiously, and the good Lord manifested his presence not only in the house of worship, but at the family altar, and shouts were heard here and there to the praise of God long after the services at the church were closed. Many were converted and began to pray in public, thus testifying to the glorious work of grace wrought within. Towards the close of the meeting I was assisted by a brother minister (Baptist), who worked very efficiently in the spirit of the Master. He was on a short visit to his brother in Provencal, and thought it his duty to be always ready to work for his Lord. As the apparent result of this meeting, there were twenty-one accessions to the Methodist Church, and as many conversions. Our Baptist brethren were thus encouraged to organize a church with fourteen members, by letter and on profession of faith. There are others to be received at my next appointment. To God be all the praise.

I do bless the Lord for his inexpressible goodness to us at Provencal; but a still greater blessing was in store for us—blessed be his holy name! My heart is filled with gratitude as I pen these lines. Perhaps, the most wonderful display of divine power and goodness I ever witnessed I will now relate: On Friday, September 7, I commenced a protracted meeting in Marthaville, which continued ten days. Many of my brethren had been praying with me for the success of this meeting, especially as we expected to meet with much opposition, and that, too, on the part of professed followers of our Lord Jesus Christ. We went up to the house of the Lord in a praying and working spirit. The conditions for a blessing were met by us, and the good Lord fulfilled every promise, and we left, feeling that God was verily with us. There were two services each day, a glorious victory every time of prayer, and conversions at nearly every service. The shouts of praise increased from day to day, and prayer ascended for the conversion of those who were still unsaved. I never witnessed a more signal display of God's saving power at any time or place. Entire families were converted and brought into the church, and joy filled every heart. Our last meeting, on Sunday night, will never be forgotten by anyone present. The large church was filled to overflowing, the Holy Spirit descended, and the brethren seemed as if filled with new wine. Some laughed, some shouted, some clapped their hands in ecstasy of joy; and the whole scene reminded us of what took place on the day of Pentecost, as we learn it from the Acts of the Apostles. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will towards men." Many testify that they never saw such marvelous display of God's power and willingness to save. As the visible result, there were fifty-three accessions and as many conversions. About twenty-five heads of families pledged themselves to erect the family altar. At this writing I can think of only three or four in all the town of Marthaville unsaved, and two of these are saloon keepers, who promise to go out of the business. Bro. H. J. Batty was with me from the beginning to the close of my meeting, preached and worked faithfully all the time, and God abundantly blessed his labors.

And here permit a word of exhortation. When a preacher goes to help a brother in a meeting, he ought to remain until the meeting closes, for the best interest of all concerned. Another reason for my glorious success, under the blessing of God, was that I had the hearty co-operation, sympathy and prayers of my membership. When the conditions are met, God will always bless us. I closed my meeting with a good collection in cash and subscription, and a promise from some to take the ADVOCATE. Will take the field again as soon as I rest up a little. God be all the praise. Amen.

EAST FELICIANA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a series of meetings embracing four weeks: one at Cedar Grove Church, commencing on Saturday before the fifth Sunday in July, and closed on the following Wednesday. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Result: Nineteen conversions, twelve accessions, the church greatly revived, and the whole community moved.

We commenced the next meeting on Saturday before the first Sunday in August, and closed on the following Thursday. The Lord manifested his presence there, and men were heard to pray in public that were never heard before, and shouts of hosannas were heard among the brethren. Nine were added to the church, and the church was greatly revived.

We commenced the third meeting at Gilead on Saturday before the second Sunday in August. It began good, and grew better. There were about thirty conversions and twenty accessions to the church. God came down in his heart-cleansing power and cast the idols out of his temple, and our hearts were made to feel glad.

We commenced our fourth meeting at Olive Branch on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August, and closed on the following Wednesday. Result: Thirty conversions and twenty accessions to the church. Our East Feliciana has the sails of prayer stretched, and we hope she will ride triumphantly over the breakers of life, and make her happy entrance into the ports with all of her children. Glory be to God for the victory! Salvation is rolling on!

NATIONAL EXPENSES.—The growth and power of the United States are brought out very strikingly in a little volume of sixty pages just issued by the Treasury Department, entitled "Receipts and Disbursements of the United States for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30th, 1887." Over a million dollars a day, including Sundays—that is what the statement of receipts shows. The total gross receipts for the year were $371,403,277. That is several millions more than the year before, and, in fact, is more than any year except war times. The customs service paid $218,000,000 of it, internal revenue $118,000,000, public lands $10,000,000, miscellaneous $25,000,000. As to the other side, the grand total of expenses is set down at $267,000,000. That leaves a net profit for the year's business of over $100,000,000. Of the disbursements $45,000,000 were for salaries, $68,000,000 for ordinary expenses, $14,000,000 for public works, and $137,000,000 for unusual and extraordinary expenses, meaning pensions, war claims, headstones for soldiers' graves, maintenance of soldiers' homes, etc. There are some curious points among the incidentals of the expenses. It shows, for instance, the salaries of the much groaned about navy to be less than a quarter of a million a year, while those of the War Department are four times as much, and those of the Treasury officials ten times as much as the navy salaries. The salaries and mileage of Congress are estimated at over $2,000,000 a year.

Blessed is the man who never sets his foot in any path of conduct without looking carefully for the way-marks of his Master, and consulting his guide-book. In heaven it will be the joy and glory of such a one to "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." There the "Lamb who is in the midst of the throne shall feed him, and lead him unto living fountains of water."—Morning Star.

Handling the Word of God Humorously.

BY REV. GEORGE T. PACKARD.

There may be doubt about the "prosperity" of a jest under ordinary conditions, but a joke about a Bible verse or character is sure to raise a laugh. The poorest joker, the dullest laborer in the field of fun, can count on success if he take the Word of God for his material. Generations of irreverence have covered the ground quite thoroughly, but there is left enough text and personality for generations to come to handle humorously. The future as well as the past is secure, if irreverence of this sort is to continue.

Judgment in this matter must begin at the house of God. Amateur and professional scoffers have their account to render for ridicule and sneers; but I wish to deal now with the unconscious and undesigned irreverence alike of persons set apart to preach and teach; and of persons who have set themselves apart to hear, not forgetting the average theological seminary student. The "funny column" of religious newspapers, likewise, must not be slighted.

The traditional jest naturally comes first in the series. A person often merely hands down to his children an amusing story of misused or abused Scripture, which he, in turn, heard his grandfather tell with glee. Certain passages of the Bible have a humorous "annex," built generations ago; and the noble outlines and fair colors of the text-structure which the Holy Ghost planned are sometimes overshadowed by the building of which humor was the architect. Mistaken emphasis, grotesque combinations of verses, fanciful interpretations, comparisons which impair rather that compare—these and many other helps to absurd associations are reported and transferred by father to son. There is an invincible life-spirit in these traditions which imperil the proper reception of the Word of God. Much that our grandfathers did is our joy and pride, but their bequest of Bible jokes is a costly inheritance.

We contribute fresh material for fun at the expense of the Bible, furthermore, by repeating the laughable and often extraordinary comments of young children on Bible stories. The child's strange views about the sacrament, for example, are frequently quoted with the inevitable result of causing listeners to associate what is diverting with these inestimable treasures. Even more harmful and offensive is the perpetuation of childish sayings about the person and work of God. The praise which is perfected "out of the mouth of babes and sucklings" God delights in; but it nowhere appears that childish humor about his being and doing is looked upon by the Almighty as a religious vehicle.

It is not necessary to mention the various ways in which disciples of Christ help their adversaries by this heedless indulgence in a humorous use of the Scriptures. What offender can not easily catalogue the variations on the fundamental and irreverent note? One argument used by opposers of an unrestrained liberty of handling the Scriptures would have less weight if men and women who profess to love the Word of God set the example of frowning upon the joking habit, whose victim goes to the Bible hopefully and constantly, as Bible people went to Jacob's well.

A minister recently preached in one of our cities a "Let go" series of sermons, which included, it is said, an admonition to "let go" of your neighbor's umbrella. A "Let go" organization formed to stop jests on and about the Bible would have its hands full, and ought to date from this month. If all joined it who need to reform in this regard, what expert could easily take the census of the membership? What an impressive company of ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and other Bible students, might swell the array!

It is much to have an unchained Bible; it would be more to have a Bible handled with a reverence which believes that God gave his Word, not that its text might make men laugh, but to move men to live as his sons.—Sunday-School Times.

The World's Prince.

It does seem hard that in order to be a disciple of Christ a man must first profess faith in the devil; yet the matter is worth looking into.

No attentive reader of the New Testament but must have been often struck with the mention of Satan by the Lord and his apostles. And it is to be remembered Satan is a revelation, and for a purpose: to put us on our guard so as to trust in Christ, and as well to show us what we will become if we continue in sin—like Satan, loving evil because it is evil and hating good because it is good.

"He that committeth sin," said Christ, "is of the devil." "The enemy that sows the tares is the devil." "It is the devil that taketh away the word sown in the heart." He is called by Christ "the prince of this world." He works in the children of disobedience; evil men are in the snare of the devil; we wrestle not with flesh and blood merely, but with principalities and powers and evil spirits.

Such are a few of the teachings of Scripture, which Christian folk should believe for their good, but which the world does not believe, but rather ridicules him, sports with him and paints him with horns and hoofs. Christ ridiculed him not, nor his apostles. He is a mighty being, whose name is not even told us, for "Satan" and "Devil" are not proper names, but mean: the one, "adversary;" the other, "accuser." He, heavy with the knowledge of centuries, knowing every avenue into the human heart, of mighty power. Attempts us to evil; whose power we can not resist unless aided by Almighty God.

When the unclean spirit goeth out of the man, said Christ, he goeth about seeking rest; restless, ever restless, until he return to the man from whom he had been driven; the tempter, the mighty tempter, who can not be resisted by human power; can only be resisted through divine power.

Inspiration comes from the invisible world: there is the inspiration of the Holy Ghost and there is the inspiration of the evil ghost; the unseen companions of the soul, they are the influential ones. And as every faithful performance of duty and prayer opens our hearts to the Holy Spirit, so every sin and persistence in sin opens it to the evil spirit.

The fearful sins that are going on around us are not the results of our bad nature only; the terrific crimes we read every day in the papers are not merely man's depravity; but man by sin opens his heart to the devil, who then takes possession of him, and the results are, the fearful crimes that made heathen Rome what she was in the days of her decline and fall. We may be dragged into the immoralities, or we may be dragged into the trivialities, by opening our hearts through sin to the devil. Prayer and constant prayer, keeping away from temptation and from yielding to sin, and we shall overcome the devil; but only through Christ.—Southern Churchman.

Useful by Proxy.

In every age the pulpit has contained some men who have achieved brilliant usefulness by proxy. This was signally illustrated in the ministry of John Foster, the illustrious thinker, and not illustrious preacher, of Bristol. Late in life he lamented that he did not know one man, one woman, one child, who had been visibly led to a Christian life by the elaborate persuasions of his pulpit. Apparently he was not created for the pulpit. Had his stock of self-knowledge been more abundant, or more discriminate, he would never have entered it. He had neither the temperament, nor the beliefs, nor the ideals of a suasive preacher. His temperament was atrabilious; his ideal of Christian living was ascetic; his theology was fatalistic; his delivery was statuesque, and his person not magnetic. His congregation dwindled patiently to a fraction. His ministry was conspicuously an industrious and conscientious failure. He was one of the few sons of clergymen who misjudge and misuse themselves in choosing the profession of their fathers. I am unable to recall another really great and good man who has closed a life of ministerial service with such a discouragement as wail of disappointment. Yet John Foster was by no means God-forsaken. He was well known as one of the most suggestive thinkers of the country. His writings, though not voluminous, are a treasure of germinal ideas, which have been more prolific in their reproductive fertility in other minds than in his own. His power of microscopic thinking was unrivaled. The ministry of nearly two generations have been indebted to him for materials of more stimulant thinking than the majority of them could originate, yet which they have adapted to popular assimilation more deftly than he could. The secluded thinker of Bristol, who could not hold his own congregation, has preached in metropolitan pulpits to charmed audiences through the lips of men of the magnetic order and of suasive faculty. Like Aaron the Levite, they "could speak well," but it was John Foster who roused and fructified their thinking power.—Austin Phelps.

Dumb Love.

This kind of love is not confined to individual members of society. It pervades the churches. It works unspeakable mischief. It discourages the pastor when he beholds so many professors of religion sitting speechless when the praises of the Lord are sung. The very One whom they ought to magnify by speech as well as by life is left by them unpraised and unhonored in the great congregation. So also is the pastor disheartened when those of whose love to the Lord he has good evidence, decline to make a profession of religion, to join the company of those who are banded together as a church and to take a seat with them at the table of the Lord. So also is the pastor often depressed when the members of the church to whom he ministers, and who probably love him, refrain from making known to him how he has benefited their souls, comforted their hearts, guided their steps in the way of peace and been to them as a very messenger from God. And if this dumb love has such a saddening effect upon the heart of man, how grieving must it be to the heart of Infinite Love. If there is love in the heart, whether to a human being or to God, it should be expressed by the lips. No other manifestation of love can supersede this. The poet may write,

"Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spake again," but the human heart requires more than this—it requires human speech, and the Savior himself requires it, for he said, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?"—and the soul that loves its Savior aright will burst forth in the words:

"Oh, could I speak the matchless worth,
Oh, could I sound the glories forth
Which in my Savior shine."
—The Treasury.

FRANKNESS AND HARSHNESS.—How often a bitter speech, which has caused keen pain to the hearer, has been followed by such words as these, as if in justification of the unkindness shown: "I'm a plain, blunt person, and have to speak out just what I think. People must take me as the Lord made me." Anything meaner than such an attempt to throw the responsibility for one's ugliness of temper off upon the Lord, it would be hard to imagine. Frankness of speech is one thing, but harshness is a very different thing. The Lord never endowed any man with such a disposition, or put him in such circumstances that he was obliged to make stinging, cruel remarks. Some people have more difficulty than others in being sweet-tempered and kindly spoken; but when one fails it is his own fault.—The Work at Home.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age. Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. REVIS FORD.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, Coundy Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.
W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:
This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.
I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Briefs.

There are not a few Christians who, if they would take their fingers off their own spiritual pulse and lay both hands to gospel work, would realize the most delightful sensation they have had since the day of conversion. To be continually feeling for feeling is a poor exhibition of true religion.

The forty-first session of the St. Louis Conference was held by Bishop Hendrix. Two preachers were received on trial and three into full connection. As far as we can gather, these are the statistics: Local preachers, 128; members, 18,564; adults baptized, 982; infants, 633; churches, 179—value, $530,495; parsonages, 38—value $42,366; expended on churches and parsonages, $26,188; collected for foreign missions, $3,333; domestic, $1,612; church extension, $1,575; number of Sunday-schools, 170; officers and teachers, 1,315; scholars, 11,045; collected for Conference claimants, $2,680.

It is a cheerless future upon which the infidel looks! Jesus a myth; religion a fable; heaven a fancy! Death is the only reality. That lets down the curtain upon all the future, and covers with the mantle of oblivion all the past. This little life bounds all existence. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Annihilation ends all. All the toil of life—all its pleasures, all its sorrows—have accomplished nothing. How gloomy the prospect!

The Christian's future—how bright! Hope bends its rainbow all over it. Joy shimmers through all its air. Love perfumes all its breezes. Peace sheds its balm everywhere. There is his inalienable inheritance—his patrimonial estate. There are his friends, his companions, his Savior, his Father. Rewards, rich and glorious, for the toils and sorrows of life are there. Heaven and home are there; for heaven is home, and home is heaven. The great future is full of grand discoveries to be made, of delightful surprises to be met, of ineffable blessings to be enjoyed, of high possibilities to be realized. Death opens the gate to all this magnificence of glory. "Oh, death, where is thy sting?"

Very few people have any idea of the vast areas of government land held by alien landholders in the United States. The largest tract, 4,500,000 acres, is held by the Holland Company, of New Mexico. An English syndicate holds 3,000,000 acres in Texas; Sir Edward Reid and a syndicate in Florida hold 2,000,000 acres. 1,800,000 acres belong to an English syndicate in Mississippi: 1,700,000 to the Marquis of Tweeddale; 1,300,000 to the Phillips Marshall Company, of London, and 1,000,000 to a German syndicate. These comprise the larger landholders. There are, however, a score or more of persons and syndicates owning less than 500,000 acres. The grand total foots up to 20,747,000 acres of government land held by aliens in the United States.

Spelling.

It is marvelous how many persons there are, who, reading every day and writing very often, do not know how to spell a great number of very common words. We never knew how widespread was this deficiency until we came into the editor's chair. We get communications from all sorts of people—from college-bred men and women, and from those who never had other than "old-field school" advantages; and the defect in spelling is found in both classes. If we were to print some communications as they are written, we would call down upon our head the fiercest tempest of indignation. It seems that people who read much ought to learn how to spell by the eye. Books and newspapers—thanks to the proof-reader, with a dictionary at his side—generally have words spelled correctly; and a little practice of the eye in looking at the spelling ought to give correctness. Some excuse themselves on the ground of inattention. They know how, but they are so occupied with the thought that the spelling is a minor consideration. In answer to this, it is sufficient to say: A thought worth putting on paper is worthy of a becoming dress. Others say: "Spelling is a natural gift, and can not be acquired by everybody." A writer who has a dictionary can learn to spell any word in the English language. If a writer has no dictionary, let him buy one before he writes again. We are inclined to think that a good deal of incorrect spelling is the result of carelessness; and carelessness in anything is unpardonable.

These thoughts have come from the fact that we received the other day a communication from a writer who, for a large part of his life, has been a teacher, and who has been a constant contributor to the papers, and yet using the word "laity" quite a number of times, every time it was spelled wrong. If we had published it as written, the printer, proof-reader and editor would have been pronounced a "set of solemn blockheads." We are not complaining, but simply setting forth the very curious fact that many popular writers are deficient in orthography. Far be it from us to complain of the defects of others. We have too many of our own. Like Paul to the Corinthians, we can sincerely say: "I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons I warn you."

Pursuing Evil.

How strange it is that a reasonable being will deliberately choose to pursue that which, in its very nature, is evil, and can but bring evil to the pursuer! There are some persons who try to persuade themselves that their pursuit of sin is not the result of their own choice. And some have gone so far as to lay the blame upon the Lord. If such persons would look closely into their own hearts and actions, they would find that, though sin is degrading and shameful and ruinous, the heart loves it, and chooses it in preference to that which is elevating and honorable and blissful. The avidity which characterizes the pursuit of evil shows that it is a matter of choice. Men do not rush forward over all restraints to obtain things that are contrary to their wishes. In the pursuit of sin, no barriers are strong enough to lessen the ardor of the pursuer—no obstacles are sufficient to impede his progress. In some cases his earnestness amounts to an agony. He excels most often used in the number of sacrifices which he makes to attain the object of his pursuit. In most cases, too, this avidity grows. It enlarges by what it feeds upon. The law of its progress is from less to great—from great to greater. In the meantime, it has a hardening effect upon the soul, deadening every noble sensibility, stifling the voice of reason and rendering conscience "past feeling." The progress becomes more and more rapid as the end is approached, and then the fatal plunge into death. "He that pursueth evil, pursueth it to his own death."

A Word to the Well-to-Do.

We know that quite a number of our readers are "well-to-do in this world's goods." We know that some of these "well-to-do people" have no children of their own. To them we commend these words written by W. Lane, and published in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, of September 26:

There is positively no investment on earth that declares more dividends, here nor hereafter, than money invested in the education of worthy young women and young men, especially upon promising young men called to the ministry. The selfish and stingy say, "Let him educate himself." This he can not do within himself—hundreds have tried it and failed. Give the young man a fair chance—he will refund all invested in him. Ex-Governor Alex H. Stephens, of Georgia, helped to educate 122, and but a few proved failures. Educate that promising young man for the ministry, and he may save his thousands of souls, otherwise he would save only hundreds. The very class that cry out against higher education, clamor against colleges and universities would be the last to send for an illiterate physician, to employ an ignorant lawyer, to vote for an ignoramus to represent them in the Legislature or Congress.

Church members with money had better heed these calls and enter these opportunities before it shall be thundered in their ears: "Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that are come upon you. Your riches are corrupted. Your gold and silver is cankered. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." The cries of those you may now help are "entering into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

What Our Papers Are Saying.

The Alabama Advocate, last week, led off with a fine article on, "The Christian Household." It showed that the "homes" of our land and all lands are the direct result of Christianity. Here is a picture of beauty:

What we would paint to-day is the model Christian home. Given the necessary conditions of civilized life, and yet one home may be far better than another. When the family government is modeled strictly after the teachings of the New Testament, there only may we expect the best results of domestic life. In such a household there is to be found concord, peace and progressive development of mind and morals. At the basis of the system lies the great law of love. Conjugal and parental affection and confidence beget the corresponding traits of character in the children, the servants and the guests of the family. The self-denial and economy of the heads of that house inspire industry and frugality in its members. A mild and yet firm exhibition of authority on the part of those to whom it belongs by nature and by law gives obedience and respect to the lower branches.

The St. Louis Advocate has this pointed paragraph on, "Crankism." Let the reader pause and ponder long and well:

Crankism, if we may be allowed to make a word, prevails extensively among church members. This specialty, and that specialty, this society and that society claim or receives such attention that there is little time and, perhaps, less inclination to attend church service or perform church work, and yet the delusion is such, people actually persuade themselves they are doing God's service when they are merely carrying out their own whims. The great enemy of souls often comes as an angel of light, professing to be the holiest of all, and to teach the only true and safe way of salvation, thus deceiving many to the destruction of their souls; as in the case of a lady who, some time ago, on being asked if she prayed now as formerly, replied, "Oh, yes; I pray for other people." "Not for yourself?" "Oh, no; I am sanctified; have no need of prayer any more for myself." And there is little or no doubt but the poor, deluded creature actually thought and felt as she stated; and who but the opposer of all good, as an angel of light, could or would have wrought such a delusion? The apostle tells us of some on whom were sent strong delusions because they received not the truth in the love of it.

The Wesleyan, copying our note, on "Preparing to Preach," adds the following:

But how about those preachers who go into the ministry before they are prepared to prepare to preach. They have not been to school; they have an opportunity to go to college, but it will take them four years to get through and be well trained for study, and they rush into the ministry, saying to themselves: "God has called me to preach, and he will prepare me." Ought not men to prepare to prepare to preach?

We answer, "By all means." If they have "the opportunity" and do not use it, they do wrong to themselves and to the church. What if it does take four years to get through? If he makes the proper use of those four years, the good results will be felt through all the life and by thousands of people! Are four years too long to prepare the mind and heart for the exposition of God's revelations to men, and for the authoritative proclamations of the gospel of the grace of his blessed Son? Nay, verily. By all means, Doctor, "men ought to prepare to prepare to preach"!

The Holston Methodist, under the heading, "Keep Us Humble," discusses rejoicingly on the material and spiritual prosperity of our church. In the midst of its rejoicing, there is found this wise paragraph, by which we are bidden to "rejoice with trembling," and to "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God:"

But there is a growing danger that the rising tide of prosperity will sweep us from our moorings. We must sedulously guard against Constantinian honor and wealth, and Constantinian declension and death. The Southern Methodist Church is in more pressing need of humility to-day than at any former period of her organic history. Regarding material prosperity, we may declare that ours is a land flowing with milk and honey; and in the region of the spiritual the complement is so full that the same old-fashioned phrase is readily expressive of our happy fortune. Our membership is swelling by the thousands annually, churches—neat and comfortable—are dotting the land; collections are gaining in increasing ratio, and colleges are rapidly advancing in number and equipment. May the Lord keep us humble; may each department of our militant host, remembering Paul's figure of the body and its various "members," perform faithfully its own part, and thereby preserve its own honor and the interests of the united whole!

Yellow Fever.

The reports are that both the yellow fever and the yellow-fever scare are abating in all directions. There has not been a case reported in Jackson, Miss., for more than a week. In all, there have been fifteen cases and five deaths there. At Decatur, Ala., there have been a few cases and a few deaths reported. In Florida the number of cases is growing smaller each day. The larger number of cases in Jacksonville for more than a week have been among the colored people. There has been no case reported in our city. The cool weather of the past few days and the predictions of the weather prophets of an early frost have had a good effect upon the public mind. The quarantines are being raised in all directions, and trade and travel are beginning to assume their wonted activity. Some very absurd things, and, if we may believe reports, some very inhuman things have transpired in connection with the quarantine in some localities. We think the experiences of the past month demonstrate the necessity of some sort of legislation on this quarantine business. Up to date the number of cases in Jacksonville are 2,725: number of deaths, 264. Receipts of money, $236,867; expended, $74,478. No more money needed.

Letter from a Superannuate.

This has been to me a year of pain, weariness and humility; a year of weakness and strength. I have rejoiced in hope of future usefulness, and trembled on the brink of an abyss of despair. I have rejoiced as I have heard the shouts of victory as it echoed from the front, and longed to be in the thickest of the fight. What awaits me in the future God alone knows. To his tender care I commit myself.

Bro. Wright, our pastor here, has been abundant in labors, and God has owned and blessed his labors. I suppose his accessions will approximate fifty. Eternity alone will reveal the other results.

Judging from what I hear, Homer district is steadily advancing all along the line. Our district parsonage, I hear, is about complete, and is neat, roomy and comfortable. I believe we now have thirteen parsonages within the bounds of this district. Our people are alive on the subject of education, but indifferent as to the interest of our own institutions of learning. I suppose you are aware of the fact that our District Conference has projected a school of high grade, to be located at Gibsland, on the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific road, and that it opens the first Monday in October. It should be liberally sustained and largely patronized by the Methodists of North Louisiana.

Recently I had the good fortune to "swap" "Hagenbach's History of Doctrines" for "Summers' Systematic Theology." Well, sir: I can but chuckle over that trade, for how else could I have obtained the book? Now, if I could exchange something as prosy as Hagenbach for the "Life of Dr. McFerrin," would I not be in a streak of good fortune? Good books are my chief companions now.

Never in my life have I enjoyed the association of my ministerial brethren as now, and their visits are as angels' visits. Except Bros. Wright and Randle, to Bro. Parvin alone have I had the pleasure of extending hospitality during the year. God bless Parvin! We will never realize his worth until it will do him no good for us to realize it.

I leave you to imagine my enjoyment of the dear old ADVOCATE. I read and re-read everything, even to the children's letters. Aided by the imagination, in reading the editorials I have the real live editor before me—or, rather, I am brought before the editor—and he looks me square in the face through those luminous nose-glasses as he brings to light my defects, or forces home to consciousness some moral duty, or inspires me with new hopes, or greater zeal; and I arise from the perusal chastened, humbled or encouraged, as the case may be. May God bless you, my dear brother, and multiply the number of your readers!

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

ATHENS, La., Sept. 20, 1888.

The Rocky Mountain Methodist is on our table this week. It is a handsome eight-page paper, edited by Rev. Boone Kenton, and published at Pueblo, Col., by Rev. George Needham. It is published "in the interest of Methodism in the West," on the first and third Thursdays in each month. We welcome its appearance and pray for its success in its wide field. Price $1; preachers, 50 cents.

Notes.

The Civil Service Commission report shows that of the men who were examined 32 per cent. failed, of women who were examined only per cent. failed.

The experience of others may made of great value to us if we disposed to profit by it. There is observation made by Bro. John Pi in his "Life Work," which we disposed to commend especially our young ministers. It is this:

My experience is that a consecrat life to the itinerant ministry has ups and downs; yet, if I had anoth life to dispose of, I would give it the itinerant work of the Methodi ministry with more faith and less m giving.

An exchange publishes this lis and we republish it to show readers how much provision can bought in a year with the money th pays for only two drinks of whisky day during the year.

An enterprising firm in a certa Missouri town has the following a vertisement:

"Any man who drinks two d whisky per day for a year, and pa ten cents a drink for it, can have our store thirty sacks of flour, tw hundred and twenty pounds of gran lated sugar, and seventy-five pound of green coffee for the same money and get two dollars and fifty cen premium for making the change i his expenditures."

That two dollars and fifty cents wi pay for the best religious newspape in the land.

There is one thing we desire to em phasize. There are quite a number o our young ministers who are begin ning to handle the "pen of a read writer." We say to them that ther is nothing so charming to a reader as simple style. The majority of reader are after the thought, and they ar impatient of what is termed "a elaborate manner of expression." I showed the kindness of his heart, an was at the same time a severe criticism when Charles Lamb wrote to Cole ridge: "Cultivate simplicity, Cole ridge, or, rather, I should say, banish elaborateness; for simplicity spring spontaneous from the heart, and car ries into daylight its own modest buds and genuine, sweet and clear flower of expression. I allow no hot beds i the garden of Parnassus." The be model of the simple style is th English Bible.

We give from an exchange the late news in regard to the approachin comet:

Prof. Boss, of the Dudley Observatory, Albany, has completed the calculations of the orbit of the new comet discovered independently by Prof. Barnard, at the Lick Observatory, and Prof. Brooks, of the Smith Observatory, Geneva, on September 2. This comet has remained so nearly stationary in the sky since its discovery that the determination of its true orbit or path in space has been the work of great difficulty, and the result at present reached can be regarded as merely approximate. According to these, the comet is now about twice as far from the earth as the sun is, or about 190,000,000 miles, and is, at the same time, about 170,000,000 miles from the sun. The comet and the earth are moving toward each other at the rate of about 3,000,000 miles daily. About the middle of November the comet will be sixty times as bright as it was when discovered.

Though Christianity is making progress in this country, the awful fact stares Christians in the face, that the majority of the people have not accepted it. There can hardly be found in all this broad land a city, or town, or hamlet, or community, where "the majority of the people are Christians, even in name. How is it in your station, or on your circuit, brother? Is not the great mass of the people on the outside? Have you ever thought on the awfulness of this fact? Is it not enough to drive every preacher and every layman to redoubled effort and heroic sacrifice for the cause of Christ? The need of the hour is what has been termed, "a sanctified audacity" to attack by gospel weapons the seething masses of humanity outside of the churches.

Christianity, in every land to-day, is living and working under the shadow of the fact just mentioned. The darkness of the unconverted world throws its shadows over the whole church, and yet the people of Christ scarcely realize the terrible situation. Suppose every preacher could be brought fully to realize the meaning of this sentence. "The majority of the people in my work go to no place of worship?" Suppose every Christian layman should have it laid upon his heart by the Holy Ghost, "The majority of my neighbors know nothing of salvation?" Is it not enough to terrify us to grasp the meaning of such a statement? True, there are thousands of saved souls inside; but, alas! millions of unsaved souls outside, and all bought by the precious blood of Christ, and all to be saved, if saved at all, by the efforts of the church. Think of it, ye careless, indifferent, ease-loving Christians—millions of souls perishing within the sound of your voices! O, Lord, how long!

Personals.

Rev. B. Jones, of Longview, on the Gulf Coast, passed through our city last week en route to Chicago to visit his son. The venerable minister is in the best of health. His wife accompanied him.

Hubert Babington, of Franklinton, La., recently showed us an interesting relic now in his possession. It is an autograph letter of the celebrated Gideon Onsley, addressed to William Little, of Red Hill, Ireland. It bears date, "Dublin, July 19, 1805." The chirography is good, being easily read. On one side of the sheet is a printed hymn. The sight of this letter brought up interesting incidents in the life of the redoubtable Gideon, in which he proved himself a formidable foe against the enemies of Methodism.

It is said that President Cleveland has his business so systematically arranged that every letter is answered within twenty-four hours after it is received.

America is the only country of any pretensions in the world which has no zoological park. Senator Beck has introduced a bill for the establishment of a National Zoological Park at Washington. It is about the only way left to save a remnant of American animals.

Mrs. B. B. Rice, the mother of Mrs. Bishop W. W. Duncan, died Sunday, September 16. In less than a year four persons related to Bishop Duncan's family have died.

It is said that Dr. G. G. Smith will have his "Life and Times of Bishop Pierce" ready for sale by November 1.

We see it stated that Dr. Charles Taylor, of the Kentucky Conference, has been transferred to the North Alabama Conference.

The news now comes from St. Louis that a "School-Book Trust" has been formed for the purpose of keeping up the price of books and protecting publishers from School Boards.

Our former co-laborers, who are now in St. Louis, have received appointments for another year. All have been returned to their former charges: Dr. Hill, to Cook Avenue; Dr. Mathews, to Centenary, and Bro. Werlein, to Lafayette Park.

Major D. W. Whittle, the evangelist, has gone to Ireland to spend the autumn and winter in evangelistic work.

We have received an invitation from Bro. Walter Dunstan to attend the opening of a new church at Bentley's Saw Mill, on the Atchalakaya river, Sunday, October 7. The presiding elder, Rev. B. F. Alexander, is to preach the opening sermon. We congratulate our friends there on this success. We are sorry we can not accept the invitation.

A preacher was located at the recent session of the Missouri Conference on the ground of unacceptability, the ground of complaint being, "harshness in the administration of discipline."

Bro. Kirkland, of the Southern Christian Advocate, informs his readers that "editors have rights and sensibilities as well as contributors—a fact, by the way, that too many seem to forget."

Hon. W. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, gave us a call last Saturday. He and his wife have been on a lecturing tour through Northern and Western Louisiana since August 6. Large audiences greeted them in many places, and they are much encouraged with the results of their work. They lectured in the interest of non-partisan prohibition.

Fifty-two years ago to-day the Quarterly Conference of the Montgomery circuit, Tennessee Conference—Dr. A. L. P. Green, presiding elder—licensed J. B. Walker to preach the gospel. For forty-seven years Dr. Walker was not out of the pulpit one month. He is yet active in labors for the Master, and his bow still abides in strength. Dr. Walker is the author of several valuable changes that have been made in our book of discipline; among them the election of candidates for the ministry by ballot, and the nomination of the Sunday-school superintendent by the preacher in charge in the Quarterly Conference.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold its fifteenth annual meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, October 19–23.

The net gain in membership in our churches in St. Louis during the past year is 463. There are eight churches reporting this number.

A brother sent us a communication last week, and with it paper enough to write two editorials on. That brother has been an editor and knows "what's what." Thanks.

Rev. R. C. Calloway, of the Chapel Hill Charge, North Mississippi Conference, says: "I have just closed my round of protracted meetings on this work. We had 125 converts, as also a number of accessions to the church. Family altars erected and spiritual interests wonderfully revived."

Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood.

Two meetings were held at Vanderbilt University, September 21 and 22, 1888, for the organization of the proposed Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood. At these meetings were present Granville Goodloe, of the South Carolina Conference; R. W. Erwin, of the Memphis Conference; W. R. Sims, of the Mississippi Conference; E. K. Denton and J. T. Currey of the Tennessee Conference; Marvin West, of the North Alabama Conference; E. W. Winfield of the Little Rock Conference, and John J. Tigert, of the Louisville Conference. These brethren are not all ministers, and it is expected that a large portion of the membership of the Brotherhood will be made up of laymen. It was counted a happy omen, however, that in these preliminary meetings, seven Annual Conferences of our church were represented. On motion of John J. Tigert, Granville Goodloe was called to the chair, and the temporary organization was completed by the election of John J. Tigert as secretary. The following Constitution was read in both meetings, carefully considered in both meetings, article by article, and unanimously adopted:

VANDERBILT, Sept. 21, 1888.

Literary Notes.

The last literary work done by Prof. Richard A. Proctor was the writing of six articles for the Chicago Inter-Ocean. They are "Plague and Pestilence," "Learning the Stars," "Our Two Brains," "Famous Comets," "Are Men Advancing?" and "Great Telescopes."

Anna Katharine Green, the author of "The Leavenworth Case," has a new novel in the press of G. P. Putnam's Sons, with the title, "Behind Closed Doors."

Prof. Von Sibel Kircher, of the Prussian State archives, has nearly completed an elaborate work on the founding of the new German empire. He has been engaged on the work for many years.

Albany has another Burns memorial quite as interesting and to many quite as valuable as the fine new statue of the poet just erected in the city. This is the original draft of his famous "Auld Lang Syne." This manuscript is owned by Mr. J. V. L. Pruyn.

Mr. George Kennan's Siberian articles are to continue through the coming year of The Century. Among other matters of great interest will be the culmination of Mr. Kennan's revelations in a minute and tragic account of the mines of Kara, to which more than a single article will be devoted.

The author of "Dead Man's Rock," who modestly hides his identity behind the letter "Q," has written another story which Cassell & Company announce. It is called "The Astonishing History of Troy Town," and it is an astonishing history indeed. The story begins as quietly as a pastoral, but it is as full of surprises as a summer day with its clouds and storms.

"Men and Measures of Half a Century," from the pen of Hon. Hugh McCulloch, is one of the important books which the Scribners will bring out this fall. The work is replete with reminiscences, sketches, and comments, based on a long public career, and especially during the author's position as Secretary of the Treasury in the administrations of Presidents Lincoln, Johnson and Arthur. The work will be brought out in one volume.

Thomas Whittaker announces "Studies in the Acts of the Apostles," by Bishop Williams of Connecticut.

Mr. W. L. Cowles has prepared for Cassell & Co. a miniature cyclopædia which, it is said, gets within one 12mo volume the cream of the Encyclopædia Britannica or of the American Cyclopædia.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers announce for this week "Peninsular California," handsomely illustrated, containing a valuable map, statistics, etc., and, of course, readable, as it is from the practiced pen of Mr. Charles Nordhoff.

A Life of Dr. Muhlenburg is in preparation, by the Rev. W. Wilberforce Newton, for publication by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will begin in October a cheaper edition of Charles Kingsley's most popular books; and also a new and uniform edition of the novels of Miss Charlotte M. Yonge.

Books and Periodicals.

A NEW SINGING BOOK: SPLENDOR. By Mr. S. W. Straub, of Chicago. S. W. Straub & Co., publishers, 243 State St., Chicago. Price 60 cents.

It is designed for the use of singing schools, conventions, musical institutes, normal schools, etc. On receipt of forty cents the publishers will mail one copy to any teacher for examination.

CELEBRITIES AND LESS, EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN. By Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.

Here are thirty-three "sketches" of distinguished preachers and laymen in Dr. Young's best style. We remember reading some of them years ago, published under the title, "Characters I Have Taken a Pen to." These have not lost their freshness by being republished, while those of recent date will charm all readers. We predict that this book will "have a run."

To Whom It May Concern.

While attending the China Grove Camp Meeting, Pike county, Miss., several persons paid me for a little book called, "Aid and Guide to Family Worship;" and I was to send the book by mail to them. I put the names and addresses in my day-book. While moving from one house to another I lost my book. I suppose the most of those persons take the ADVOCATE—at least, they ought to—and will see this. If they will send me a card with name and address, or get their preacher to assist them, I can send the book. To say I regret it is saying but little. I have the books on hand waiting.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

A ludicrous mistake happened some time ago at a funeral. The clergyman was reading the service, until he came to the part which says, "Our deceased brother or sister," without knowing whether the deceased was a male or a female. He turned round to one of the mourners and asked whether it was a brother or a sister. The man very innocently replied, "No relation at all, sir—only an acquaintance."

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and any one in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

A GOOD GRAMMER.

[We advise every little grammarian just entering on the study to commit to memory the following parts of speech. The author—whoever he is—deserves much credit.]

Three little words you often see,
Are articles, A, AN and THE.

A noun's the name of anything,
As SCHOOL or GARDEN, HOOP or SWING.

Adjectives tell the kind of noun,
As GREAT, SMALL, PRETTY, WHITE or BROWN.

Instead of nouns the pronouns stand—
HER head, HIS face, YOUR arm, MY hand.

Verbs tell of something to be done—
To READ, COUNT, SING, LAUGH, JUMP, RUN.

How things are done adverbs tell,
As SLOWLY, QUICKLY, ILL or WELL.

Conjunctions join the words together,
As MAN AND woman, wind OR weather.

The prepositions stand before
A noun, as OF or THROUGH a door.

The interjections show surprise,
As AH! how pretty—OH! how wise.

The whole are called nine parts of speech,
Which reading, writing, speaking teach.

Woman's Department of Church Extension.

Dear Children: I want your Society to meet once a month at least, and I want to have something to say to you each time. I believe you would rather I wrote you letters than leaflets. I would too, for I feel closer to you, more as if I were talking to you and telling you tales. I know you like that.

I once took upon my lap a dear little baby girl I loved very much, and told her of a little boy who had no shoes and went barefooted in the coldest weather. He went from house to house and no one would let him come in to warm; and his poor little feet were so cold—nearly frozen. She was very sorry for the poor boy; and the next morning when the nurse tried to put on her shoes she kicked her little feet and would not let them go on, crying: "Take 'em to 'ittle boy whose foot's told—Take 'em to 'ittle boy whose foot's told." Her mother could not understand what she wanted until she remembered the story of the night before; then she had to humor her, for her heart was nearly broken, and she would not be consoled until those shoes were taken out of the room and an old pair brought to her.

Now I do not urge you to give the shoes off your feet, but I do want you to feel for the suffering of others and be willing to make some sacrifice to relieve them.

Often it is love and kind words people want more than anything else. I knew a little girl once, who made everyone around her happier by just being sweet and loving. Her aunt one day took her with her to see a poor neighbor whose hands were drawn into knots with rheumatism and her body bent over so she could not straighten it. The unfortunate old woman was so ugly and distorted by disease that children cried and ran away when they saw her. This made her unhappy, for she loved little children and her heart ached when she saw they could not bear the sight of her. When Emmie—that was the name of the little girl—came the old woman was afraid to say anything to her lest she might cry, for she was only four years old. But Emmie did not cry, nor run away; she stood by her aunt and looked at the sick woman sitting bent over in her chair. Presently her big blue eyes filled with tears; she opened her arms wide, and running up to the poor woman clasped them around her neck, put her soft rosy cheek against the withered old face, and whispered: "I love you, Harrisy." The woman—whose name was Mrs. Harris—completely overcome with surprise, put her arm around the darling child and wept aloud. "Oh," she said, excusing herself to the aunt, "this is the first child who has come to me for years. They always run away from me, and I love them so much."

The chubby hands were tenderly laid on the old crumped and useless hands, while the baby looked sympathizingly up into her face and asked what was the matter with them. "My bones are all drawn up," said the old woman.

The little one did not altogether understand, and when she went home, shaking her head in a solemn, troubled way, said: "Poor Harrisy got the bones so bad." After that she went often to see Mrs. Harris, and by her sweet, winning ways, made her life so much brighter. She used to watch for the child as though she was the sunlight of her life. And when her father took her away to live elsewhere the sick woman missed her so much she could not speak of her without weeping.

Now, dear children, I have told you this short, true story that you may see however small you may be, if you are loving and kind like our blessed Savior, who loves the poorest and most wretched, you may comfort some poor body's heart and make the world brighter. Old people love for little children to pay them attention. They love to have them read the Bible to them. This many of you can do. Those of you who are so little you can not read, can take a pretty flower to some one who is old, or sad, or sick. I told my Sunday-school class that once. A day or two after I felt quite unwell and depressed, and my little nephew, one of my class, came to me and, in that gentle, shy way boys always do things of that kind, presented a small bunch of flowers. I was very much pleased and, perhaps, a little surprised. He smiled and reminded me: "You told us to give flowers to some one who was sick." I understood. He was putting the teaching into practice and had begun at home. That is the very best place to begin, but do not stop there; for there are so many people in this world who are glad to hear a kind word. Find them, children, find them, comfort them, make their lives brighter. Be gentle and kind to everyone and you will grow more like Jesus.—Your friend,

LUCINDA B. HELM.

MR. EDITOR: Many weeks have passed by since I last wrote to our dear department, and I fear my name has long since been obliterated from your minds. I must tell the young folks of our Sunday-school at Muddy Springs Church, which I attend. We have recently organized it, and now enroll sixty-nine pupils. Mr. P. C. Webb is superintendent, and we all like him very much. Our minister is Rev. M. L. Burton, whose sermons come with such sweetness to our waiting hearts. He scatters rays of hope about one's ways, and utters syllables of sweet cheer, which are the best of Heaven's gifts to the desponding. The very atmosphere seems redolent with benediction. As brevity is the rule, I must close my letter. So please, kind editor, do not blast my hopes by consigning my letter to that dreadful waste-basket. With best wishes to the ADVOCATE, editor and unknown friends. BETTIE LENOIR.

MAGNOLIA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking of writing to your valuable paper for a long while. I read the cousins' letters, but never see one from this circuit. Sister takes your dear paper, and I read it with pleasure. I am a little girl twelve years of age. —am a member of the Methodist Church. I have five sisters, two brothers and a dear mamma and papa. Bro. Breland is our preacher this year, and I like him so much. He has a wife and two children. I go to Sunday-school sometimes. Papa tents on Palmer Creek Camp Ground. We are busy preparing for the meeting, which begins October 6. I wish you would come out to our meeting. I will answer F. A. Howell's question. The word "dove" is found in Genesis viii, 8. I will close by asking a question: Who was the father of Joshua?

Your new friend,

MAGGIE E. WALKER.

Household.

Let the Girls Romp.

Most mothers have a dread of romps; so they lecture the girls daily on the proprieties, and exhort them to be little ladies. They like to see them very quiet and gentle and as prim as possible. The lot of such children is rather pitiable, for they are deprived of the fun and frolic which they are entitled to. Children—boys and girls—must have exercise to keep them healthy. Deprive them of it, and they will fade away like flowers without sunshine. Running, racing, skipping, climbing—these are the things that strengthen the muscles, expand the chest, and build up the nerves. The mild dose of exercise taken in the nursery with calisthenics or gymnastics will not invigorate the system like a good romp in the open air. Mothers, therefore, who counsel their little girls to play very quietly make a mistake. Better the laughing, rosy-cheeked, romping girl, than the pale, lily-faced one, who is called every inch a lady. The latter rarely breaks things, or tears her dresses, or tires her mother's patience, as the former does; but, after all, what does the tearing and breaking amount to? It is not a wise policy to put an old head on young shoulders. Childhood is the time for childish pranks and plays. The girls will grow into womanhood soon enough. Let them be children as long as they can. Give them plenty of fresh air and sunlight, and let them run and romp as much as they please. By all means give us hearty, healthy, romping girls, rather than pale-faced little ladies, condemned from their very cradles to nervousness, headache, and similar ailments.—Farm and Manufacturer.

HAVE YOU A BOY TO SPARE?—The saloon must have boys, or it must shut up shop. Can't you furnish it one? It is a great factory, and unless it can get 2,000,000 boys from each generation for raw material, some of these factories must close out and its operatives must be thrown on a cold world, and the public revenue will dwindle. "Wanted—2,000,000 boys," is the notice. One family out of every five must contribute a boy to keep up the supply. Will you help? Which of your boys will it be? The minotaur of Crete had to have a trireme full of fair maidens each year; but the minotaur of America demands a city full of boys each year. Are you a father? Have you given your share to keep up the supply for this great public institution that is helping to pay your taxes and kindly electing public officials for you? Have you contributed a boy? If not, some other family has had to give more than its share. Are you selfish, voting to keep the saloon open to grind up boys, and then doing nothing to keep up the supply?

Hear Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, the great physician: "I have seen a few people who were ennobled by long sickness, but far more often the result is to cultivate self-love and selfishness, and to take away by slow degrees the healthy mastery which every human being should have over his own emotions and wants." What a strong hint to Christians who are ill, to preserve that healthy mastery by all the strength of Christ given to faith and prayer. The history of our religion can never be told without the touching chapter which reveals the patience of the saints who suffer from chronic and painful maladies. As the storm swept through their heart-strings, the music of a heavenly peace has greeted our ears. Let Christians show their physicians and families that they are ennobled by long illness, that when they are weak they are strong, and that they can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth them.

Contentment is a pearl of great price, and whoever procures it at the expense of ten thousand desires makes a wise and a happy purchase.—J. Balguy.

HATHAWAY.—REV. NATHANIEL PROCTOR HATHAWAY was born in the State of Massachusetts, 1807; was by trade a carpenter, having served an apprenticeship at an early age. When about twenty-three years old he moved to Louisiana and settled near Monroe, where in 1840 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Cockrell; soon after united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was ever a faithful, earnest follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. In 1867 he again removed and settled in Rapides parish, La., and was by the Spring Creek Quarterly Conference licensed as a local preacher. In this capacity he served the church faithfully and well until his failing strength forbid the carrying on successfully of his loved employ. Yet with constant zeal he urged by exhortation and example the importance of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. In 1881 he bought land in this (Avoyelles) parish, where a number of his large family are now living. He was a man of untiring industry and energy, living the greater part of his life on poor lands; yet at the time of his death he left unencumbered a property worth nearly five thousand dollars. He was always liberal in supporting the industry and institutions of the church. His cheerful reply to any question in regard to his condition always was, "Oh! I am comfortable." The very morning of his death—August 22, about nine o'clock—he said to his aged and weeping wife, the companion of his youth, "I'm not sick;—nothing hurts me; I feel comfortable. I am only worn out."

He was the father of eleven children—all of whom lived to be grown and have families, and are members of the Methodist Church. One daughter having preceded him to the glory land, he still has four sons and six daughters, with thirty-three grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, with the widow who is now seventy-two years old, living in Louisiana. What a striking fulfillment of the Scripture: "The righteous shall inherit the earth." It was the writer's privilege to know and love Bro. Hathaway. May he, with all this company of loved ones, live so that we may meet him in heaven! S. H. WHATLEY.

SIMMONS—Mrs. SALLIE P. E. SIMMONS (nee Macpherson) was born in Williamson county, Tenn., June 21, 1815; died, very suddenly, at the residence of her youngest son, near Edwards, Miss., September 5, 1888.

Three days before her death she was at church as well as usual, no one thinking she was so near the end of her earthly pilgrimage. She illustrated in death the promise, "Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in its season."

Sister Simmons was a remarkable woman in many respects. She possessed a comprehensive and exalted view of woman's part in conquering this world for Christ. Woman's influence and activity appeared to her cultured mind as the rainbow of promise. Knowledge to her was based on the law of progression. It was an inspiration to see one in her seventy-fourth year reading Latin. While she lived in the past as to tender associations and friendships of other years, she lived for the present and future, and everything suggestive of good to the world was of vital interest to her. She was always true to her friends; there was no hypocrisy in her nature, while candor was a ruling trait of character. She never left you with a doubt as to her position on any subject. She held an advanced position on all subjects, and she maintained them in the light of history, reference and the Word of God. She loved the Methodist Church, which she joined some fifty-five years ago. There were lights and shadows on the journey of life. She buried several children, other loved ones and many friends. The war, with other misfortunes of life, changed her temporal condition; yet she was true and trustful. In the eventide there was light. A few days before her death she remarked to her family that she was well and felt happier than she had been for twenty years, and that she felt like holding a prayer meeting. In this state she passed away, as calm as a wave dies on the shore and as gently as the breezes blow o'er Ceylon's Isle. Sister Simmons leaves an aged and lonely companion, two sons, three daughters and several grandchildren, a host of friends, who will keep her memory precious. What a change to the aged to leave this life for the glories, the beauties and the attractions of the haven of rest! How restful, amid the sorrows incident to this life, is the thought that love is eternal, and that heaven is an eternal expression of God's love! I. W. COOPER.

FRITZ—Mrs. MARY ELIZABETH, daughter of Samuel and Mary E. Whatley was born in the parish of Catahoula, La., September 1, 1851, and was married to Mr. A. W. Fritz, February 10, 1887, and, after a painful illness of two months, died September 4, 1888. She was well known to the writer from infancy, and never in my memory did an angry word or unkind act mar her beautiful life; but, like the crystal waters of the beautiful creek, upon the banks of which she spent many hours of joyous, childish sport, her life was transparent. She joined the Methodist Church, South, at an early age and was a faithful, fervent member. During her illness it was my pleasure to be often with her. At first she was seemingly in some little doubt, or to have some fear in regard to the future, but after reading and consulting us to the promises written in the Word of God, she seemed to repose with entire confidence in the blessed Redeemer. And in the last moments of her life she attempted to sing those sweet lines of resignation: "Loving Jesus, gentle Lamb, in thy gracious hands I am." Her bereaved father writes: "She gave us a full assurance of her peace with God, and that she was going home to heaven." On the day of our last meeting on earth, we sang, "Shall we meet beyond the river," and her face glowed with the joyous anticipation. May her husband, father, mother, brothers and sister and friends so live and trust the "loving Jesus," that in the "Father's house" we may all joyfully meet to part no more forever.

HER COUSIN.

NEYLAND—Alas! once more death has visited the residence of J. A. and V. H. Neyland, and taken from their presence the beloved little daughter, ANNA ELIZA, who died of swamp fever, near Natchitoches, La., August 12, 1888, aged twelve years and six months, just budding into womanhood. She was a sweet, amiable little girl. She was universally loved; "to know her was to love her." She was a little Christian; she loved Jesus. Ere death clasped her in its strong, cold arms, she threw her arms around her mother's neck, and whispered, "I am going;" then crossed her hands on her breast and fell asleep. Why do we mourn when we know she is safe in the arms of Jesus. She can not come to us; but, thanks be to God, we can go to her.

SALLIE NEYLAND.

HODGES—WILLIAM EDWIN HODGES, son of F. C. and Addie Hodges, born January 17, 1886, departed this life September 7, 1888, aged two years, seven months and twenty days. Young as little Edwin was, he leaves quite a number of friends to mourn, with the family, the shortness of his life. We think it had to be forced to give up Eddie this, to whom we are looking forward to see bright lights in our country's history; and, truly, it is hard, but we should always be submissive to the Lord's will. During my stay with this happy family last year, little Edwin and I formed quite an attachment for each other, and he called me "partner." It was a sore trial to give him up. FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

NEYLAND—Little CURTIS, infant son of W. G. and S. J. Neyland, died of congestion, August 29, 1888, aged one year and three months. Many hearts are saddened by the loss of this little darling boy's sweet, charming smiles and baby prattle. His short illness, of only four days, at last proved fatal. Our loss was his gain. In the last struggle through death, he said, "Papa, papa;" then closed his eyes in peace, and his spirit soared through realms of bliss into eternal joy. He was a sweet, affectionate little child. He seemed to know he would die. He would look earnestly in his mother's face and smile, as if to say, "Farewell, my earthly parents; I must go."

SALLIE NEYLAND.

HUNTLEY—Whereas, An all-wise God has called into perfect rest, from the midst of a busy life filled with beautiful deeds of Christian kindness and exalted nobility, our beloved teacher, Mrs. IDA RICHARDSON HUNTLEY, leaving a devoted husband, four little children and numerous deeply attached friends wrapped in the sadness of an irretrievable loss; And, whereas, We can truly say that few came nearer in this land of shadows living up to the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, transfusing daily into the hearts and lives of those about her the essence of a character which was the incarnation of all cultured womanly gifts and graces; beautified by a divine tenderness and strengthened by unsund powers of soul and intellect; And, whereas, We profoundly deplore our loss, feeling that her equal as teacher, inspirer and sustainer can not be supplied from our midst, therefore; be it

Resolved, That we bow in submission to the heavy stroke that has been laid upon us, knowing that it came from him who doeth all things well, and trust confidingly in the promise, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

Resolved, That we rejoice that in her gracious walk near to God on earth and her unfaltering faith in the blessed Savior, we have confidence that she has passed into a glorious immortality.

Resolved, That we will endeavor earnestly to shape our lives according to the perfect plan she has left us, so that her consecration and self-sacrificing nature may be found in each of us.

Resolved, That we hereby tender our heartfelt sympathy to the sorrowing husband, and direct him for consolation to a higher power who knows and ministers to, in his own unfathomable wisdom, the necessities of man.

Consumption, Wasting Diseases

And General Debility. Doctors disagree as to the relative value of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites: the one supplying strength and flesh, the other giving nerve power, and acting as a tonic to the digestive and entire system. But in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites the two are combined, and the effect is wonderful. Thousands who have derived no permanent benefit from other preparations have been cured by this. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable and is easily digested by those who cannot tolerate plain Cod Liver Oil.

Refining Sugar by Electricity.

The Philadelphia Record says:

Sugar merchants and brokers all over the country are in a flurry at the announcement, recently made to the effect that the much-mooted process of refining raw sugar by aid of electricity had been brought to a consummation, and that by the middle of next month a refinery using this process exclusively would be in operation. It is said that a party of English and American capitalists, representing at least $15,000,000, is now prepared to erect electric refineries in all the principal cities on both continents, if the process should be proved to be successful by the tenth of October. If the scheme is all right, it will cause a revolution in sugar refining that will mark an important era in the history of that article of commerce.

This system is, however, the same that has been in process of completion for the last ten or fifteen years, and it is the same that has so repeatedly failed in accomplishing its purpose, that the faith of those who at one time believed in its ultimate success was so frequently shocked as to create a prejudice against it and eventually secure the condemnation and arouse the incredulity of its erstwhile advocates. Of late years an almost universal opinion declaring the system to be impracticable has been in existence, and nothing short of a thorough exposition of the system and its principles will restore the faith of men in the sugar trade. This, it is claimed, has been given; but it was satisfactory only to a degree. In a refinery in Brooklyn, a few days ago, a quantity of raw sugar was refined in the presence of a party of gentlemen interested in the process. Thirteen barrels of the raw material were refined at the recent test. The cane was put into a receiver, from which it passed through two secret rooms containing the machinery before being run into barrels in a refined state. What the machinery is no one, apparently, except the inventor, seems to know. The raw cane goes into the receiver, and once it leaves that simple piece of mechanism, it is not seen again until it finds its way out through a chute at the farther end of the two mysterious machinery rooms. During the time the machinery was in operation (twenty-five minutes) the refined article was turned out at the rate of one barrel for every two minutes. The process of refining is claimed to be perfectly dry, and it certainly must be, for when it came through it was dryer than the raw cane, and the crystals were absolutely perfect. The promoters of the scheme say it will turn out sugar in ten different grades, the only alterations in the machinery necessary being the changing of the plates in the granulators.

A FARM TELEPHONE.—Noticing an inquiry from one of my brother farmers for a cheap farm telephone, I will give directions for construction. Purchase steel binder wire. Get two cigar boxes, take the lids off, and cut a three-quarter hole in the bottom of each box; then get some stiff wire (I used steel ribs out of an umbrella) and cut into pieces a little longer than the box is wide. Wrap the telephone wire around these wires, one at each end. I planted one post every quarter of a mile. Oak makes the best post. Cut the posts with a fork on them. Bore a small hole through each prong and tie a string (leather is what I used) to the prongs of the forks; then let the telephone wire rest on the string fastened in the fork of the post. Select as solid places as possible to put the boxes against. Plane off a board a little larger than the box, for the box to rest against. Bore a hole through this board according to the direction of the telephone line. Put the wire through the box, and fasten the box up with little nails driven in at the side. Now, put up the wire, and don't stretch it too tight. Fasten up the other box in the same way. If you get it up so that it talks as nicely as the one I have, you would not do without one. My telephone has been in use four years, and has not cost me a cent since I put the wire up. It is one-fourth of a mile long. I keep poles with forks on them to set under the wire when a sleet comes, to prevent the ice from breaking the wire down. I would like to hear from others on farm telephones.—Correspondent Ohio Farmer.

The Last Pension Report.

Pension Commissioner Black's annual report shows that during the fiscal year, ended June 20, the pension rolls received 60,252 new names, the largest annual increase in the history of the Bureau, making a total of 452,557 pensioners on the rolls. The names of 2,028 persons dropped from the rolls were restored, and 15,780 were dropped by death or other causes, making the net increase for the year 46,550. During the year, $78,775,862 was paid in pensions, an increase over the previous year of $5,308,280. The total amount expended for all purposes was $82,038,386, or 21 ⅛ per cent. of the total estimated gross income of the United States government, and 31 per cent. of the government's outlay for the same period. A table is furnished, showing the total number of special pension acts which have become laws since 1861, as follows: 1861 to 1865, 41 (Lincoln); 1865 to 1869, 431 (Johnson); 1869 to 1876, 490 (Grant); 1877 to 1881, 303 (Hayes); 1881 to 1885, 736 (Garfield and Arthur); total, 2,001; 1885 to 1888, 1,369 (Cleveland); grand total, 3,370. It appears that while during President Cleveland's administration 1,369 special acts became laws, 191 were vetoed. Of this number, 17 were vetoed in the interest of claimants, because they would be entitled to greater amounts under the general law. These 17 cases were afterwards allowed by the Pension Bureau, and saved the beneficiaries $17,249 more than they would have received had the special acts become laws. Ninety-three of these vetoed claims had been rejected by the Pension Bureau prior to July 1, 1885, and 56 subsequent to that time; 30 were pensions unsettled in the Pension Bureau, and no applications under the general law had ever been filed in it. It is also stated that in the fiscal years from July 1, 1882, to June 30, 1887, there were 191,221 certificates of all classes, and during the three following fiscal years from July 1, 1885, to June 30, 1888, 356,537, making an increase for the last three years of 168,316 certificates.

"Pay John Williams."

At a prayer meeting "down East," a man noted for his failures to meet business obligations arose to speak. The subject was: "What shall I do to be saved?" He commenced slowly to quote the words: "What shall I do to be saved?" He paused, looked around, and said again: "What shall I do to be saved?" Again, with more solemn tone, he repeated the question of questions, when a voice from the assembly, in clear and distinct tones, replied: "Go and pay John Williams for that yoke of oxen."

The incident stirs up solemn thought. A great many people before they can be saved, or guide others to the Savior, will have to "go and pay John Williams" the money they honestly owe him. Shrewd tricksters in the marts of the world are not shrewd enough to be dishonest at heart and retain the favor of God, who "loves purity in the inward parts." Neither can a hope of the world to come be like a sheet-anchor in the soul of any one who robs God by being dishonest to his fellow-man.

Thousands read no other Bible than the lives of those who profess to be following its precepts in their daily lives. The greatest need of the church is true, pure, upright living—"living epistles, known and read of all men." The square man is the best shape. The tree is known by its fruit. "Go and pay John Williams."—Mid-Continent.

FEELING FOR THE PILLARS.—When Luther was at Coburg, he wrote to a friend: "I was lately looking out of my window at night, and I saw the stars in heaven and God's great, beautiful arch over my head, but I could not see any pillars on which the great Builder had fixed his arch; yet the heavens fell not, and the great arch stood firmly. There are some who are always feeling for the pillars and longing to touch them; and, because they can not touch them, they stand trembling and fearing lest the heavens should fall. If they could only grasp the pillars, then the heavens would stand fast." Thus did Luther illustrate his faith, and seek to inspire others with confidence in God.

That tired feeling is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which creates an appetite, raises the liver, cures headache, and gives renewed strength and vigor to the whole body. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself. Sold by all druggists.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Senator Gibson made a very strong speech, on September 27, in reply to Mr. Chandler's late tirade against the State of Louisiana. The malice against and misrepresentation of the South was exposed and emphatically refuted without recourse to recrimination.

The House Judiciary Committee, on September 27, considered the question of trusts. No action resulted from the meeting, and the consideration of the subject will be continued at another session.

The Board of Health of Memphis withdrew, on September 27, its non-intercourse quarantine regulations, and Memphis is now free and open to the world, excepting persons from infected districts. Health officers will be on all trains, but there will be no interruption to travel save from infected towns.

The panic caused by the yellow fever is past, and quarantines have been raised and railway travel resumed, while a better feeling prevails throughout the stricken section. On September 29 there was a decided falling off of the disease at Jacksonville, Fla.; only a few sporadic cases near Decatur, Ala., and no new cases at Jackson, Miss.

Hon. T. S. Wilkinson has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of the First Congressional District of this State, on September 29.

It is now pretty generally conceded that the Senate Finance Committee will refuse to report the bill passed by the House to give the President power to retaliate upon the Canadian government for its unjust discrimination against the people of the United States. There will thus be no legislation at this session on the subject.

The Italians and Irish who have been at work on the water works in New York City came together on September 30, and a general row followed. Knives were freely used and many cuts were inflicted.

Ten weeks ago a case of small-pox was discovered in Buffalo, N. Y. Since then there have been 63 cases and 17 deaths, 6 of which were caused by black small-pox, which is most fatal. There are now 23 cases in the hospital.

There was a full meeting of the Senate Finance Committee, on October 1, at which three or four points which were left open by the tariff bill were considered and disposed of. The bill is now complete, and will be reported as soon as the minority shall finish its report.

The President has approved the act transferring certain lands on the Mississippi river, near Cubitt's Gap, to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes.

FOREIGN.

The damage done by the recent cyclone in Cuba is estimated at $6,000,000.

It is officially announced that Prince Bismarck has obtained the consent of Emperor William to prosecute the publishers of the Deutsche Rundschau for revealing state secrets in publishing the abstract from the diary of the late Emperor Frederick.

The Empress of Austria explains that although she admires Heine's poetry she withdraws her donation to the Heine monument at the request of the Emperor, in consequence of Heine's insults to the Hohenzollerns.

The North German Gazette, the Cologne Gazette and the Berlin Post publish a semi-official hint to France to hasten the conclusion of the inquiry into the shooting of the porter of the German embassy at Paris.

The second congress for the unification of the maritime commercial law opened in Brussels, Belgium, September 30, the minister of justice presiding. Judge Lambert Tree, the American minister, and other foreign representatives were present. Delegates from the European states are in attendance.

M. Goblet, the minister of foreign affairs, speaking at Abbeville, September 30, expressed the anxiety he felt over the election of General Boulanger to the Chamber of Deputies, and drew a picture of the trouble that would befall France if many Boulangerists were elected. He hoped the country would rally to the support of the government.

Advices from Zanzibar say that the Germans murdered at Kilwa died while defending themselves. A German gunboat was present, but was unable to give assistance in the face of the thousands of armed natives lining the beach. The corpses of the murdered Germans were terribly mutilated.

The National Gazette states that the recently published extracts from Frederick's diary have been compared with the text of the original, and have been found to agree with the latter, word for word.

The Pope celebrated high mass for the dead at St. Peter's, on September 30, to solemnize the close of his jubilee. The congregation numbered 20,000 persons. Admittance was by ticket. His Holiness was given an enthusiastic reception and was greeted with cries of "Viva." He appeared to be deeply moved.

The first open-air meeting of unemployed workmen under the sanction of Premier Crispi was held in the piazza Dante, in Rome, on September 30. The speakers demanded state employment.

Several persons have been arrested in France for divulging the project for a Franco-Russian alliance prepared by a preceding Cabinet. Senate denies the statement that he made the assertion that M. Rouvier revealed to Germany the alleged project for a Franco-Russian alliance prepared by a preceding Cabinet.

Snow fell throughout England on October 7.

It is a remarkable fact that Sir. Isaac Newton, in his work on the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, said that "if they were true, it would be necessary that a new mode of traveling should be invented." He said that "the knowledge of mankind would be so increased before a certain date or time terminated—namely, one thousand two hundred and sixty years—that they would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour." Voltaire got hold of this, and true to the spirit of skepticism of all ages, said: "Now, look at the mighty mind of Newton, who discovered gravitation! When he became an old man, and got into his dotage, he began to study the book called the Bible; and, it seems, in order to credit its fabulous nonsense, we must believe that the knowledge of mankind will be so increased that we shall be able to travel at fifty miles an hour. The poor dotard!" The self-complacency of the philosophic infidel made his friends laugh. But if he should get into a railway train, even a skeptic to-day would have to say: "Newton was the philosopher, Voltaire the dotard."

Home is next to heaven. It is a sacred place, a survival as it were of paradisaical innocence, tenderness and love in the midst of a fallen and ruined world. Here, as nowhere else, the heart is queen regnant. Coming so near as to hear the pulse beats of those about us, the fellowship is intimate, affectionate and unselfish. Living not to ourselves, we enjoy and are able to promote the happiness of others. Blessed are those reared in the genial atmosphere of a virtuous home. They abide quite in the verge of heaven. Sad is the fate of the many waifs, floating in the angry currents of modern society, who never know a father's care or a mother's kiss of affection.

From Rt. Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Philadelphia.

THE THIEF IN THE NIGHT.

BY ALICE WELLINGTON ROLLINS.

He came and went with noiseless step,
As silently as falling snow,
That, falling, melts and leaves no trace
Whither it, falling, meant to go.

And yet, and yet, he bore away
With him—I know not how or why—
Something I thought would be my own,
My very own, until I die.

And yet I bear him no ill-will,
This subtle, silent, unseen thief;
He brought me joy, altho' he came
As stealthily as hardened Grief.

His name is Sleep—sweet, dreamless Sleep;
And it was Pain he took away;
A weary load from trembling nerves
Had vanished with the dawn of day.

Little Improvement in the Discipline.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

The General Conference is the poorest place to improve the Discipline. The most that can be hoped for there is to consummate and ratify such things as may have been canvassed and almost virtually agreed upon before. I expect to quit writing about cradle and nursery religion after a while, but not until two things happen: when brethren in the ministry quit writing to me and urging me to write more, and when this hand shall be no longer able to guide a pen. The more I live, and the more I see the views of other and wiser men on the subject, the more importance I attach to it. Allow me to state my text first, and then preach.

The caption to Section 2, on page 120 of Discipline, is, "Of the Children of the Church," a most interesting subject: but the law under it is not about the children of the church, but of children out of the church. So I suggest: On page 121, line 2, after the word "convenient," let the sentence continue as follows: "And to impress upon them the importance of explaining to such children, as early as possible, that they are in the church, and have all its advantages, and are under all its obligations."

And on same page let the seventh line continue thus: "And explain to them fully their personal church membership."

And on page 250, at end of third paragraph, after "covenant," insert a new sentence as follows: "And if there be children among the candidates, let the pastor explain this obligation and promise in familiar terms, that they fully understand it."

This first suggestion refers to the duty of the preacher to exhort parents to have their children baptized. A matter of great importance, indeed. But many such baptisms—the matter being carried no farther—is of no more value than the baptism or "blessing" the church bell in Catholic private houses by our Roman Catholic friends. If left there, the child knows nothing about it—cares nothing about it. He is no more one of "the children of the church" than any other children born in Christendom.

The change suggested requires the preacher not only to exhort parents to have their children baptized, but to explain to them that they are now in the church.

The second merely requires the preacher also to explain this church membership to the children.

The third suggestion refers to the formal reception and enrollment of candidates for membership, as previously indicated.

The subject of children's Christianity and church membership is attracting more and more attention everywhere among our most thoughtful Christian people. It must come to the front and assume importance second to no other factor in the make-up of the great Christian system. Practically, we go upon the supposition that religion has no place in the mind and heart until the person reaches the age of ten or twelve years. Conversion and church membership under ten or fifteen years are rare exceptions among Christians of this age. Our books do not teach otherwise. There is but one book in our Nashville catalogue, or in any other that I know of, that teaches earlier conversion, except, perhaps, by a faint and formal allusion. But, however much I may be mistaken in this, as to an occasional faint allusion in a very few books of the practicability of true religion in smaller or infant children, it is the very time that such teachings have attracted no general attention in the pastoral labors of the church.

A few years ago our Publishing House published a small seventy-five-cent book with the somewhat quaint and attractive title of "Christian Cradlehood," devoted entirely to the subject of Christianity proper in children, in the cradle and the nursery, before they are capable of being taught, "Who made you?" "Who was the first man?" "Who was the strongest man?" and such like catechetical lessons. This book was not only highly endorsed by the religious press generally; but by a number of the most leading papers and reviews, North and South, it was eulogized beyond almost any book of recent issue. Dr. Summers, in our Quarterly, said in recommending it: "The time has come when this matter of Christian training of children (in the cradle and nursery) must be made as prominent as was justification by faith in the time of Luther."

This doctrine of "cradlehood" Christianity was clearly taught by Mr. Wesley in sermons Nos. 100 and 101, if I remember right; but no writer since has attempted to make it prominent, that I know of, until the publication of this little cradlehood argument. The New York Christian Advocate said, "There can scarcely be a more important subject than Christian cradlehood," and declares "the religious condition and spiritual status of childhood" is well set forth in this "highly creditable work." The Richmond Christian Advocate calls it "a remarkable book, and one that will awaken profound thought on a subject that has too long been treated with indifference by far too large portions of preachers and parents."

Dr. Cunnyngham, in Sunday-School Magazine, says: "In this little book the author discusses, in a serious and able manner, one of the most important subjects of human thought." One of the most prominent and scholarly Presbyterian ministers I know of, made this book the subject of a morning sermon, in which he explained it largely and urged its reading by all Christian mothers, notwithstanding the book is eminently Arminian.

From these and a hundred other such expressions from men at whose feet I gladly sit to learn wisdom, I infer that the great question of cradlehood or nursery Christianity is coming to the front as the great factor in religious and church extension. The church can not afford longer to rely on the adult population for supply. The nursery offers ten times over the quantity of good material for church augmentation than can be hoped for from the adult world. The same amount of labor, as a general rule, that brings one adult into the church for lasting good, directed to the nursery and its divinely ordained priesthood, will bring in ten or twenty fresh, growing young workers for a lifetime from the richer field of the nursery.

The great mistake of many is that a child must live ten or more years in irreligion before he is old enough to be religious. The cradlehood doctrine teaches that a child is fully capable of religion from the first. The former doctrine has the large and powerful support of usage; the latter, of the Bible and nature.

This writer holds, with Christian cradlehood and its supporters, that Bible religion is perfectly, not partially, adapted, in its highest sanctions and advantages, to each and every person living, irrespective of age, condition, or outward circumstances, scouting the abominable aphorism, "Infants and idiots excepted." I hold the church and its religion the only right place for any person to breathe.

So I want to see "the children of the church" in the church. And it is in this direction that these little changes in the Discipline above suggested looks. The child knows nothing, if, indeed, anybody else does, about a distant, legal construction of faintly implied membership in a church of which he knows but little and cares less. Practical, known, felt membership in the church with his parents would not only be appreciated, but would work largely in stimulating him to right living. How could it be of more use to a grown person than to a child? Can you conceive of a reason why a grown person should be in the church that will not apply with equal force to a child?

Our Presbyterian brethren used to, and, perhaps, do now, have a committee to apply a spiritual thermometer to a candidate for membership to ascertain if his spiritual temperature was high enough. By this rule there can not, by possibility, be a mistake as to young children. The Bible standard of childhood religion is very briefly set forth—"Obey your parents." This obligation rests not directly on a young child, but on his divinely appointed priest, the mother, and, secondarily, the father and the pastor.

Childhood church membership and childhood Christianity are two great factors in Bible religion that are greatly misunderstood, ignored and neglected by the church, in my judgment. The error is, that a child must wait till he is old enough to become religious; whereas the Bible considers him old enough all the while.

Does the Bible contain any specific, prescribed religion for young children? It does. "Obey your parents." This a child can do in the first year as fully as at any later period. And now, look into it, and you will find that this is, in substance, all that is required of any adult person. Obedience is Christianity—Christianity is obedience. All that is required of a child is to obey; all that is required of a man is to obey. The child obeys God through the appointed parental priesthood just as the older person does directly when the priesthood is no longer needed. The principle is the same. Irreligion is self-will; religion is submission. The moral and religious curriculum of a child is small; so his obedience is directed to one point only. That of the older person is larger, and his obedience is directed to many points, even to all the variety of duty. The child can fulfill all his requirements, and the older person can do no more. The child understands law as a fact full well, and he understands the principle of obedience and disobedience, and his amenability to government, as well in the first year as in the fortieth. And if it be said that the child does not understand a reason for obedience, the reply is, Neither does the man. This question has occasioned much debate and examination, and the result is, as far as we know, that we obey because it is the will of God. "The fitness of things" has not been very clearly defined.

So the child in the cradle and the man out of it are much on a par. The one knows, or ought to know, God in the mother: the other knows, or ought to know, God in the Bible. Prompt, full, implicit obedience, and nothing more, nor nothing less, is required in both cases. And if it be said we have not self-power to obey, the answer is, We have a Savior to help us in both cases.

God is not a respecter of persons. Religion is not for classes. Childhood is not a crime. The church is for mankind.

The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's Blunder.

BY REV. H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

The paper of Mr. Pearse, in the ADVOCATE of September 19, reprinted from the Methodist Times, of England, opens with this remarkable statement:

> The source and strength of the skepticism of the age is in the pulpit. Doubt of the truth, and opposition to it, is mainly created by those who are called "preachers of the gospel."

That Christian truth is sometimes so poorly presented or defended, that the result is harmful to the cause, may be true—is undoubtedly true; but is it true, as asserted by Mr. Pearse, that "the source and strength of the skepticism of the age is in the pulpit"? What proof does Mr. Pearse offer to sustain this awful charge against his brethren? Nothing but a few poetic reflections and racy epigrams spiced with quotations from Matthew Arnold and Cardinal Newman. That Arnold should tell us to make people believe the truths of our religion, and yet "do not prove them," is remarkable: that Cardinal Newman should urge us that "man is not a reasoning animal," and that proving religious truth is a useless task more harmful than otherwise, is not surprising, as it has long been the theory and method of Romanism: but that Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, a Methodist preacher of the nineteenth century, should approvingly quote such utterances, is both astounding and humiliating. These scraps of good rhetoric from famous men do, by no means, sustain that awful charge that the Christian pulpit of this age is the main source and strength of the blasphemous infidelity so rampant in some parts of England and America. Bob Ingersoll charges his infidelity upon the preaching of his good old father; but who believes this base, unfilial slander upon the sainted dead? I have read much of Ingersoll's utterances. If he ever stated a Christian argument fairly, or quoted a passage of Scripture correctly, I do not now remember it. His infidelity rests either upon the grossest ignorance of Christian evidences, or upon base misrepresentations of them. True, I have now and then heard from shallow wits and unlearned tongues defenses of Christian truth and statements of Christian evidences which ought not to have been made; but they were easily attributable—and absolutely attributed by skeptics who heard them—to the ignorance of the preacher rather than the weakness of his cause. I have known the cause to suffer from the cowardly refusal of preachers to defend it, its opponents boldly declaring that the preacher would not attempt to prove his utterances because there was no proof possible; and I have seen loud-mouthed, rampant error die out from a community under the bold attacks of a brave preacher who gloried in being known as a defender of the truth.

This strange new method of converting the world by preaching a blind, unproven faith, too sentimental to prove, was not St. Paul's method. Messrs. Pearse, Arnold, Martineau (whom he also quotes) and Newman should re-read I Corinthians xv, and that argument Paul made before Agrippa and Festus, and the synopsis given of his sermon on Mars Hill. They should get their Greek Testaments and read I Corinthians ii, 6, et seq., where he compares Christianity to Greek philosophy or sophia. He calls one the sophia or philosophy of men, and the other the sophia or philosophy of God, and he tells us that he preached that philosophy. He was not afraid to reason with men lest he make infidels of them. His followers caught his own logical spirit, for we learn that he set the whole synagogue at Berea to searching the Scriptures daily, to see if Paul's preaching was true.

The Master did not satisfy himself with sentimental assertions of his divinity, but gave "many infallible proofs" of it. Indeed, every miracle that he wrought was but a link in the logical chain which makes Christianity to-day the most provable and the best proved system of belief under the sun. I am now reading Fisher's Evidences of Christianity—a new book. I love to read such books. They make me feel so secure in my faith; something as Paul must have felt when he said, "We are more than conquerors." I feel more than secure in my fortress of Christian truth, and yet I am rather sentimental. I love poetry and flowers and music, and I think love the holiest emotion in the universe. Mr. Pearse or I must be rather peculiar in nature and temperament. Which of us is peculiar? I find most people like myself in this matter, or I think I find them so; but Mr. Pearse says:

> God is not nearer to me because of your proofs of his being. For myself I can only say that you have put him farther off, up and away in the colder regions of the intellect, when I long to know him as my own in the sunny warmth of my love and trust. The infinite is not more to me, but infinitely less, because you have wrapped it evenly and neatly within your definition. There is a peril in proofs.

Now, I honestly think these pretty sentences the merest folly—a folly, dangerous because so beautiful and from such a respectable source, and yet none the less folly.

We have ever been taught that truth has nothing to fear from ventilation; but Mr. Pearse and his quoted worthies would have us believe that the truth of the gospel of Christ is such a sentimental weakling that it will fade away under the strong light of logic. Is this the Christianity that Mr. Pearse believes and preaches? It is not the Christianity of Paul and Jesus, and it is to be fondly hoped that we are to have none of it among the Methodist preachers of America.

There is an old preacher-proverb which says, "Don't dig up more snakes than you can kill;" and the admonition is as wise as it is quaint, and it merely means, Do not state more objections or infidel arguments than you can refute. But we, as God's ministers, are sent to teach the people, and the divine admonition to all of us is: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." (I Thessalonians v, 21.)

"Christian Womanhood."

BY J. B. CAMERON, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: A copy of the above-named book was sent me by the author; and I have read it with interest, pleasure and, I think, profit. The author, as the name of the book indicates, is in search of the true status of women in the Christian Church. This is one of the live issues of the day; and this fact alone will attract attention to the book. So also will the name of the modest, but gifted author, and especially where he is best known. You may add to these another fact—that is, that the substance of the body of the book is the substance of a lecture delivered at different places to the delight of listening audiences.

The book gives evidences of patient and close study and investigation; and it develops very clearly the fact that Christianity has been a wonderful blessing to woman—indeed, her "emancipator." Another fact which will not fail to strike the attention of the Christian reader is, that those periods in the church's history which have recognized woman as a factor in church work have been the most prosperous periods of her history at all—that is, the first two or three and the last one or two centuries of that history. The author shows very clearly that he is in profoundest sympathy with his subject; and this has led him to make the most of his argument. I am not so certain that he does not strain it a little in his effort to trace the order of deaconesse back to apostolic times, and the use to which he puts Phebe as evidence in the same line.

It also occurs to me that on the question of women preaching, under both the Mosaic and Christian dispensations, that there is a paucity of evidence which seems to say that if God wanted them to preach at all, he did not want them to preach much. This will appear again when you consider the abundance of evidence there is showing that men are to preach. There is a conspicuous absence of women preachers among those called and sent out by Christ, and those ordained by the apostles. I believe we can safely rely upon the evidence furnished by apostolic times on this question. We have gotten away from one extreme through woman's emancipation by the gospel. May we be kept from the other by confining ourselves to the plain and simple teachings and examples of Christ and his apostles. I would recommend a careful reading of this book to all the friends of Christianity and true womanhood.

The only effectual cure for the love of the world and the love of the creature is the greater love of Christ. The soul can never become a vacuum; one set of feelings can be displaced only by the introduction of another. The world will stay until Christ comes, and will move out only when evicted by the divine Landlord. We are told that "Dr. Boecker, the German sculptor, spent eight years in producing a face of Christ; and at last wrought out one in which the emotions of love and sorrow were so perfectly blended that beholders wept as they looked upon it. Subsequently being solicited to employ his great talent on a statue of Venus, he replied: 'After gazing so long into the face of Christ, think you that I can now turn my attention to a heathen goddess?'"

Some people spend much breath in trying to get the world out, in emptying themselves of self and sin; the true method is to get Christ in. After his admittance, you will have no trouble with the old occupant, who is a mere tenant at will, with no rights and no power to stay, when the owner comes into authority.

(Western Christian Advocate.)

The average intelligence of the people with whom the minister of the gospel now has to deal is greater than ever before in the history of this country, and the man who fancies that the preacher who lacks intelligence can succeed in his work, does not know, or fails to appreciate, the facts. It is true that many men who were not college educated have succeeded; but, as a rule, even they would have made a more profound impression upon the world if they had been more highly cultured. The time for crudities in the pulpit has gone by, and, other things being equal, the most thoroughly trained mind has most influence. The college-bred man has the advantage from the start, both in the grade of his appointment and in popular recognition. More and more education is becoming a sine qua non in the pulpit, and young men who feel that they are called of God to the holy ministry will do well to consider the facts in the case. God not only wants men in the ministry, but he wants men who are fully qualified for the ministry. In every age he has required his ministers to be fitted to the time in which they labored. In a crude age a crude ministry can be influential, but not now. The schoolmaster is abroad, and the public teacher who does not recognize this fact will suffer defeat, if not ridicule, as the penalty of his failure to appreciate the character of the age in which he lives.

THE LESSON OF THE LEAVES.

BY THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

O thou who bearest on thy thoughtful brow
The wearied calm that follows after grief,
See how the autumn guides each loosened leaf
To rest repose in its own sheltered place.
Ah, not forever whirl they in the race
Of wild forlornness round the gathered sheaf,
Or, heavily onward in a rapture brief,
Spin o'er the moorlands dale and treeless space!
Some blow each to each; some sheltering wall
Arrests the wanderer on its aimless way;
The autumn's pensive beauty needs them all,
And winter finds them warm, though sere and gray.
They nurse young blossoms for the spring's sweet call,
And shield new leaflets for the burst of May.

THE STONES OF MEMORIAL.

Joshua iv, 10-24.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Then ye shall let your children know, saying, Israel came over this Jordan on dry land.—Josh. iv, 22.

TIME.—B. C. 1451, in the early part of April.

PLACE.—The Jordan, and Gilgal (supposed to have been five miles west of the river banks).

10. The priests ... stood in the midst of Jordan—Had they drawn back after entering Jordan, had they shown signs of uncertainty, the waters would have returned, or the people had never dared to cross. So great is the responsibility that rests on God's ministers. How many great works for the spread of Christ's gospel, for the proclamation of his truth, for the victory of his cause among men, have failed because the "priests" have not "stood firm" in the waters of Jordan! Until ... finished that the Lord commanded Joshua to speak—That is, until every one of the mighty host had passed over. According to all that Moses commanded Joshua—The words do not refer to any special instructions which Moses had given to Joshua with reference to the crossing; they simply affirm that Joshua carried out all the commands which the Lord had given him, in accordance with the charge which he received from Moses at the time when he was first called. The people hasted and passed over—Their faith, like that of many of God's people, was, through the weakness of nature, blended with fears. But, perhaps, their "haste" may be viewed in a more favorable light, as indicating the alacrity of their obedience, or it might have been enjoined in order that the whole multitude might pass in one day.

11. The ark ... passed over, and the priests—The ark is mentioned as the efficient cause; it had been the first to move; it was the last to leave. In the presence of the people—Who, after their own hasty passage, were now standing on the western bank, contemplating the wonderful spectacle. This greatest miracle of the Old Testament had, at least, a million eye-witnesses. In connection with the Red Sea passage we hear travelers and scholars talk learnedly about east winds, and tides, and shallows, so that, whether intentionally or not, the fact, as a demonstration of divine power, is explained away or attenuated. But nothing of this is possible in the case of the passage of the Jordan. The fact must be taken as it stands. It was a miracle, or it was nothing. There has not been, and there can not be, any explanation of it on natural grounds.

12, 13. Reuben ... Gad ... Manasseh passed over armed. About forty thousand prepared for war—It was necessary that it should be expressly mentioned that these tribes performed the promise they had given, and in what manner they did so. Passed over before the Lord—It may imply "as in the sight of the Lord," "religiously," "conscientiously." The plains of Jericho—These plains, consisting of the higher terrace of the Jordan Valley, are almost seven miles broad. The mountains of Judea here recede somewhat from the river, and leave a level and fertile space, which, at the time of Joshua's invasion, was principally occupied by a forest of palms.

14. On that day the Lord magnified Joshua—As he had promised in chapter iii, 7. This was not, as Calvin remarks, the chief aim of the miracle. But it was, nevertheless, one important result of it. Confidence in a leader, from a human point of view, is one of the most essential requisites for success in war. Therefore, in the crossing of the Jordan we find Joshua directing all the operations, though the direction of affairs might have been put into other hands, that of Eleazer the high-priest, for instance. But this was the public attestation of the secret intimation God had given Joshua (chapter i, 5): "As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." From this point onward we see no signs of hesitation on the part of the Israelites; nothing but the most unwavering confidence in the divine mission, as well as in the extraordinary natural gifts of their leader. Feared him, as ... Moses, all the days of his life—Thenceforward his authority was as firmly established as that of his predecessors.

15-18. Command the priests ... come up out of Jordan—These verses seem designed to acquaint us with the main ground or reason to which, under God, it was owing that Joshua was so signally magnified on that occasion. Soles of the priests' feet were lifted up unto the dry land—The original is more vivid, were plucked up—that is, out of the soft, adhesive mud in the channel of the river. They dragged their feet out of the mud, and planted them on dry ground. The waters of Jordan returned unto their place—The imprisoned waters, like a strong steed relieved from the restraining hold of a master-hand, bounded forward in their course, and rushed in a mighty torrent to the sea.

19. Tenth day of the first month—That is, of the month Nisan, just forty years, lacking five days, after their departure out of Egypt. This was four days before the annual feast of the Passover, and on the very day when the paschal lamb was to be set apart for this purpose; God having so ordered in his providence that their entrance into the promised land should coincide with the period of that festival. Encamped in Gilgal—The name is given it by anticipation. It is doubtful whether there was either city or town in that place before the arrival of the Israelites. The site thus chosen has been fortunately identified, after more than three thousand years, by the intelligent labors of the members of the Palestine Survey. The name Jiljulieh, which is the same word as Gilgal, still clings to a mound about three miles southeast from the spot, where, apparently, the city of Jericho must have stood; near the beautiful fountain known as the Sultan's Spring, and close to the steep background of the limestone hills of Judah. Gilgal is noted as the first encampment of Israel in Canaan. Here was the scene of the circumcision, here the first Passover was celebrated in the land, and here the manna ceased to fall.

20. Those twelve stones—An event so wonderful could not be allowed to pass without a memorial, and a double one was appointed, worthy of it in expressive simplicity. Twelve of the large stones laid bare in the bed of the river were ordered to be carried over to the western side and raised on the upper terrace of the valley, in the center of the new camping ground, while a second twelve were placed on the spot in the channel where the feet of the priests had stood during the crossing. But such is the tendency to associate superstition with even the simplest religious memorials, among a rude people, that the circle of Gilgal seems ultimately to have become the seat of idolatry. The erection of cairns, or huge piles of stones, as monuments of remarkable incidents, has been common among all people, especially in the early and rude periods of their history. They are the established means of perpetuating the memory of important transactions, especially among the nomadic people of the East. The Egyptian obelisks, the stones at Hamath, supposed to be of Hittite origin, the dolmens and other megalithic monuments of the Celts, the Lagan or rocking-stones, are cases in point. The Scandinavians filled their country with them. Stonehenge and the Avebury stones are supposed by some to be, not temples nor burial-places, but memorials of some battle. Did Joshua pitch in Gilgal—A foundation of stone-work, or a mound of earth, was probably first laid, of considerable height, and then the twelve stones placed on the top of it; for twelve such stones as a man could carry six miles on his shoulder could scarcely have made any observable pile or pillar of memorial; but erected on such a base as we have supposed, they would be very conspicuous, and strikingly answer the purpose for which they were designed. Gesenius supposes they were set up in a circle, because of the name "Gilgal," meaning a wheel or circle.

21, 22. When your children shall ask ... What mean these stones—Nothing is more carefully inculcated in the law than the duty of parents to teach their children not only its precepts and principles, but the meaning of all the great historical events in their national existence. The Passover, the law itself, as well as certain outward and visible memorials, were to be the guarantees to future ages of the truth of the history related in the books of Moses and Joshua. The monument has disappeared, but the observance of the Passover and the whole law by the Jews now, more than three thousand years after the events related in these books, is a perpetual standing witness of the truth of the record. In like manner the Christian passover, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is appealed to by Christians of every denomination as a proof of the substantial truth of the narrative of the gospels.

23. The Lord your God dried up the waters—The parents are still supposed to be speaking to their children. It is remarkable that they address them as if they were living and present at the miraculous passage of the Jordan, whereas they then existed only in the loins of their fathers. But it is not uncommon for the sacred writers to speak of the nation of Israel, through every period of its existence, as if they were but of one generation, so that what really happened to those that lived at one age is said to have happened to those that lived at another, perhaps far remote. This gives us a very impressive idea of the light in which God viewed that people, namely, as morally one, as one great collective person continually subsisting. As the Lord your God did to the Red Sea—This is another instance of the usage just adverted to. He speaks of the Red Sea's being dried up from before the people he then addressed, whereas none of that generation were now living except himself and Caleb, the rest of them having perished in the wilderness through unbelief and rebellion.

24. That all the people of the earth might know—What was the use of this miracle? As it seems that the Hebrews could have entered the land without crossing the Jordan at all; and as, a little earlier or later in the season, or somewhat higher up, they could have crossed the Jordan without a miracle, what need was there for this gratuitous display of that divine power which is said to be never vainly nor idly exerted? We have not far to seek for an answer. In the first verse of the fifth chapter, the reason for the miracle is shown in the result which is produced: "And it came to pass, when all the kings of the Amorites, which were on the side of Jordan westward, and all the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the sea, heard that the Lord had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Israel, until we were passed over, that their heart melted; neither was their spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel." To produce this impression was, beyond question, the primary object of the miracle. We need not limit this expression to mean merely the nations of the land of Canaan, for this amazing miracle was, doubtless, designed to teach impressive lessons of divine power to the nations of all coming ages. That ye might fear the Lord ... forever—The tribes of Israel were now in the enemy's country, and they had learned afresh, as their fathers had done before them at the Red Sea, three important lessons: (1) that the power of Jehovah was unlimited; (2) that it would be exerted on their behalf as long as they were obedient to his commands; (3) that their leader was acting under the direct command and guidance of their Invisible Protector. These lessons were of universal application, and were to be impressed on generation after generation.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Ministers should set a good example of courage and firmness to their flocks.

Happy is he whose greatness is divinely conferred as the reward of faith and obedience!

Great interpositions or deliverances should be commemorated by suitable memorials or anniversaries.

From the Work.

WATERFORD, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a powerful meeting at Harris Chapel, resulting in twenty-three conversions and eighteen accession to the church. Some thirty or forty brethren and sisters seeking sanctification at the altar; among them were Baptists, Campbellites, etc. As Bishop Key said, in a District Conference in West Texas, "All sought; none opposed." Two have entered into the blessing on the circuit during the protracted season. The precious Savior has given us a powerful revival of religion at each of our five churches on the circuit. Hallelujah!

We have had during these meetings fifty-four conversions, and forty-four have joined the church. We have baptized ten children. The collections ordered by the Annual Conference have been taken (in cash and subscriptions), and already about one-third of it is paid. We expect to come up with everything paid in full.

We return thanks to Bros. J. J. Brooks and J. M. Huggin for valuable services rendered at Pleasant Grove and Marvin Churches; also we desire to return special thanks to our dear, venerable Bro. J. H. Brooks for his powerful sermons delivered, both at Pleasant Grove and Marvin. His presence was a benediction to us all. God bless the good people of this circuit!

Bro. J. J. Smith conducted one meeting for us at Ebenezer Church with much power, for which we are truly thankful to him. Bro. Smith is an evangelist of Clinton, Ky.; and I think any pastor and people are fortunate who secure his service in a revival meeting.

Bro. Paston, pastor of Pine Mountain circuit, and his people held a very successful camp meeting near Waterford; at which the present writer and family, together with a number of his people, were greatly benefited. Bless the Lord!

I suppose you will hear from Bro. Paston concerning this meeting. My people love our good paper, the ADVOCATE.

W. M. ADAMS.

A CHURCH DEDICATED.

MR. EDITOR: On Wednesday, September 19, at eleven o'clock, we dedicated our new church at Cato. About two years ago a small, but faithful band of Methodists determined to build a church here, and, with a determination that knows no failure, they prosecuted their work until recently, when the work was finished, pulpit, altar and all, except inside painting, which will, doubtless, be done soon; and we also expect to put a nice fence around it, and put out some nice shrubbery and shade trees. All honor to the faithful workers! May the good Lord bless them abundantly!

Our third Quarterly Conference was to embrace the third Sunday in September, and we arranged to protract the meeting, which we did, for five days; and had a delightful meeting, resulting in seven accessions to the church. Our presiding elder, Rev. P. A. Johnston, was at his post, and preached four times, to the satisfaction and edification of the church; also Rev. J. H. Foreman was with us, and preached us a gospel sermon. Then came Rev. C. McDonald (who we had engaged to dedicate our church), and remained with us two days, and preached four very fine sermons, to the perfect satisfaction of pastor and people. His dedicatory sermon was very appropriate, indeed, and perfectly delighted all that heard it.

Our church here will be a perfect gem when the painting is finished. We have had fine meetings all over the work, and I think the work is in a prosperous condition. We have added sixty-one members to our list up to date, and more to follow. We have two other good church-houses (just the halls) up and ready for use. Both will be good houses when finished.

Everything is prospering on the work except the finances. Crops being so very short, and so much church building and parsonage debt to pay, I am fearful my collections will be rather short, but will do the best I can. We ought to pay our Conference collection anyway. Yours fraternally,

A. D. MILLER.

CATO, Mississippi.

AMITE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The good Lord is blessing us wonderfully on Amite circuit. On the first Saturday in September we commenced a protracted meeting at Mt. Olive, which lasted five days. Results: Eleven accessions, eleven children baptized, the membership greatly revived, and a majority consecrated to the service of God. And on Saturday before the second Sunday in September we commenced a protracted meeting at Mt. Vernon, which lasted three days. Would have lasted longer, but we had worked up all the material. Results: Nine accessions to the church, one child baptized. This church and community have undergone a wonderful change in the last five or six years.

On Saturday before the third Sunday in September we commenced a protracted meeting at Cedar Grove, and we had a glorious revival meeting, lasting four days. Results: Twenty-six accessions to the church. At these three churches fifty-nine have been added. There have been several conversions on the work this year, and several family altars erected. Thirty-eight of those that joined were baptized.

These people are so kind to me that I feel as if I would like to stay here always.

And here I want to thank Bros. N. B. Young, E. J. Farman, my father, A. White, and Bros. George W. Huff, Thomas Dawson, and Dr. Whittington and J. B. Anders for valuable services rendered during the meetings.

M. L. WHITE,
Assistant P. C.

SOUTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Recently the Hon. W. H. Goodale and his wife, accompanied by their little daughter and Prof. Calhoun, passed this way and delivered a lecture to an enthusiastic audience at Haughton on temperance.

God has blessed our people at Doyline with a gracious revival. Besides a thorough revival in the church, some six or eight were converted, and quite a number led to seek perfect love. This week we closed a fine meeting at Haughton, resulting in a good work in the church; some six or eight conversions, and seven professions of entire sanctification. Revs. J. S. Sanders and A. T. Galloway assisted me at Haughton, and Revs. H. O. White and Robert Parvin at Doyline. I thank the Lord for what these dear preachers did for us under the Holy Spirit. And I must not fail to mention Sisters Sanders and Galloway as having done much in our revivals.

I have read Mr. Boland's "Problem," but it does not fit my experience. Thank God for an experience of sanctification as taught by the Bible and the Methodist Church!

Last Saturday and Sunday our quarterly meeting was held at Benton, and to a fine audience our dear presiding elder, Bro. Cassity, preached one of his best sermons, at the conclusion of which quite a number of Methodists and Presbyterians came forward as seekers of sanctification. Praise the Lord!—"salvation is rolling on."

CHINA GROVE CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: I promised several persons I would write something about the China Grove Camp Meeting, in Pike county, Miss.; but, hoping some other person would do so, I put it off until this late hour. In some respects it was among the best and the worst I ever attended. Religiously, it was good from the first to the last. A great many conversions, a large number joined the church. There were some things of striking interest. A missionary service was held; some addresses made. And as Bro. J. M. Weems, our presiding elder, has been appointed to go to Mexico to take charge of our mission work there (he has made us one of the best presiding elders we ever had on the Brookhaven district, and will live in the hearts of his people), they wanted to express their love for him by bidding him farewell; and it became an affecting scene. Another incident I will relate. A man was sent out as deputy sheriff, because he was brave and prudent, to protect the meeting. He did his work well. At the last night of the meeting he went to the altar for prayers. When the meeting closed, he refused to get up. Several remained, sung and prayed with him until about two o'clock in the morning. All were exhausted. A little girl was called on to pray. She did. Those present said they never heard anything like it. Her utterances were inspiration from heaven. When she closed, he got up, and said: "My trouble was unbelief; but if that child could pray that way, I must, I will, I do believe;" and was converted and received into the church, there and then, two o'clock in the morning.

China Grove Camp Ground is at the right place, and is doing great good for that country as such. The devil, with his malice, hate, induces a number of rowdies to go there every year, and annoy the people in their worship. Last year some of them were arrested, but let loose on good promises; so this year they resolved on breaking up the camp meeting. About fifty came, armed with pistols and whisky. They were mostly boys, led by men who claim some respectability where they live. On Saturday night I never witnessed such a scene. During the services at the stand, the songs, prayers and exhortations could not be heard for the yells and firing of pistols. The police force was not strong enough to attack them until the people sent off and got guns and ammunition. So by midnight the police was ready, and took several—among the rest three leaders—and put them under bonds. I suppose not an adult person closed his eyes to sleep Saturday night. It looked like war times; yet not a gun fired; and if the people will let the law have its force upon those they have, they will hardly be troubled any more. But the supporters of the camp meeting are among the best people in that country, and suffer themselves to be imposed upon. Strange to say; while some of those bad fellows belong to the surrounding neighborhood, many of them are from a long distance, even another State. Most of them were "kids," badly raised boys; but they were for once, defeated.

To the people of China Grove: Stick to your colors; push the battle to the gate, and the victory shall be yours.

St. Tammany Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: On account of the quarantine our St. Tammany Camp Meeting, which was to continue eight days, lasted but three, much to the regret of everyone. On Monday night of the meeting, just when everything was ripe for a mighty revival, Bro. West announced that of account of the appearance of yellow fever in different parts of the country the railroads were quarantined, and, fearing that he would have to walk a distance of seventy-five or eighty miles to get to his next appointment, he would be compelled to start several days beforehand in order to reach it in time. And as there were but two other ministers present except the writer, and they being worn out from much preaching, it was thought to continue any longer with the force we had to be almost impracticable.

The Lord was with us in mighty power, as the sequel will show. About forty conversions, with seventeen accessions to the church, a pledge of eleven persons to erect family altars, with acclamations of joy going up from the hearts of many at nearly every service, were, I think, a right manifestation of the power of the Spirit. Notwithstanding the rain on Sunday, there was a great number of people in attendance to listen to the truths of the everlasting gospel of the son of God as delivered by our veritable brethren—Revs. W. W. Hopper, T. S. West and J. D. Crymes. On Sunday night, Bro. Hopper preached a sermon from Romans viii, 1, 2, which I think ought to be published in every journal in the United States. At the conclusion of the sermon mourners flocked to the altar, tears of joy in profusion poured from the eyes of the Christians, accompanied by shouts of victory through the blood of the Lamb, while all joined in an old-fashioned Methodist handshaking. Thank God for handshaking? There is a wonderful power in it.

In a word, the meeting was a grand success. Sinners were converted, backsliders were reclaimed, Christians were warmed and the whole community spiritually benefited, and God's name honored and glorified. And this preacher, with all the earnestness of his soul, says, "Hallelujah! praise the Lord forevermore."

G. R. ELLIS.

Letter from a Presiding Elder.

MR. EDITOR: We are now in the midst of a yellow fever excitement. The announcement of fever in Jackson, Miss., created quite a panic. I presume at least one-half of the white population has left town. I have been kept from my appointment to-day by the excitement and the quarantine. We, however, have no yellow fever here, and the town is very healthy. People seem to get sick unless they should get up a case of the much-feared disease. The preachers are all in the city yet, but nothing can do except talk over the excitement and look after our families, or get ready to run. "He who runs may live to fight another day."

The preachers of the district are all in their places, and doing the work. We have a faithful band of itinerants, and the good Lord has blessed their labors this year in the conversion of hundreds of souls. I think we have had near six hundred additions to the church; and, unless excitement and the destructive rains blight our prospects, will make a fair showing at the reference in the collections ordered by the Conference. We have bought a district parsonage; have on hand one or two circuit parsonages; have built several new churches, and are at work on others. We have licensed several preachers, some of whom are doing good work.

Yours truly, J. F. EVANS.

GREEN VALLEY, Miss., Sept. 23, 1888.

Shocks of Glory.

Much has been said recently in meetings and the papers of cases of glory. Such a shock may imply this: The wave of religious feeling rises so high that the nervous system temporarily succumbs to it. Sometimes it takes the form of catalepsy, and the lie rigid for hours; at others, of a convulsive twitching and jerking; often it is merely helplessness. Such collapses often become epidemic, and persons with little or no religion are apt to yield to the contagion. These facts furnish no conclusive evidence that the person is in the enjoyment of much or any religion, but they may accompany the highest degrees of piety. Such manifestations are not confined to true religion, but abound in false systems. The Spinning Dervishes often sink unconcious, and remain so for a considerable period. It is largely a question of temperament and of the state of the community. In some instances it has become an impediment to the work of grace. In others, where the community people believe it to be the direct operation of God, producing that result as an evidence of his power, it has had the force of a miracle.

There is no reason to believe that God directly produces such states. Deep emotion in some persons occasions tears; in some, a solemn awe; in others, it may reach such a point as to cause unconciousness. It is better to maintain self-control; for, as the apostle says, "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." God does not design that a person shall yield himself so as to lose conciousness, even to the influences of divine grace. It would not be wise for persons in charge of religious meetings to check such manifestations, unless they come to be regarded as important in themselves (evidences of grace, or necessary to reciving it), or unless the number of instances becomes great. Emotion seldom rises too high. The evil in most cases is that the feelings which should naturally arise from conviction or from the joys of salvation are suppressed through pride, diffidence or undue self-conciousness in some of its forms. The evangelist needs not to turn aside from his work to distinguish between the source of true religious feeling, which is divine, and the varying effects upon the constitutions of different men of high emotion, which are natural. "Shocks of glory," in such cases, differ from shocks of paralysis, in that the shock of paralysis is an organic, and the shock of glory, so-called, a functional affection of the nervous system.

A minister was appointed to preach. The person in charge of the meeting impressed him that the need of the hour was a convincing and persuasive appeal to men to become Christians. The great day of the feast had come, and little had been accomplished. As he rose to preach a heavy storm burst upon the meeting. The sermon was postponed until the next day at the same hour. He spent the interval in meditation, prayer and Scripture reading, and slept but little. The time arrived; the congregation was vast. After preaching about forty minutes under deep feeling he became unconcious, but continued to preach, and followed the line of thought previously prepared. On passing into that state the sensations through the entire body were similar to those felt in any member thereof when in the condition commonly spoken of as "asleep." Not anticipating any thing further, he gave those feelings no further attention, and went on with the discourse. After a while he caught a glimpse of the congregation, then lost it and regained it, and concluded as he had intended to do.

From that day to this, the period of about fifteen minutes is as complete a blank as though he had been in a dead sleep. How is this experience to be explained? The occasion was favorable to the development of high religious emotion; all spirit of criticism on the part of the ministers and people was subordinate to the desire that men should be convicted of sin. The results of the appeal were unusual. Careful inquiry showed that he followed the exact train of thought, and as much of the language of previous preparation as an extemporaneous speaker would ever use, and never departed from it in the slightest degree during the period of unconciousness.

The explanation of the condition is that the nervous force involved in speaking with such earnestness to so large a multitude, taken in connection with a constitution not the strongest, and with its vitality impaired by anxiety continued through many hours with little sleep and little food, was so great that the brain could not maintain the evolution of the thought and conciousness at the same time. Had it proceeded further the power to maintain the erect posture and the co-ordination of the muscles might have been insufficient, in which case there would have been a full and ordinary "loss of strength," so called. In all that constitutes true religion there is no reason to think that he was in advance of the spiritual attainments of his ordinary Christian life at that period.

Similar experiences might occur generally if any value were attached to them, and where the nervous system is not in good tone. Nothing is so valuable to an intelligent Christian as the full possession of the faculties which God has given him; a doctrine plainly taught in the New Testament, inculcated by John Wesley, and the voluntary renunciation of which by some of his members was made by him a matter of discipline, and even expulsion from the society. —N. Y. Christian Advocate.

In the Pulpit.

The preacher in the pulpit must not fail to remember that he is a herald to proclaim authoritatively divinely revealed truths and to testify well-attested facts, most surely to be believed, not an advocate to argue and defend some thesis or proposition; that he is an ambassador to make known the will and announce the message of the Sovereign who has commissioned and sent him, not a philosopher to speculate curiously concerning a theory, or reason, however soundly, as to the origin or application of some principle in ethics or economics. Nor is he to regard the pulpit as the place for a learned lecture on apologetics in the defense of Christian truth, or for an elaborate refutation of prevalent heresy, or for the discussion of some passing aspect of social or political life. The pulpit is not a mere platform for the discussion of civil, municipal, or national affairs, nor a rostrum for the display of oratory, nor a forum where intellectual gladiators may enter into contest about the affairs of the commonwealth or the condition of the State. But it exists for the one express purpose of preaching Christ and him crucified—Christ Jesus who is the Resurrection and the Life—Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God, through whom we have now received the reconciliation, and in whom we have our redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses according to the riches of his grace. What a theme! Surely it demands the most devout, earnest and prolonged meditation from him who would wisely and advisedly speak of it. Careful, honest, thorough preparation is indispensable to one who would acceptably and profitably attempt to persuade men to acknowledge the Lord Jesus as their Master, and to give themselves to him. In such preparation much of the power and usefulness of the preacher lies. The apostolic injunction in this matter is, "Give heed to reading, to exhortation, to teaching. * * * Be diligent in these things: give thyself wholly to them that thy progress may be manifest to all."—Homiletic Review.

What the world most needs, and is perishing for the lack of, is not mere religious talk, but the bright shining of holy life on the part of those professing godliness. "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou has sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me." Were the churches, just as they are, to turn out en masse, and warn sinners to flee from the wrath to come, greater evil than good would probably be the result. Were the mass of true believers, on the other hand, to "wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb," and to tarry before God in prayer and supplication until they were "all filled with the Holy Ghost," "then with great power would they give witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace would be upon them all."—Dr. Asa Mahan.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age. Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FISH.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Briefs.

George Herbert said of the Bible: "It opens to me millions of surprises." Sir John Herschel said: "All human discoveries and inventions seem to be made for the purpose of more and more confirming the truths of the Bible." Flavel said: "The Bible teaches the best way of living, the noblest way of suffering, and the most comfortable way of dying."

The wealth of the principal nations is set down as follows: The United States, $57,000,000,000; France, $46,500,000,000; Great Britain, $46,000,000,000; Germany, $25,000,000,000; Russia, $15,000,000,000; Austria, $14,000,000,000; Italy, $8,000,000,000; Spain, $7,500,000,000; Asia, $65,000,000,000; Africa, $5,000,000,000; British Columbia, $5,000,000,000.

A good thought, and over which we may ponder with profit, is that of a writer about Sunday-schools, who says: "What we now need is not more study of the new methods, but more study of the child: a better realization that we are God's interpreters, not alone of truths held in words, but of those written from the beginning in our hearts and all around us. Would that every Sunday-school worker could be brought into contemplation of the child and his relation to it and to God"!

Mr. Wesley said: "Unless we can take care of the rising generation, the present revival of religion will last only the age of a man."—That is as true now as it was when it was spoken. In this connection, it is worthy of remark that Mr. Wesley "prepared a sermon to children from Psalm xxxiv, 11, in which he used no word having more than two syllables; and this sermon he preached again and again, as opportunity offered." Mr. Wesley was a long way ahead of some of us to-day; and if he were living now, he would be ahead of everybody in adapting his methods of work to the necessities of the times.

We published last week an account of the organization and the Constitution of the Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood. We are delighted to see such a society started at Vanderbilt, and would be more delighted to know that every one of our colleges—male and female—had some sort of missionary organization connected with it. We read in one of our exchanges, the other day, that "among the elective studies at Morgan Park Theological Seminary is one on modern missions, taught by Dr. Hurlbert." This is on the right line. We believe most firmly that our young people should not only be taught the truths of religion, but should be taught their obligation to spread those truths. Every church school, of whatever grade, and every Sunday-school, should have its missionary society and its missionary work. Through these agencies, properly conducted, there will be disseminated a large amount of missionary intelligence, thousands of young souls will come to be filled with missionary zeal, much and valuable mission work will be done with the energy of young minds, and thousands of dollars will annually flow into the missionary treasury.

Bishop Taylor has expressed the opinion that there would be no real cause for alarm if Stanley should not be heard from for a year or two yet.

The Gentleness of Jesus.

In the Scriptures it sometimes happens that the use of one word explains many passages. In the use of the word "gentleness," as applicable to Christ, Paul has thrown a clearer light upon many passages, both of the Old and the New Testament, and revealed, as by a flash, the chief trait in the character of our Lord. The word is used but once in relation to Christ, and yet, as a word descriptive of his character, it is the best word that has been used. When Paul speaks of the "gentleness of Christ," we have a concise and clear commentary on the words of the prophet: "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs in his arms and carry them in his bosom. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the streets. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench." After reading Paul's expression, we know what David meant when he said: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. He healeth the broken in heart." Paul's words also give a new and more precious view to Christ's invitation: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart."

In the life of our Lord, as it is given us by the evangelists, the ruling spirit was the spirit of gentleness. Everywhere he moves among the people with more than the gentleness of a woman. His wise words are spoken, his mighty works done, in a quietness that is sublime. How gentle was the touch of his hand, carrying healing to the diseased! How noiseless was the tread of his feet, pressing the meadow or the mountain-side! The gentle Christ! It is simply impossible to conceive of any other Christ. Did the Psalmist personate Christ, when he said: "Thy gentleness hath made me great"? Surely the greatness of our Lord, in a large measure, is in his gentleness. His was a ministry of gentleness. His indignation arose only in the presence of hypocrisy. In the presence of ignorance or misfortune or misery or sin his heart poured out only mercy and gentleness. Love is all-powerful, and gentleness is the beauty of love; and by it our Lord won the attention and the attendance of the crowds upon his ministry. Oh, preacher, study the gentle Christ, who was "not only the divinest, but the gentlest man that ever trod this scene of passion and strife!"

Classical and Technical Training.

There is a notion entertained by many that a classical training is, in the nature of things, antagonistic to a technical training. So far does this idea rule that the two are generally separated in the schools. The boy that elects the classical course of study is by that election shut out of the technical course, and vice versa. The courses are so arranged that the student who compasses one has no time for the other. Each course is so full that not even an extraordinary student can carry both on at the same time. We are beginning to think that this is a mistake. We think, perhaps, it would be better to lengthen the time and mix the studies. If so much Latin and Greek must be studied before graduation, let the time be lengthened for its acquisition, and let the technical training be given to fill in that lengthened time. The pursuit of one will be a recreation from the other, and thus, we think, both will be more readily and more thoroughly acquired.

We have been brought to this view by observing a young student during this summer. Last June he finished the Junior year in one of our colleges. During the summer he has devoted himself to classical pursuits and to technical pursuits, carrying them along together. In the classics he has studied Sophocles' "Antigone," "Crito" and "Apology" of Plato, Aristophanes, on "The Clouds," Thucydides' "Sicilian Expedition;" a part of Demosthenes, on "The Crown," and a part of Xenophon's "Memorabilia." In technics, from a little crude material and a few simple implements, he has constructed a steam engine out and out, and has it running, to the delight and admiration of all his young friends. We have been watching him very closely to see how these two pursuits, which are usually looked upon as antagonistic to each other, would affect each other. We fail to see that either has been a hindrance to the other. We think we see that each has been a help to the other. When wearied with his classics, this boy would repair to his little shop and work away at the construction of his engine. When tired of his tools, he would return to his books with a refreshed and invigorated mind; and we think has done more on both lines of work than he would have done on one line alone. Anybody of the least reflection can see how the one pursuit was a complete rest from the other—rest for mind and body.

President Brunner, of Hiwassee College, said, in this Advocate, a few weeks ago, that all the technical schools in the South that he knew anything about had failed. If technical training is a necessity of these times, as a good many people think, and if those that were entirely technical have invariably failed, perhaps, if our school managers would arrange the college courses so as to include both classical and technical training, the whole problem would be solved; and solved in a way that will give the rising generation the benefit of all the training that mind and hand can receive.

In the Field of Ephron.

BY W. C. BLACK, D. D.

"No foot of land do I possess,
Nor cottage in this wilderness."

So sings the Methodist itinerant, as he hurries to and fro on his life-errand of saving souls; and the words of his song are not literally true. Cottage, farm and city-lot he may never own, but one small spot of ground, sooner or later, he does possess—some "field of Ephron," with its Machpelah cave, in which he may bury his dead out of sight. And, unlike "the father of the faithful," he usually finds it necessary to make more than one purchase of "the sons of Heth." So it is, at least, with me. Two of my precious babies—Otey Raiford and Ernest Montgomery—sleep in the churchyard of old Bethesda—the church of my mother and of my boyhood days. This is in central Mississippi, near Hazlehurst. Eva Eunice, a sweet little cherub, after brightening our various parsonage-homes for twelve summers, was laid to rest on the banks of the "Father of Waters," in the cemetery at Natchez. And now our darling Cora Estelle lies beneath the sod on the eastern border of the State.

These scattered Machpelahs are a grief to the parental heart. Although you know that what you inter is only the body, and that the body is but dust, you can but wish that all your loved ones could sleep in the same necropolis. And there are times when one finds a melancholy pleasure in visiting the sepulchre and moistening its sod with tears. That pleasure you are deprived of when your dead are buried here and there.

Our darling Cora passed away on Monday, September 24, the day we were cut off from the world by the rigid quarantine regulations indneed by the yellow fever panic. She lacked a few days of being fourteen years of age. For nearly four years she had been "of the household of faith." She was of more than average intellectual sprightliness. She was also exceedingly vivacious and companionable, and was a general favorite in every circle in which she moved. Her most striking characteristic was kindness. She was kind to everybody and everything. In her estimation the greatest of all sins was cruelty. With her the meanest of all boys was the one who would maltreat cats, dogs and other domestic animals. As I have watched her manifestations of kindness, and her intense indignation against acts of cruelty, I have sometimes thought that if God spared her to womanhood, she would become an Elizabeth Fry, or a Florence Nightingale. Her career on earth is ended; but has she ceased to exist?

Let him who can, find solace for a grief-stricken spirit in the cold negations of a skeptical philosophy; but, as for me, I will cling to the old faith. To me the tomb is only the vestibule of a celestial temple that is infinitely spacious and transcendently glorious. "The grim monster," as we call him, is but the friendly hand that breaks the bars of our mundane prison and allows the soul to unfold its golden pinions and soar aloft, far, far

"Beyond the bounds
Where stars revolve their little rounds."

Yes, I as firmly believe as I believe in my own existence that my departed dear one has already found sympathetic companionship and employment congenial to her benignant spirit. And who can describe the benevolent activities of "the saints in light"? Who can say how multifarious are their ministries of mercy? May not we ourselves be beneficiaries thereof? "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"

"Over the river they beckon to me,
Loved ones that have crossed to the further side;
The gleam of their many robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the dashing tide.
* * * * * * *
And I sit and think as the sunset's gold
Is flushing river and hill and shore:
I shall one day stand by the waters cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar;
I shall watch for a gleam of the glistening sail;
I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand;
I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale
To the better shore of the spirit land;
I shall know the loved ones who have gone before;
And joyfully sweet will the meeting be
When over the river, the peaceful river,
The angel of death shall carry me!"

There are many itinerants who, like Dr. Black, can think of their dead as "their scattered dead," but they also share with him the faith that "them that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with him;" and then they will look upon the faces of "their gathered ones," and rejoice together in the place where no parting is, and where no sickness comes, and where

"The smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul."

EDITOR.

The Funeral of Rev. John G. Jones.

MR. EDITOR: We have just laid the remains of the venerable and reverend John G. Jones, of precious memory, in the peaceful grave. He died as he had lived—calmly trusting in the Crucified One. He was at his daughter's home in Hazlehurst, and seemed to enjoy his usual health until a few days before his decease. He passed away early on Monday morning last, and was clear and collected to the closing hour. He was eighty-four years of age, and was worn out; so that it required but the slightest attack

"To stop the weary wheels of life."

At his request, his remains were brought to Port Gibson and laid by the side of his once devoted wife, who had, by a few years only, preceded him in the attainment of the new life. The funeral services were conducted in the church, and were participated in by Reverend Bros. Mounger, Nicholson, R. J. Jones, Plank (of the Presbyterian Church) and the undersigned. Several short addresses were delivered, which will be furnished for the next number of the Advocate.

"My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof! And he saw him no more. And he took up the mantle of Elijah that fell from him." Alas! for us, for there is none who can take up and wear the mantle of the ascended prophet. Very truly yours,

C. R. MARSHALL.

What Our Papers Are Saying.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate sounds this note on a most important subject. Speaking of the "Latent Power in the Church," it says:

What vast power lies latent in our churches. We talk about the latent power in steam—latent till it was called out and set its giant arms to turning massive machinery and rolling cars on the iron track. We talk of the latent power sleeping in the clouds till science drew its thunder and made it abolish distance, outstripping the wings of the eagle, and flashing messages across rolling seas to distant continents. Yet what are these compared to the spiritual power sleeping in the hearts, the minds, the consciences, of our millions of members? O, if the fire of heaven were to touch all these latent forces and wake them up—energize and set them vigorously to work, what mountains they could lift and cast into the sea! If such multitudes were filled with faith and fired by the Holy One, who gave tongues of fire on the day of Pentecost, every mountain would be removed, every valley be filled up, to make a highway for the coming of the Lord in millennial glory.

On the "Sin of Neglect," the Episcopal Methodist, after showing that it is as bad as positive transgression and leads to open rebellion and a loss of Christian character, says:

And we feel sure that this neglect begins at home. There is enough respect for public opinion to keep a man, at least, nominally devoted to the church of his choice, at least, as far as public acts are concerned. He attends the Sabbath services with some regularity; he contributes to the church funds; he desires the welfare of the church, and speaks of it as his choice and preference: but, alas! he has no family altar; the voice of prayer is never heard in his home; the Bible is not studied, nor does he retire for pious meditation and secret prayer. Soon he neglects the class meeting and objects to it. Then the prayer meeting is gradually ignored, and at last excuses are prodigal for his neglect of public worship. All this time he is absorbed in his worldly affairs, and manifests a commendable energy in pushing them to greater prosperity. And with him time becomes more valuable than eternity. The sin of omission is strongly entrenched in his nature, and really he becomes spiritually dead. And among these people are found the complainers and disturbers of Zion. The church might be better off without them, but they are to be borne with, and carefully nursed, if haply they may yet be saved.

The divine power inherent in Christianity is brought out in this short, clear note in the Texas Christian Advocate:

A marked superiority of Christianity over other religions is manifested in its power of appropriation. The religions that are of human origin always wane before the light of increased knowledge. An advance in scientific knowledge, a better understanding of nature and its relations, is certain death to every form of idolatrous worship. The discovery of nature's laws, the utility of electricity and steam, and every form of scientific knowledge—all make sad havoc of thunder gods and the various forms of superstitious religion. But Christianity, with the power divine, has been able to appropriate all these to her service. They are but the illustrations of her doctrines, while they proclaim that the heavens declare the glory of Christianity's Author, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. The weapons of the enemy have been turned against them, and made to do service to the Lord Christ. Every attempt to overthrow this religion has fallen out to its furtherance. How futile all the opposition of the skeptic when all his attempts to crush the gospel only help to extend its influence! What a source of encouragement and confidence to Christians when, by the powers of rejuvenation, the gospel religion is able to survive all the mistakes of its friends and turn to its furtherance the opposition of its enemies.

Notes.

The number of churches in our principal cities are said to be this: Philadelphia, 675; New York, 432; Chicago, 371; Brooklyn, 300. The largest number of Methodist churches is in Philadelphia, which reports 107.

Quaint old Matthew Henry has these words in his exposition of the parable of the "Prodigal Son:"

"His father saw him"—there were eyes of mercy; he "had compassion"—there was a heart of mercy; he "ran" to meet him—there were feet of mercy; he put his arms around his neck—there were arms of mercy; he "kissed him"—there were kisses of mercy; he "said"—there were words of mercy; "Bring forth the best robe"—there were deeds of mercy. Wonders of mercy; all mercy!

This, from the Congregationalist, inspires us with hope in a good direction:

Cases are on record where men have declined flattering business and professional offers in order to enter the ministry; but rarely does a man refuse a $5,000 position as a baseball player in order to pursue theological studies. And yet, Mr. Stagg, of the last graduating class at Yale University, has done just this thing. There is need of muscular Christianity in the pulpit as well as on the ball field.

One of the strangest sights in this land is a Christian, with the New Testament on his lap and eighteen centuries of church history at his elbow, and yet opposed to foreign missions. The recipient of the gospel and its unnumbered and precious blessings through the direct agency of some missionary, and yet never giving anything to help a missionary carry the same blessings to others in the same need—that is the extraordinary position of some good people.

We give from an exchange the definition of a word which is on a great many people's lips; also a definition of the definition:

Mr. Herbert Spencer's famous "Formula of Evolution," runs: "Evolution is a change from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite coherent heterogeneity, through continuous differentiations and integrations," which being interpreted into plain English by Mr. Kirkman, the mathematician, means: "Evolution is a change from a nohowish, unlikeboutable all-alikeness to a somehowish and in-general-likeboutable not-all-alikeness, by continuous somethingelsefications and stick-togetherations."

An exchange has this:

A boy in a printing office, having received some "copy" to set up, in which were many Scripture quotations, came to the foreman and asked whether he should strictly "follow copy." "Certainly; why not?" said the foreman. "Because this is not like the Bible." "How do you know that?" "Because I learned some of those texts in Sunday-school, and I know that two of them are different from the Bible." "Well, then," said the foreman, "you need not 'follow copy' there; set them up as they are in the Book."

The same incident has occurred in this office several times during the present editor's reign.

We commend this from the Evangelist:

Charles Lamb used to say that when he took in hand Milton or Shakespeare, he felt a disposition to begin his reading by saying grace over them, as he would when taking his daily meals. Suppose we should try the suggestion, and always "ask a blessing" upon what we are about to read, or have read! The experiment would certainly do us no harm. But, perhaps, if we had to begin our reading in this way, many a book would drop from our hands and not be read at all! And yet is not this just the thing that ought to be done? Suppose we give it a fair trial, and see if the lines of our reading are not improved.

The reason some people render for not giving to support foreign missions is, "There is need for mission work at home." There is need at home, the sorest need; but to give all effort and money to home work does not accord with God's plan, as that plan has been developed in the Acts of the Apostles. God's plan is not to convert everybody in one place before another place is sought out. The sixteenth chapter of Acts settles that point. Paul was "forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the Word in Asia." Then he sought to enter Illyricum, but the Spirit said, "No." There were hordes of unconverted souls in those places, yet the Spirit hindered his going. He instructed him to cross the sea into Europe—a foreign land—and there preach the gospel. It was that strange, yet wise movement in missionary operations which gave the gospel to the Christian who to-day opposes foreign mission work.

Personals.

The dispatches say that Rev. Sam Jones will begin a ten-days' meeting in Nashville, Tenn., next week.

The Louisiana State Fair will open at Baton Rouge, October 22, and continue six days.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation from M. L. Scovell, secretary, to the third Annual Fair at Shreveport, La., November 5-10. The secretary has our thanks.

A private note from Rev. S. S. Keener, presiding elder of the Opelousas district, says that though several of the preachers have been quite sick during the summer, "the district is in pretty good condition, spiritually." He also informs us that his brother, Rev. Christian Keener, has transferred to the Holston Conference for his health. We are sorry that Bro. Keener's health necessitated this change. He has our prayers for his recovery and for success in his new field.

A book-reviewer in the London Methodist Times, speaking of an American book, says "the style is third-rate Americanese." "That's English, you know."

Mr. Moody goes to California this winter to engage in evangelistic work.

Rev. Dr. R. S. Moran, of New York, for many years a member of the North Carolina Conference, is dead.

Rev. J. M. Beard and wife, of Rayne Memorial Church, have been sorely bereaved in the loss of their infant son, Frank Melville, who died on Wednesday, October 3. Our sorrowing friends have the sympathy of the church in their great loss.

George Bancroft, the historian, celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday October 2. He is still "hale and hearty."

Bishop Keener and family have returned to the city. The Bishop's health is good, he having kept it up by preaching every Sunday during the summer. We wish all our preachers could have heard his talk, last Monday, in our preachers' meeting, on the subject of "Pulpit Themes." It was short and edifying to the brethren. The Bishop leaves this week for Fayetteville, Tenn., where he presides at the session of the Tennessee Conference, which convenes on the seventeenth instant.

Bro. E. Booth, of this city, has received a note from Mr. H. P. Sawamura, of the Chinese legation in Washington. Since the members of the commission were here, a few months ago, they have visited various parts of our country and Canada, and, having returned to Washington City, expect to remain there some weeks. Mr. Sawamura writes to Bro. Booth for an introduction to his "best friend" in Washington, and says: "I wish to go to one of the churches here every Sunday. I am anxious to keep Sunday holy." Some home folks might profit by this example.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes from Lauderdale circuit, October 2: "Our meeting at Linwood, Kemper county, closed with nine results on September 23, after running eight days. There were quite a number converted, several professed to be sanctified; the whole church quickened into life and activity. Bros. Langford, Little, Jones and others, who know of Linwood's former trouble, will rejoice with us over this grand victory. Bro. Wade Jemmison, our (not yours) sanctified Methodist exhorter, was with us, and did most of the work, both in and out of the pulpit. Bro. Baugh, a Missionary Baptist, and Bro. S. Kelton, a Free-will Baptist, and Bro. Bounds, a Protestant Methodist, were with us a part of the time."

—Rev. A. D. McVoy, Jr., writes from Mansfield, La., October 3: "I have now had charge of our church ever since the first of July; Bro. Keener, the regular pastor, having had to discontinue work on account of feeble health. He has been for some time among the mountains of North Carolina, where, I am happy to say, he is regaining his strength."

—Rev. T. L. Mellen, writing from Jesson, Miss., October 4, says: "My trip up to the country was out to Bethel church, Caseyville, Scotland circuit, to help Bro. Howell. We had a sanctified uproar!' There were five or six accessions, and twelve or fifteen professed conversion. The meeting goes on with altar crowded with penitents and believers all happy—Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians shouting together! On September 29, Bro. Stevens had licensed Wm. Forsythe, son of our late Bro. J. L. Forsythe, and the Scotland Quarterly Conference had recommended him for admission into the Annual Conference."

—Rev. A. C. Flowers, of Franklinton, La., says, October 5: "Our work is doing well, though we are not on a run like some circuits I can hear of. Our people are very cautious on a spiritual move. Pray for us. We expect to bring all our claims."

—Rev. J. W. Ellison writes from Greensburg, La., October 5: "The summer work resulted in fifty accessions to the church, and, we trust, all the churches revived and confirmed in faith. Bro. Ellis, our beloved presiding elder, was with us, holding his last quarterly meeting on this circuit, and preached to the delight and profit of all present. I am recovering from my bruises and bone breaking, which happened a short time ago. I had an arm and rib broken, and some painful bruises by being thrown from my buggy; my horse, having slipped into some quicksand, surged with great force to get out, drew the buggy into the same hole. This is my last year with this good people. God grant that we may all meet above, where partings will be no more!"

—Rev. J. F. Wynn writes from Montgomery, La., October 4: "We have just closed a meeting in Johnson's Bend, resulting in some bright conversions. Fifteen members received into the church, and five others to be received at my next appointment. Bro. R. H. Roberts did most of the preaching."

—Bro. Wimberly writes from Grand Cane, La., whither he had gone for recuperation: "After a six weeks' spell of fever and much suffering I am again on my feet, and hope I will soon be able to resume my work. I have lost four months by sickness this year, which will affect my report at Conference. I thank God for my recovery and take courage."

—Rev. George T. Ashley, of Trinity circuit, Louisiana Conference, writes October 2: "The revival continues to go on, on the Trinity circuit. The churches are aroused to a sense of their duty, and are doing it with a zeal truly encouraging. The brethren in one place protracted their prayer meeting a week without any preaching, and several sound conversions were the result. Over eighty have been added to the church this year. There are five progressive Sunday-schools and seven active weekly prayer meetings on the work. To the Lord be all the praise!"

—Rev. T. Cameron, Starkville, Miss., October 1, 1888, says: "We have finished our new church recently, and it is simply beautiful. Starkville quarantined very closely, but nobody left on account of the scare. But it closed my meeting for me before I was ready."

YELLOW FEVER.—In every place where the yellow fever made its appearance there has been considerable abatement during the past week. No new cases have appeared at Jackson, Miss. For the reason that some of the sick are still confined to their rooms, the Board of Health still maintains its quarantine. The news from Decatur, Ala., is that no new cases were reported on Monday; so that we may hope that the disease there has about run its course. Monday's report from Jacksonville, Fla., said there were fifty new cases and four deaths. Total number of cases, 3,208; deaths, 295. Our city is as healthy as usual.

Port Gibson Female College.

Port Gibson Female College opened well on September 18, there being an increase of over last session both of boarding and day pupils. We had not proceeded a week before the great panic came, caused by the announcement of the appearance of yellow fever in Jackson, Miss. The apprehension and the incidents here were like those occurring generally through the land. But the college moved on steadily in all departments, not suffering greatly from the alarm. The few who left are returning, and shortly we will be going forward with undiminished numbers. Perfect health obtains. Our faculty is faithful and most competent, and our pupils study with enthusiasm. We are encouraged, and look for the best results.

E. H. MOUNGER.

PORT GIBSON, MISS., Oct. 1, 1888.

A Presiding Elder Quarantined.

MR. EDITOR:—Please allow me to say to the preachers of the Jackson district that I have been shut up in Jackson during the panic and unable to communicate with anyone. Hope to be able to get to my quarterly meetings as soon as the quarantine is raised. D. A. LITTLE.

OCTOBER 5, 1888.

Literary Notes.

It is said that much unpublished correspondence of celebrities of the Revolutionary and Constitutional periods has been included in the volume on the Randolphs which Mr. Moncure Conway has prepared, and which the Putnams are about to publish.

Lee and Shepard, Boston, have ready a new edition of Elaar's "A Physician's Problems." The work consists of seven profound essays, which are intended as a contribution to the natural history of those outlying regions of thought and action whose domain is in the "debatable ground" of brain, nerve and mind.

The interesting series of articles which have appeared in the Critic, under the title of "Authors at Home," will soon be issued this fall in book form from the press of Cassell & Co. It will contain twenty-six sketches of noted writers. If these are as interesting as when they were printed first—and they are the same unless improved—they are well worth having and reading.

Mother Stewart will soon publish "Memories of the Crusade," a narrative of the uprising of the women of Ohio against the liquor traffic.

Seventy per cent. of the books taken from the Boston Public Library are fiction and juvenile works. "Ben Hur" is the most popular book in that department; eight or ten copies of it are catalogued. Some of the other books in constant demand just now are "The Last Days of Pompeii," Drummond's "Natural Law," Steven's "Around the World on a Bicycle," and "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

A cheap addition of Dr. McCook's "Tenants of an Old Farm" is in press, for sale during the coming autumnal season.

A new edition of Lanman's Sanscrit Reader is now in press. It will include the long delayed "Notes," and these Notes will also be issued separately for the convenience of students.

We are sorry to hear that the statement that the seventh volume of Mr. Lecky's "History of England" would soon be ready for publication has just been contradicted by the author.

Francis Parkman is preparing the last volume of his great work on the French colonization of America. It will cover the time between the periods treated in "Frontenac and Montcalm and Wolfe."

Mr. Edward P. Clark, of the Evening Post, has published in pamphlet form his political satire, "The Greatest of Living Statesmen," which appeared first in the columns of the journal named.

"Dogmatic Theology," the new work by Dr. William G. T. Shedd, which the Scribners announce, is the fruit of forty years of severe study.

The Century for the coming year is to contain Charles De Kay's series of illustrated papers on Ireland, for some time in preparation and already announced. They will deal with the ethnology, customs, literature, etc., of the country.

BOOKS.

THE TEMPLE OF PRAISE. By Rev. E. A. Hoffman and W. H. Pontius. Newhall & Evans Music Co., publishers, 171 W. Fourth St., Cincinnati, O. Sample copy, postpaid, 35 cents; $30 per hundred. Specimen pages free.

It is designed for Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, young people's praise meetings, associations of Christian endeavor, the church and the home.

THREE HUNDRED TESTIMONIES IN FAVOR OF RELIGION AND THE BIBLE BY DISTINGUISHED INDIVIDUALS. By Rev. T. Harrison, A. M., D. D. Robert Clarke & Co., Cincinnati. Price $2.

One object of the work is to refute the erroneous statement made so frequently by illiterate and malicious infidels, that men of education and intelligence can not believe in religion and the Bible. The fact is, the great majority of them have not only believed in religion, but have spoken in the highest praise of its excellence, and have labored in a variety of ways to promulgate its principles and carry out its requirements. Another object is to satisfy honest inquirers after truth that scientific men do not see any real discrepancy between science and the Bible. It is undoubtedly a good book for ministers of the gospel.

IN WAR TIMES AT LAROSE BLANCHE. By M. E. M. Davis. D. Lothrop Company Boston. For sale by Erich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price $1 25.

This book takes us back to the stirring times of twenty-five years ago. It brings to mind the "ole plantation" and "the darkies" and "war times," and "hard times" and "scary times," with all the "ups and downs" of those four years of strife and blood and savagery. To all who have lived on the "ole plantation" among "the darkies" this story will be read with special and appreciative interest.

PERIODICALS.

—The Eclectic Magazine, for this month, contains twenty articles of value, culled from foreign literature. The variety of good things which this monthly gives each number is a little remarkable and is a high commendation. If anyone would have the best periodical literature from across the water they can get it always in the Eclectic. E. R. Pelton, New York. Price $5.

—Good Housekeeping, which is one of the best—if not the best—household magazines in existence, commences its eighth volume with the issue of November 10. Published fortnightly for $2 50 a year. Single copies 10 cents. Sold by all newsdealers.

—Our Little Ones and the Nursery is a periodical for the "wee ones," and it is one of the best. The October number is especially bright, and the pictures will charm all the little people who take a peep at them. Russell Publishing Company, Boston. Price $1 50 a year.

—Among the many good things which the October Wide Awake contains is a sketch of Daniel Webster in His New Hampshire Home, by Amanda B. Harris. There are twenty-one illustrations, showing Webster at various ages and scenes, and things about his home. The other articles in this number will please the majority of the young people. This magazine is cheap at $2 40. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston.

—The October Century closes the thirty-sixth volume and eighteenth year of that periodical. The frontispiece of the number is a portrait of the late Emma Lazarus, the Jewish poet of New York; and in the body of the magazine appears a sympathetic study of the genius and personality of this most interesting woman. The opening illustrated article of the number is a paper by Richard Jefferies, on "An English Deer Park," with illustrations by Alfred Parsons and Bryan Hook. Theodore Roosevelt closes his Ranch series with an anecdotal paper on "Frontier Types," the text being expanded by a number of Remington's studies of Western character and incidents. Another illustrated article is on "American Machine Cannon and Dynamite Guns." But to most readers the most interesting and important illustrated article of the number will doubtless be George Kennan's description of "The Tomsk Forwarding Prison," in his series on the Siberian Exile System; The "Topics of the Time" and "Open Letters" are valuable departments of this magazine. Century Company, New York. Price $4.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object, plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Our Young People.

ANGELINA.

BY EUDORA S. BUMSTEAD.

My dolly looks so gentle
And innocent and sweet,
You'd think I had no trouble
To keep her fresh and neat:
And yet of all the dollies
I really do suppose
My little Angelina
Is hardest on her clothes.

She sits in dusty corners,
She lies on dewy grass;
She's bound to play with Towser
If he should chance to pass.
I've argued, coaxed and scolded,
But after all my care
She hasn't in her wardrobe
A garment fit to wear.

I had to go a shopping;
I went to Bargain Store
(You know that's mamma's rag-bag,
Behind the closet door);
I bought some cloth and muslin
To suit my pretty miss;
They cost me twenty dollars
(A dollar means a kiss).

And mamma says my dolly
Is not so much to blame;
She knows a little person
That does the very same;
She says when I'm as careful
As ever I can be,
My little Angelina
Will pattern after me.

—The Youth's Companion.

How a Little Boy Camped Out.

Once there was a little boy who all summer long had been very anxious to camp out over night. Behind his mother's house was a large garden—as large as a whole city block—and at the far end of it was a little knoll, or hill, with rocks cropping out. It was behind this hill that little Paul wished to camp, for from there the house would be out of sight, and it would be "just like truly camping." So his mother gave him a large old crumb cloth for a tent; a pair of blankets and a sofa-cushion for a bed; a tin pail full of bread, cold meat, and hard-boiled eggs, and some gingerbread and apples for his breakfast; also a bottle of milk, a tin cup, a wooden plate, and a small package of pepper and salt. She then gave him some cotton to put in his ears—to keep out little bugs and things. She had the hired man help him drive the stakes and fasten the crumb-cloth over them. The hired man, of his own accord, brought from the barn a large bundle of hay to spread under the blankets, so as to make a comfortable bed. By twilight everything was ready, and Paul kissed his mother, his aunt, and his big sister good-bye, and, shouldering his cross-bow, marched away to the "Rocky Mountains"—as he called the little knoll.

He pinned back the doors of his tent with big catch-pins, and then sat down on the ground. Everything was dreadfully still; but the bright tin pail and the bottle of milk looked very comfortable in the soap-box cupboard; the brave cross-bow, with its pin-pointed arrows, promised safety; while the blankets, sofa-cushion, and the soft hay were all that any reasonable camper could ask for.

But it was so dreadfully still! Not even the smallest baby-breeze was stirring; through a hole in the crumb-cloth shone a star, and the star made outdoors seem stiller yet. Paul unbuttoned one shoe and then the other, and sat for a while listening. Then suddenly kicking off his shoes, he scrambled under the blankets and lay quite still. He was a very small boy, and somehow camping out wasn't delightful in every way.

* * * * * * *

It was nearly half-past eight. Mamma was knitting, the aunt was sewing, and the big sister was standing on the dictionary, rehearsing her elocution exercise. Nobody but mamma heard the back hall door softly open, and the tiny feet go stealing upstairs. When the elocution exercise was over, mamma said she must go and find the mate of the stocking she was knitting.

So she went upstairs; but, before looking for the stocking, she went into Paul's room. There, in the starlight, she saw the brown curly head cuddled into its customary pillows. She was a good and faithful mamma, and so she did not laugh—out loud. She stooped over the half-hidden head and whispered, "Were you lonesome, dear?" and Paul whispered back "Kind of lonesome—and I heard something swallowing, very close to my head. And so I came in. And—you won't tell, will you, mamma?"

Faithful mamma didn't tell—not until long afterward when Paul had grown to be so old and so big that he went "truly camping" far away to the Rocky Mountains.

And what was the "swallowing" that Paul heard so close to his head? I think it must have been an imagined noise. Don't you?—St. Nicholas.

A "Pillow."

"How many children have you?" asked a gentleman of a friend whom he met after a parting of many years.

"Only one," he answered; "a pillow."

"A pillow?" inquiringly.

"Yes," smiling, a "pillow is something to rest on, is it not?"

"Certainly."

"Well, that is why I call my little daughter a pillow, she's so restful."

The gentleman soon reached the home of the father of the "pillow," and a lovely young girl of about sixteen years old was introduced as "my daughter, Emily." The visitor only remained one night, but by the time he left he had fully decided that his friend's young daughter merited the sobriquet given her. The smiling face with which she greeted her father and her father's friend won the latter's heart at once. In a gentle, quiet way, she brought the evening paper and laid it open at the page he always read first, on the table near her father. His slippers and dressing-gown were brought, too, and she was rewarded with a fond kiss and a whispered, "Thank you, dear." Later in the evening, when her father expressed a desire that she should sing something for his friend, she did not refuse, but did the best she could with a grace and sweetness indescribable. A little bell tinkled once, and Emily left the room hastily.

"My wife is sick this evening; she is a victim to nervous headache," explained the host. "I hardly know what she would do at such times if it were not for Emily; the child is a born nurse."

The hostess, free from her headache, but looking pale and weary, came down to breakfast next morning. She sat at her usual place—the head of the table—and poured out the coffee. But Emily was near at hand, and it was she who relieved her mother by putting the cream and sugar in the cups, and passing them. It was she, too, who dished the oatmeal in a neat and dainty way that was charming.

A pink-tinted rosebud, with a geranium leaf, lay at each of the three plates. The father lifted his to inhale the fragrance, smiling his thanks.

"Where is yours?" he asked.

"There were only three this morning," she replied brightly: "I shall have the next one."

After breakfast, as the guest lingered for a few moments in the sitting room waiting for his friend to accompany him down town, he heard Emily's voice say in a low tone of entreaty, "Now, mamma, go and lie down, please: I will help Bridget with the breakfast work so that she can get at her ironing, and do the dusting later; don't think of anything."

"But she must think of something," thought the guest. "she must think of the helpful little daughter who is such a joy and comfort that she is indeed a pillow—something to rest her heart on."—Children's Banner.

Ornamentation is in the highest sense of the word, a fine art. It can refine, elevate, putify. This being the case, those who ignore decoration cast aside a source of refinement, and deprive themselves of what may induce their elevation in virtue and morals.

Household.

GLORIFY THE HOUSE.

Wide open throw the shutters, and
The curtains throw aside,
Let in the sun's bright messengers
In all their golden pride.
What matter if from rustly rug
They take the rainbow bloom?
They'll shower gems on it instead,
And glorify the room.

Glad are the tidings that they bring
From wood, and field, and hill,
From singing bird and humming bee,
And the little dancing rill.
Before them many shadows fly,
They banish thoughts of gloom;
Then, with a welcome, let them in
To glorify the room.

With them comes health—upon the weak
They many blessings shed,
Their kisses strengthen tired eyes,
And touch pale cheeks with red;
No place too dear for them to seek
Its darkness to illumine;
Thank God that we can let them in
To glorify the room.

The Dinner Hour.

There is a direct connection between the dinner hour and the march of civilization. In all new communities people dine at noon. They rise with the sun, break their fast as soon thereafter as possible, and at twelve o'clock are sharp set for another meal. As the general wealth increases, people indulge in evening amusements, and in consequence lie in bed until a later hour in the morning. The breakfast hour is moved along until eight or nine o'clock, and dinner is eaten at two or three P. M.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago three P. M. was the ultra-fashionable hour, but the dinner hour crept along later and later, until now it excites no surprise to hear of nine P. M. dinners, and on exceptional occasions as late as midnight.

This change has naturally made the breakfast hour as late as eleven A. M., and between the breakfast and dinner hours comes luncheon. The English, who are the heartiest feeders in the world, think nothing of getting away with breakfast, luncheon, tea (at five P. M.), dinner (at seven P. M.), and supper (at ten P. M.) How they manage to sleep after such a day's feeding is a mystery to Americans.

There are now some indications, however, that in London the present dinner will be called supper (as it really is), and dinner take the place of the present luncheon. Then, since Americans seem to be following London in dress, manners and customs, it is quite likely that we will see a return to the noon-time dinner.

It is quite time some reform was made in this custom, since we are rapidly approaching the state of affairs described by the countryman, who, upon his return from a city visit, said that they "breakfasted at noon, dined in the night, and supped the next day!"—Exchange.

How Celluloid Is Made.—Most celluloid is made in France, and this is the process of manufacture: A roll of paper is slowly unwound, and at the same time is saturated with a mixture of five parts of sulphuric acid, which falls upon the paper in a fine spray. This changes the cellulose of paper into pyroxyline (gun cotton). The excess of the acid having been expelled by pressure, the paper is washed with plenty of water until all traces of acid have been removed. It is then reduced to pulp and passes on to the bleaching trough. It is this gun cotton which gives it its explosive nature.

Most of the water having been got rid of by means of a strainer, the pulp is mixed with from twenty to forty per cent. of its weight of camphor, and the mixture thoroughly triturated under mill stones. The necessary coloring having been added in the form of powder, a second mixing and grinding follows. This pulp is spread out in thin slabs, which are squeezed in a hydraulic press until they are as dry as chips. Then they are rolled in heated rollers and come out in elastic sheets. They are from that point worked up into every conceivable form. You can get celluloid collars, cuffs, hairpins, shirt fronts, cravats, penholders, brushes and combs, inkstands, knife-handles, jewelry and everything else almost that you can imagine.—Detroit Free Press.

FUDGE—STOKELY M. FUDGE was born February 25, 1826, in Montgomery county, Ala., and came to Lafayette county, Miss., in 1884, and was married to Miss Asenath R. Bogard in 1847; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1848, and fell asleep in Jesus, April 11, 1888. Bro. Fudge was a very important member of the church during the last forty years of his life, for he filled nearly all the offices in the church during that time. A great deal of his time he was a steward, and a part of the time recording steward, and served as trustee, class leader, etc. Bro. Fudge was a good man and a faithful worker in the cause of his Master. He loved the church of God, and was a special friend to the ministers of the gospel. A good counselor, ready to give advice and assist the preacher in his work, and knew how to make them feel welcome when at his house. I am glad that I ever saw Bro. Fudge and heard him talk of his prospect of a home in heaven. It is a benediction to be with such a man. I visited him several times during his sickness. He was a great sufferer; but he bore his affliction patiently, ever looking to Jesus as his friend and Savior, and received great consolation from the precious promise of the Savior, and these words of the Apostle: "For our affliction worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," were very consoling to him.

He was a very affectionate husband and father, and good citizen. The family, church, and community sustained a great loss in the death of Bro. Fudge. But our loss was his eternal gain. His trials and sufferings are passed, and he is at rest. He has gone to reap that great reward which God has in reservation for all the finally faithful; where there is no more sorrow, sickness, pain, nor death, but an eternal felicity. May the good Lord, in whom he trusted, bless and save his family! May he be a father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow, until that reunion in the sweet by-and-by!

JONES—FRANCIS CARTER JONES, son of the Rev. Carter Jones, was born in Northampton county, N. C., January 7, 1821, and died at Oak Ridge, Warren county, Miss., August 27, 1888. He came to Vicksburg, in the summer of 1847, with his father's family. He resided for some time in Vicksburg; Warren county, then went to Louisiana; lived there until a few months before his death. He enlisted early in the Confederate army—in the calvary—and continued in it until the close of the war. A few months ago he returned to Warren county, Miss., to suffer and to die of cancer among his kindred and friends. My visits to him in his sick-room and by his bedside were very interesting to me. His mind naturally turned to the past; and from the past to the future. A man possessing a strong, clear mind, well read and informed upon nearly all subjects, at home in theology, as well as on the great questions of the day; giving me a history of his life, relating with considerable feeling and emotion how he had always been surrounded and followed by the strivings of the Spirit, what a blessing the ministry of the Word had been to him during his life. "Yet," he said; "is it not strange I am not a member of the church?" This seemed a great source of regret, that his life had not been more closely identified with the church of Christ. At his request he became a member. A few weeks afterward, conscious that he was growing worse, he sent for his pastor, and in childlike simplicity he talked of his soul's salvation. Desiring to receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, we administered it to him and the family. Bro. Jones was a great sufferer, and though his sufferings were great and prolonged, yet his patience and submission were remarkable. Thus there has passed away to his eternal rest one who was beloved and respected by all who knew him.

R. BRAILEY.

ODEN—Died at Carthage, Miss., September 9, 1888, MRS. NEEDIE ODEN, about twenty-six years old. Less than two years ago I was called upon to unite her in marriage to her now bereaved husband. I found her a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at this place, when I was appointed to this work. Our deceased sister was born and reared in this place and was well known and greatly esteemed by all the people of this community. But there was an inner circle of true and tried friends to whom she unbosomed herself, and to them her noble traits of character were made known. Into this charmed circle none were admitted but the true and good. She had a great aversion to shams and cheats, but an intuitive perception and high appreciation of the true and faithful. Such were drawn to her and held under the magic sway of her influence. Others may have surpassed her in the number of friends, but none ever had more loyal and faithful ones than had she. Added to her graces of person and charms of character were the graces of the spirit which made her a noble Christian woman. I visited her several times during her sickness and found her calm and trustful. A few hours before her death she told her friends she was dying, and that she was ready. May God bless the bereaved ones!

D. G. W. ELLIS.

KIRK—ISAIAH, infant son of Amos A. and Mrs. Emma F. Kirk, was born February 23, 1881, and died September 7, 1888, aged four years, six months, and fourteen days. Little Isaiah was unusually bright and intelligent in conversation, and always ready to perform any little errand or deed of kindness. He was the idol of his grandparents, the pride of his father, and the hope of his fond mother. To know him was to love him, was the experience of his friends and acquaintances. The writer attended him in his last illness and can testify to his patience and submission in affliction. He never murmured at his lot, only expressing a desire to get well so that he could run around. It was his delight to take his little sister to play, lead her gently by the hand, and do all in his power to protect, amuse and instruct her. His parents and grandparents are almost inconsolable in their misfortune, while friends and relatives miss his genial presence and sympathize with the bereaved parents. Too young to know sin, we can hope that his spirit has returned to God who gave it, and that his angel face beams brightly around the throne of him who doeth all things well.

B. B. PAINE, M. D.

CANTER—MRS. REBECCA P. CANTER, daughter of Rev. John Strahan, was born in Hancock county, Miss., October 18, 1812; was married to F. H. Canter in Orange county, Texas, August 4, 1850; was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Rev. Christian Keener, November 18, 1883, and departed this life at Sabine Station, July 11, 1888. She was an affectionate wife, an indulgent mother, an obliging neighbor and a devoted Christian. Sister Canter was found at two places—the house of God and the bedside of the afflicted, and was full of deeds of kindness to the distressed and needy. She leaves a husband, three daughters, five sons, five grandchildren and many friends to mourn her loss. May God bless and comfort them in their affliction!

STATEN IDA, little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Staten, of Cotton Valley, La., died September 7, 1888. Too pure for a world contaminated with sin, ere she reached far in her orbit of life, she was lost to us, in the eternal Sun that illuminates the immortal plains of heaven—was transplanted by one who said, "I am Life." While it seemed hard for papa and mamma to leave to give up their little treasure, yet when this shadow of life shall have passed away, she will meet them in the clouds when Jesus comes.

HATTIE C.

HARRIS—At a meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of Oak Ridge, Warren county, Miss., held September 19, 1888, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, God, in his all-wise providence, has taken from us our young friend and sister, Miss ANNETT HARRIS, who was a member of Oak Ridge Methodist Church, also of our Woman's Missionary Society. Sister Annett Harris was just entering into young womanhood. She was kind, amiable and intelligent, possessing those traits of character that drew around her a large circle of friends. That her life and character were appreciated was evident from the large number that attended her funeral. But we have this consolation: that she has gone home to her reward.

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved sister, Oak Ridge Woman's Missionary Society has lost a useful member.

Resolved, That while we are sad over our loss, we submit to this stroke of bereavement, believing that it came from the hands of our heavenly Father.

Resolved, That we tender to the parents, relatives and friends of our deceased sister our heartfelt sympathy and united prayers.

MRS. E. BRAILEY, for Com.

One of the most desirable things in the Christian life is an agreeable temper. That royal touchstone, which men call disposition, needs to be ever in order to get the best benefits of religion. We are too apt to get off our base, and borrow trouble at a large rate of interest, or fret and worry about difficulties real or imaginary. No doubt the beauty of the Christian life is sadly marred by the disposition to fret. There was one lesson that the apostle Paul had mastered that it would be well for us to learn. He says, "I am learned in whatever state I am therewith to be content." This is, to a great degree, the secret of his mighty faith, and it is a secret we shall do well to learn.—Christian Secretary.

From the Herald of Faith, St. Louis Mo., August 10, 1887;

Referring to Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, the business manager of the Herald of Faith, would say, that he gave this medicine a personal trial, and was speedily cured of an inveterate Intermittent Fever. He then recommended it to F. J. Tiefenbrunn, 1915 Papin street, and to Police Officer Meidenger, at the Union Depot, both of whom were cured by it of chills and fever of several years' standing. Recently his wife, after a fever of several days' duration, took a single dose and was perfectly cured. In view of these remarkable cures, and remembering how much money is spent for quinine, so little to be depended upon, and often so injurious, we can only wish that Shallenberger's Antidote would come into general use.

The Number of the Stars.

The total number of stars one can see will depend very largely upon the clearness of the atmosphere and the keenness of the eye. There are in the whole celestial sphere about 6,000 stars visible to an ordinarily good eye. Of these, however, we can never see more than a fraction at any one time, because half of the sphere is always below the horizon. If we could see a star in the horizon as easily as in the zenith, a half of the whole number, or 3,000, would be visible on any clear night. But stars near the horizon are seen through so great a thickness of atmosphere as greatly to obscure their light, and only the brightest ones can there be seen. As a result of this obscuration, it is not likely that more than 2,000 stars can ever be taken in at a single view by an ordinary eye. About 2,000 other stars are so near the South Pole that they never rise in our latitudes. Hence, out of 6,000 supposed to be visible, only 4,000 ever come within the range of our vision, unless we make a journey toward the equator.

As telescopic power is increased, we still find stars of fainter and fainter light. But the number can not go on increasing forever in the same ratio as with the brighter magnitudes, because, if it did, the whole sky would be a blaze of starlight. If telescopes with powers far exceeding our present ones were made, they would, no doubt, show stars of the twentieth and twenty-first, etc., magnitudes. But it is highly probable that the number of such successive orders of stars would not increase in the same ratio as is observed in the eighth, ninth and tenth magnitudes, for example. The enormous labor of estimating the number of stars of such classes will long prevent the accumulation of statistics on this question; but this much is certain, that in special regions of the sky, which have been searchingly examined by various telescopes of successively increasing apertures, the number of new stars found is by no means in proportion to the increased instrumental power. If this is found to be true elsewhere, the conclusion may be that, after all, the stellar system can be experimentally shown to be of finite extent and to contain only a finite number of stars. In the whole sky an eye of average power will see about 6,000 stars, as I have just said. With a telescope this number is greatly increased, and the most powerful telescopes of modern times will show more than 60,000,000 stars. Of this number, not one out of one hundred has ever been catalogued at all. * * * In all, 314,926 stars, from the first to the 9½ magnitudes, are contained in the northern sky; or about 600,000 in both hemispheres. All of these can be seen with a three-inch object glass.—The Century.

THE MAKING OF THE VIOLIN.—"Violins that are made as they should be," explained the dealer, "have fifty-eight different pieces. The wood of the belly, or sounding-board, should be of soft red fir, a kind only growing on the Tyrolese mountains. It is light and strong, and being of loose grain, gives free passage to the waves of sound. The trees are cut in the winter after the sap has ceased to flow, and the wood is thoroughly seasoned before called in for use. The older the wood the better. For the neck, back and sides Swiss sycamore is regarded the only proper wood. It answers to a different note than the fir, a fact that has been found necessary to the highest harmony. The violins are shaped by exact rule, but the slightest variation in any of the curves gives a difference of tone, so that no two instruments sound exactly alike."

Several violins of the same make, and, in all respects, apparently alike, were tested to demonstrate this. They were all tuned in fifths, the lowest giving what is technically known as middle G, this being the correct way to tune a violin, but under the bow there was a marked difference in the quality of tone.

"Did it ever occur to you," was asked the reporter, "that the strain put on a violin by the strings is something tremendous? When tuned to concert pitch the tension of each string is about eighty pounds, making 320 pounds for the four. Yet the thin shell, so frail that a babe could splinter it, will resist that strain for centuries. Of course, the body is strengthened by little strips glued inside at different points; but it seems none the less marvelous to me."—Globe-Democrat.

Christianity Our Protection.

In this country there is no such thing as organic union of Church and State, and yet the relations between our civil and religious institutions are such that they are most intimately connected with and dependent upon each other. We have no State Church, yet the State does very properly use its authority to afford to each citizen the enjoyment of perfect freedom of conscience.

This close relation between these institutions renders it absolutely necessary that we shall see to it that the unrighteous example of California, in blotting all Sunday laws from its statute-book, be not followed by any others of the States or by the national government. Our moral sense, as well as our desire for full civil and religious freedom, makes us watchful in this direction. There are influences at work among us, influences the power of which is being daily augmented, the effect of which will be, sooner or later, to precipitate a struggle upon this question. The Christian Church can not afford, therefore, to allow an active enemy to lay trains and set mines and build defenses for himself all about it, while it awaits in a fatal repose the day of outbreak. Such delay is criminal in every way. There must be an activity in meeting the enemies of public morality which will, at least, give an equal footing and a fair field when the shock comes.

The Sabbath and the other various Christian elements in our republic are the conservators of our civil liberty, for the day of their destruction will be the day which will usher in a reign of lawlessness and riot. They are also the preservers of our religious freedom, for there stands waiting a powerful ecclesiastical machine which would welcome such a time of anarchy as affording it an opportunity to join hands once more with the enemies of morality in the work of crushing out liberty of conscience.

The Hebrews rebelled against God, and perished in the wilderness. Israel forgot him, and even his hiding-place is yet a mystery. France has lost her glory and her power because she abolished religion and closed the churches. We need not fondly hope to escape a like fate, if we sin against God, for his word is still in power: "And all the wicked shall be turned into hell; and the nations that forget God."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

MORNING BIBLE READING—The best time for Bible reading is in the morning. The mind and body are fresh after the repose of the night, and the highest powers of thought may be brought to bear upon the chapter selected. But, with most people, each recurring morning brings its own pressing tasks. Business cares, the daily toil, and the duties of the house are the first and most engrossing concerns. Some hours must pass, with many, before they can find time to sit down to any quiet reading. Let the plan be honestly tried by taking some words from God's book for the meditation of the morning. Make for the month a fair, steadfast trial of the plan of studying the Bible when your faculties are at mental highwater mark. You wonder at the familiarity of this or that friend with the Psalms, the Epistles, the Gospels. It has been gained a little at a time, by patient daily reading—thoughtful, prayerful reading, too, which was hived by the soul as something worth treasuring. We shall all gain immensurably in our influence as well as our comfort by giving more of our unwearied thought to the holy Book. A few tired, sleepy, worn-out moments at nights, and those only, are almost an insult to the Master whom you profess to serve.

Consumption, Wasting Diseases
And General Debility. Doctors disagree as to the relative value of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites: the one supplying strength and flesh, the other giving nerve power, and acting as a tonic in the digestive and entire system. But in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites the two are combined, and the effect is wonderful. Thousands who have derived no permanent benefit from other preparations have been cured by this. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable and is easily digested by those who cannot tolerate plain Cod Liver Oil.

Much of the glory and sublimity of truth is connected with its mystery. To understand everything, we must be as God.—Tyron Edwards.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The majority and minority reports on the Senate Tariff Bill were presented on October 4.

The river pilots from Pittsburg to New Orleans have organized Knights of Labor assemblies and will insist upon a uniform scale of wages. If refused, they will strike.

The North Georgia and Alabama mineral industrial exposition was opened by Gov. Gordon, on the fourth instant, and despite a quarantine at points in the South was attended by 10,000 persons. It will continue to October 13.

B. C. Elliott was nominated for Congress by the Democratic Convention of the Second Congressional District, on October 4.

Mayor Hewitt was renominated by the citizens of New York on October 4.

Judge R. H. Marr, of the criminal district court, of this city, on the sixth instant, specially charged the grand jury in reference to the observance of the Sunday Law. Restaurants are forbidden to sell alcoholic liquors on Sunday, except wine for table use, and confectioneries must be closed. The law is applicable to bar-rooms attached to theatres.

Recorder Trotter, a colored official in Washington, says there is a decided movement for a division of the negro vote, and that 200,000 or 300,000 will vote for Cleveland. The movement, he says, is chiefly among young men who perceive the present needs of the race, and think a division will do much to break down race prejudices, etc.

The Cincinnati and St. Louis express, which left the Baltimore and Ohio station, in Washington, last Saturday night, collided with an eastbound train from Martinsburg, W. Va., near Dickerson, killing three trainmen and injuring six others. By almost a miracle the passengers all escaped uninjured.

Over 100 people injured is the record of an accident which took place, on the seventh instant, during the ceremonies attending the laying of the corner-stone of the new St. Mary's Catholic Church in Reading, Pa. A temporary floor was laid on the joists and walls of the edifice, which had been carried up one story. The walls gave way and one-fourth of the floor fell with an awful crash, precipitating 200 people to the ground a distance of from fifteen to eighteen feet.

Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of United States Supreme Court, was sworn in and took his seat, on the eighth instant.

FOREIGN.

Emperor William was warmly welcomed at Vienna. The Emperor Francis Joseph, attired in a Prussian uniform and wearing the decoration of the Prussian order of the Black Eagle, received him at the railway station.

Extensive floods in the region between the Alps and the Jura Mountains have done much damage to property and rendered many families homeless.

The rains in Mexico have completely ceased. The losses throughout the country by cyclone and floods exceeds $3,000,000.

Prince Luitpold has ordered the adoption in the Bavarian army of the new German infantry regulations. This is considered a compliment to the Emperor William.

South German newspapers report that the German police have been warned of an anarchist plot against Emperor William, and that the plans for his journey, have been altered in consequence.

A number of French royalist ladies have formed themselves into an association under the name of "The Rose of France Society." The Countess of Paris is president of the organization, which is modeled after the Primrose League of Great Britain.

The Emperor William's reception at Vienna has sent a thrill of gratification throughout the German Empire. Apart from the popular demonstrations, the enthusiasm shown and the scenes at the banquet given to his majesty, the visit has been of immense value in displaying the Emperor's latent qualities.

Herr Von Schloezer, German ambassador at the Vatican, instructed by Count Herbert Bismarck, assented to every formality suggested by Cardinal Rampolla, papal secretary of state.

Mr. John Dillon has written a letter on the Irish land question, in which he says: "Recent events add new courage to the evictors and rack renters, who last spring were utterly beaten, but who now seem to be inspired with new hopes."

Gen. Boulanger, in an interview, in Paris, on October 7, admitted that when Minister of War he advocated measures against foreigners from a military point of view, but the present government, he declared, acted most clumsily in issuing such a decree upon the eve of the exhibition of 1889.

Six thousand persons attended a meeting, on October 8, on Lord Dufferin's estate, near Castelrea, county Roscommon, where 1,100 eviction notices were recently served.

The International Bank of Berlin has been founded with a capital of $5,000,000.

The promoters of the Emin relief expedition, in Berlin, decline to abandon the enterprise. Herr Peters hopes to get 1,000,000 marks subscribed after the meeting of the Reichstag.

A biography of the late Emperor Frederick of Germany will be published in London shortly. It will relate solely to his domestic life.

Prevent Attacks of Fever.

We ask but a glance at this, and it will pay any sufferer from liver complaint, enlarged spleen or ague cake, bilious affections of any kind, deranged secretions, prostration from dissipation, constipation, dropsy, or any affections where liver, bowels, blood and stomach are involved. A guaranteed cure for all this class of diseases is offered in J. & C. Maguire's Ouradurango. Doctors are astonished and invalids delighted.

ROBERT HANDLY, P. E.

We are willing to bear personal testimony to the efficacy and value of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which we have been advertising some years in our paper, having used it for blood impurities with great success. It is a preparation of standard merit, made of perfectly pure ingredients, and thoroughly effective in cleansing and purifying the system. For eruptions, boils, etc., it can be relied upon every time. Our own experience with it has been most gratifying, and we are glad to give it this endorsement.—Athol (Mass.) Transcript.

HOME TO-NIGHT.

Home to-night, yes, home to-night,
Through the pearly gate and the open door!
Our happy feet on the golden street
Are entering now to "go out no more."
For the work is done and the rest begun,
And the training-time is forever past.
In the home of rest in the mansions blest,
Is safely, joyously reached at last.
The love and light in that home to-night!
O the songs of bliss and the harps of gold!
The glory shed on the new-crowned head!
O the telling of love that can never be told!
The welcome that waits at the shining gates
For those who are following far, yet near;
Then all shall meet at his glorious feet
In the light and love of his home so dear!
Yes, "home-to-night!"

In Memoriam.

REV. JOHN GRIFFING JONES.

The funeral services of the venerable and reverend John Griffing Jones took place in Port Gibson on October 3. The stores and places of business in the city were closed, and the church thronged with people eager to show some evidence of homage to the occasion and memory of one whom they had long known and loved as a citizen in their midst.

Receiving the remains at the entrance, the Rev. Mr. Monnger, pastor, read the appointed service. Then followed, as a voluntary, in pathetic and touching strains, the beautiful hymn: "It is well! It is well with my soul!" The pastor then read, and the choir sang, the 681st hymn, "How blest the righteous when he dies." Prayer was then offered by the Rev. Dr. Hunnicutt. The first Scripture lesson, Psalm xc, appointed by the church to be used on such occasions, was read by Rev. D. A. Planck, of the Presbyterian Church, followed by the pastor, who read the second lesson from I Corinthians xv. Rev. Mr. Nicholson then read and the choir rendered, with intense effect, that almost matchless hymn, "Servant of God, well done!" and he then addressed the audience. He having ministered to the deceased, and been with him in his last hours, gave a most edifying account of the occasion. The pastor from Vicksburg, Rev. R. J. Jones, then made an address, which was followed by addresses by Rev. Dr. Marshall and Dr. Hunnicutt, which are given below. The choir then sang that beautiful and appropriate hymn:

"I would not live alway;
I ask not to stay."

The great majority of hearers then followed the remains to the grave, where the last services of the ritual were read by Rev. J. T. Nicholson. The Masons who were in attendance then proceeded with their solemn ceremonies, and all turned sadly toward their homes as the stars began to twinkle, as celestial sentinels, over the new-made bed of the sleeping patriarch.

REMARKS BY REV. J. T. NICHOLSON.

Friends and Brethren: Were it not that I have been the pastor of the church to which our honored brother belonged, and the intimate association with him it has been my privilege to enjoy, I would remain silent, and leave to these brethren, his older friends and associates, to say what may be deemed proper at this time to perpetuate his memory.

The Rev. J. G. Jones was a good and true man; and, while we pay a passing tribute to his remains, we look far more to the noble character he sustained, and that is a lasting blessing. Having for many years been a citizen of this place, you knew him well, and loved him much. You will, therefore, doubtless be pleased to learn something of the manner of the closing of his long career. For the last three years, while I have held intimate relations with him, it has been quite apparent that Father Jones was constantly ripening for the home above, and on all sides, and among all his kindred and neighbors, this seemed the prevailing sentiment concerning him. At the opening of the year he had a spell of severe sickness, which seemed well-nigh fatal. But Providence added a few more months to his days, to bless his family and serve the church. About a week ago I received a notice of his sudden and serious illness. I found him very sick, but strong in faith, glorifying God and rejoicing in the witnessing and sustaining power of the Holy Spirit. He spoke, with a smile of triumph, about his approaching change, and was lucid and calm. He said: "I have no preparations to make now. Satan has never had a single day of my life from early manhood. When but a boy I laid my life upon the altar of God, and, by his grace, have kept it there ever since." As he close these observations he became inexpressibly happy, saying, "Glory to God! glory to God!" Among his last words he said: "All is bright; my way is clear!" On the night of October 1, at twenty minutes past eleven o'clock, surrounded by his devoted sons and daughters, he fell asleep in Jesus.

A funeral service was held at the church in Hazlehurst, where a great concourse collected to weep and pray, and take leave of his mortal remains. Eleven ministers of the gospel of various denominations were present, several of whom assisted in the solemnities. The scene and impressive services all attested the profound love and attachment the people among whom he had long lived felt for him. At his request his remains have been brought here to be laid by the side of one of the best of wives and most devoted of mothers. He sent to you, friends of the masonic brotherhood, a message of tender regard. He said he had often prayed for you all, and hoped you would meet him in heaven.

The name of Rev. J. G. Jones will long be honored and his memory loved by the church which has been so greatly blessed by his useful and laborious life—a life that reaches over nearly all of the century just passing away.

For sixty-four years he was a preacher of the gospel. He was the oldest member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, and probably the oldest clergyman in the State. He was an earnest, practical and most scriptural preacher, and eminently successful in doing the work of his divine Master, and "being dead, yet speaketh." Who can measure the extent of his influence for good? And that influence will live on in the church as a glorious power for the salvation of souls and the glory of God to the end of ages. God be praised for giving us such a man! Amen!

REMARKS MADE BY REV. R. J. JONES, PASTOR OF THE CHURCH AT VICKSBURG.

Dear Brethren: We pause to-day on our march to the grave, and turn aside to the sanctuary of God, to reflect and to consider what God is saying to us by this solemn dispensation of his providence. It is well to do so. Perhaps God does not often speak to us more distinctly and with a voice fuller of meaning than when he speaks by the voice of death. Then he speaks to us of the worth of life, the importance of improving its moments and opportunities, and the eternal issues which grow out of it. It is well for us to hear when God thus speaks, to consider when he thus teaches, to reflect and take heed when he thus warns.

A great and good man has been taken from us, and we come to bury him and consider the lessons of his life and death.

Father Jones was well known to this whole community. He was closely connected and intimately identified with the history and interests of the State and Church for threescore years. He appeared often before the public eye and filled a large measure in public estimation. We all know how he lived, and we have just heard how he died. His life was a successful one. Reaching over more than fourscore years, it was a long one, and it was all devoted to God and consecrated to the good of man. He has left his impress upon the country and the church. His influence is felt by his generation, and will continue to live and work for the good of humanity and the glory of God. His death was a peaceful, triumphant and grand one, such as all good men die.

The secret of this grand, successful life and this triumphant death will be found in the peculiar Christian experience and character of Father Jones. That experience was clear, distinct, well-defined and thorough, producing a character decided, strong, broad and abiding. There was thorough and deep conviction for sin, piercing to the depth of the heart, and stirring the emotions and feelings of the soul. This conviction produced a godly sorrow that wrought a repentance that needed not to be repented of.

His faith took hold upon Christ as a risen, living Savior; his heart trusted him as One mighty to save. To that faith God revealed his Son. Under this revelation there was a satisfying knowledge that his sins were forgiven, and an experience of regeneration by the Spirit of God. This was all a matter of the deepest, profoundest experience. It was no dream, no supposition, no imagination, but a living reality, the deepest experience of the soul. Thus there was deep digging, and the foundation of a Christian life and character was laid upon the rock.

He also believed in the witness of the Spirit: that the Spirit of God bears direct testimony with the spirit of the Christian that he is a child of God. Believing that it was his privilege to enjoy this blessing, he was not satisfied without it. He sought and obtained it, and it was his endeavor so to live, as to retain it day after day. Living thus, he could say in his last hours: "Thank God, I have never given a day of my manhood to the service of the devil."

He believed in Christian perfection. He "expected to be made perfect in this life." He groaned after it. He obtained this blessing to his own satisfaction and great peace of soul. He believed there was rest, perfect rest, for the believer in Christ. He sought and found this rest to the comfort and joy of his heart.

This clear, distinct and satisfactory Christian experience was the inspiration and controlling influence of his whole life. This characterized his preaching, which consisted of a clear scriptural statement and explanation of those great doctrines; and from the depth of his own experience urging them upon the faith and obedience of men. This experience was the secret of his warm, untiring devotion to Christ and his cause. He knew in whom he believed. To him Christianity was a great reality, the success of the church important, the salvation of sinners paramount. This experience gave him before the world a Christian character, strong, solid, well-founded, and made him the source of a living, positive influence the world was made to feel.

Such an experience, such a life, such a character prepared him for a triumphant death. After such a long, eventful life, called upon to die, he could, with Paul, say: "I am now ready to be offered;" "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day."

ADDRESS BY DR. C. K. MARSHALL.

Friends and Brethren: The Rev. John Griffing Jones departed this life on October 1, 1888, at the residence of his son-in-law, at Hazlehurst. In obedience to his request, his remains have been brought to this city, to be laid by the grave of his beloved wife who had passed away but a few years previous to his death. And this assembly has been summoned to this sacred place to consider the life and the death of a true man, a pure Christian, and a remarkable minister of the church and the gospel of Christ. We have been fellow-laborers in this holy work for largely over half a century. He was some few years before me. But he was the companion of my early manhood, the associate of my riper years, and the cherished friend of my maturer life. He has filled with usefulness a life of more than four-score and four years. He did not die of disease. It may be said, as one said of the blessed Lord, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." He was looking for the messenger. The earthly house of this tabernacle was dissolved. The foundations were gone. He was worn out. It was a blessed privilege to die. To him it was a long-expected and a desirable event. He longed to depart and be with Christ. He said "he longed to see the Lord."

And, my brethren, it is a blessed thing that death reigns. To deplore death is the height of unwisdom. We should esteem death one of our best and truest friends. Only by death do we live; only through death are we saved; only through it can we enter the eternal kingdom. What sin had made a most fearful curse the risen Savior converted into a divine blessing. The good and the bad die alike. Death reigns supreme. I am glad it is so. I am glad that bad men die. I am glad that good men can die. An eternal life, like the present life, surrounded by the evils, the calamities, the crimes and the godless of the world at large, would be unutterably fearful. No, death is our friend. I am glad our departed friend, your father and pastor, is at rest. I come not to weep. The dear ones of his household where he was idolized must weep. Your tears are generous, and your grief is just; but not one of you would now call your sainted father from the skies. But a little time has passed since the blessed wife and mother took leave of you; and now they are united again

"Where all the ship's company meet,
Who sail'd with the Master beneath."

Think of the compassion and assurance of those words of the adorable Redeemer, when to his disconsolate disciples he said, "In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you."

I said I was glad that the wicked die. It is in some sense the salvation of the world. Persistent wickedness is legally entitled to the harvest of its treacherous sowing. Think of an Alexander; a Tamerlane; a Gengis-Khan; a Nero; or a Napoleon burning with insatiable ambition to grasp the throne of universal empire and make the world a wilderness and destroy its cities, or drag nation after nation into serfdom, slavery and slaughter-pens, and then say if Death—their master—be not a boon, and the grave, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest," is not a desirable bed for weary ones. Death is a blessing to survivors, as it dismantles the hidden man, and discloses the affluence of his worth, and stamps with eternal approbation the forces that make for righteousness. The pent-up virtues of the good and wise flow in refreshing streams over the souls of the rising generation, and we may freely eulogize those excellencies of which in their living days we could not speak. They thus inspire a worthy ambition, provoke emulation, encourage the halting, uplift the heavy-laden and fill our hearts with gratitude and affection.

But, alas! for human frailty; the precious nard of the alabaster box with its grateful perfume, instead of being helpfully applied to the throbbing temples in life's sad and weary conflict, is too often broken on the moss-grown headstone of a neglected grave long after the weary sojourner has passed beyond the reach of its posthumous fragrance. Death is a cherished friend of the aged, the exile, the undervalued, the incomprehensible, the broken-hearted, and the Christian.

"I would not live alway: I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
The few lurid mornings that dawn on us here
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer."
